Firſt, Saul went by night to Endor, and in all probability it was late before he arrived there, becauſe he travelled in the dark, in order to paſs undiſcovered by the Philiſtine army. We may add too, that this could not be in the winter ſeaſon (when nights are long) becauſe the two armies had been for ſome time in the field. Secondly, His converſation with the Sorcereſs, and her practiſe of the incantations in conſequence thereof, muſt have taken up a very conſiderable time, and very probably, all the remainder of that night. It might therefore be very early in the morning before Samuel appeared, and denounced the doom of Saul and his ſons. When he therefore ſaid to the king, To-morrow ſhalt thou and thy ſons be with me, he muſt mean the morrow after the morning in which he uttered that prediction. This account of the affair entirely deſtroys the objection; for Saul had all that day and the following night to return to his camp, and prepare for the battle, which was fought the next day. This prediction therefore of Samuel was exactly verified by the event, and there is no reaſon to ſuppoſe the devil was its anthor.

Upon the whole, then we think, with the far greater number of authors, ancient and modern, that it was really Samuel who appeared to the woman, and foretold Sauls death, with the defeat of Iſrael. This appears likewiſe to have been the opinion of the ancient Jews, from what we read in the xlvi chapter of Eccleſiaſticus, ver. 20. where it is ſaid, that "After his death he (Samuel) pro-" pheſied, and ſhewed the king his end, and lift up his " voice from the earth to prophecy."

As it is perfectly abſurd to ſuppoſe, that the devil has ſo much power over the ſouls of the dead, eſpecially of the Saints, as to make them appear at the deſire of any Magician or Sorcereſs; we therefore think it moſt rational to conclude, that God cauſed Samuel to appear to Saul, to reprove him for his former crimes, and for this laſt ſin in particular, of reſorting to a witch for counſel and aſſiſtance, contrary to his expreſs commands; and to bring him thereby, if poſſible, to ſuch a ſenſe of his tranſgreſſions, as might prevent his making ſo deſperate an exit: And it is evident, that all this happened contrary to the woman's expectation, who could not be ignorant that it was above the power of her infernal art to evocate the ſouls of the bleſſed; and ſhe wanted only to impoſe one of her familiar ſpirits upon him, and to ſupply the reſt by policy. It is therefore not to be wondered at, that ſhe was ſtruck with ſuch a terrible conſternation, when, inſtead of one of her own imps, ſhe beheld the real apparition of that awful prophet.

Perhaps it will be here objected, that it is very improbable that God, who had refuſed to anſwer Saul, either by Urim, or by prophets, ſhould now do it, at leaſt ſeemingly, by the miniſtration of a wicked woman. But here it muſt be obſerved, 1. That the Sacred Text does not imply, that the Lord refuſed to anſwer him by Urim, or by prophets; but that Saul had not the means of conſulting them: For how could he conſult by Urim, when the high prieſt was with David? 2. Were it true, that God had refuſed to anſwer him in the ordinary ways of Urim, and the like, yet we cannot infer from thence, that he might not do it in a more extraordinary manner, in order to make the greater impreſſion on Saul, who had been too regardleſs of God's commands, when communicated to him by the prophet, in former times. He might likewiſe be ſuffered to ſeek for counſel from a witch, in order to make him ſenſible into what a degree of impiety he had brought himſelf: So that God's ſending Samuel to reprove him for it, was a ſignal method of diſcountenancing ſuch a wicked and forbidden practice.

If we have not removed all the difficulties that may be raiſed againſt the opinion we have here advanced, we think we have ſhewn at leaſt, that it is attended with fewer and leſs than thoſe we have endeavoured to refute. For this reaſon we ſhall carry our enquiry no farther, but conclude with obſerving, that ſuch remarkable events, as the death of Saul and his two ſons, together with the total defeat of the Iſraelitiſh army, could not be foretold ſo poſitively, and in ſuch expreſs terms, either by a juggling woman, or by the devil, or indeed by any but an omniſcient Power.

Ver. 20. Then Saul fell ſtraitway all along on the earth, and was ſore afraid, becauſe of the words of Samuel, &c.] The dreadful prediction of the prophet ſo terrified this unhappy king, who had eaten nothing all that night and the preceding day, that he fainted away, and fell flat on the ground, where he remained ſpeechleſs for a conſiderable time. His men at length came and raiſed him up, and the woman intreated him in the humbleſt terms, to take ſome ſuſtenance before his departure from thence; and this he conſented to after a long importunity. She then went and dreſſed a fatted calf, and ſet it before the king and his ſervants, and aſſoon as they had refreſhed themſelves, they roſe up, and returned to the camp of Iſrael.

CHAP. XXIX.

1 David marching with the Philiſtines, 3 Is diſallowed by their princes. 6 Achiſh diſmiſſeth him with commendations of his fidelity.

NOW the Philiſtines gathered together all their armies to Aphek: and the Iſraelites pitched by a fountain which is in Jezreel.

2 And the lords of the Philiſtines paſſed on by hundreds, and by thouſands: but David and his men paſſed on in the rere-ward with Achiſh.

3 Then ſaid the princes of the Philiſtines, What do theſe Hebrews here? And Achiſh ſaid unto the princes of the Philiſtines, Is not this David the ſervant of Saul the king of of Israel, which hath been with me these days or these years, and I have found no fault in him since he fell unto me, unto this day?

4 And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him, and the princes of the Philistines said unto him, Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men?

5 Is not this David, of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

6 ¶ Then Achish called David, and said unto him, Surely, as the LORD liveth, thou hast been upright, and thy going out and thy coming in with me in the host, is good in my sight: for I have not found evil in thee, since the day of thy coming unto me unto this day: nevertheless, the lords favour thee not.

7 Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou displease not the lords of the Philistines.

8 ¶ And David said unto Achish, But what have I done? and what hast thou found in thy servant, so long as I have been with thee unto this day, that I may not go fight against the enemies of my lord the king?

9 And Achish answered and said to David, I know that thou art good in my sight as an angel of God: notwithstanding, the princes of the Philistines have said, He shall not go up with us to the battle.

10 Wherefore now rise up early in the morning, with thy masters servants that are come with thee: and assoon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.

11 So David and his men rose up early to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philistines; and the Philistines went up to Jezreel.

Ver. 1. Now the Philistines gathered together all their armies to Aphek.] There were three places of this name; one in the tribe of Judah, another in Manasseh, and a third in Ashur: Which last seems to be here meant, where the sons of Eli were slain. See iv. 1.

And the Israelites pitched by a fountain which is in Jezreel.] Jezreel was a valley which was overlook'd by the mountain Gilboa: From whence the Israelites came down (xxviii. 4) to draw up their army here.

Ver. 2. And the Lords of the Philistines passed on by hundreds, and by thousands.] When they took a view of their army, the great men appeared, some at the head of an hundred, some of a thousand soldiers.

——— But David and his men passed on in the rereward with Achish.] Who seems to have been the general of the army, and to have made David and his men his life-guard, according to his resolution, xxviii. 2.

Ver. 3. Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews here?] Who, they were afraid, would prove false to them, and take part with their own countrymen.

——— And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David the servant of Saul the king of Israel, which hath been with me these days or these years, and I have found no fault in him since he fell unto me, unto this day?] This intimates, that he looked on David as revolted from Saul; and, by the experience he had of his fidelity, he thought he might be still trusted.

Ver. 4. And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him, and the princes of the Philistines said unto him.] In an angry tone.

——— Make this fellow return, that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him.] At Ziklag, which they were contented he should possess.

——— And let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary to us.] And thereby do them more mischief than the army of the Israelites.

——— For wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men?] That is, of the Philistines. They reasoned wisely, according to the common practice of mankind; and well it was for David, that they were such Politicians: For hereby God delivered him out of a very great strait; either of being an enemy to his country, or false to his friends, and to his trust. And by the same good Providence he was sent back to rescue his wives, and the wives and children of his men, who were taken captive.

Ver. 5. Is not this David, of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?] They remembered that he was their old enemy, who killed Goliath, and was highly magnified and extolled for that action, above Saul himself.

Ver. 6. Then Achish called David, and said unto him, Surely, as the Lord liveth.] He swears by the God whom David worshipped, that his words might be credited the more; or perhaps he had learn'd something from David of the true God, though he worshipped others with him.

——— Thou hast been upright, and thy going out and thy coming in with me in the host, is good in my sight.] He commends him as an unblameable person in his private conversation, and as an excellent commander in his army.

——— For I have not found evil in thee, since the day of thy coming unto me unto this day.] A very honourable testimony from a foreign prince.

——— Nevertheless, the lords favour thee not.] Unto whom Achish was forced to yield: For he was not an absolute king; but the lords of the country still retained a great authority.

Ver. 7. Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou displease not the lords of the Philistines.] From the effects of whose envy and jealousy, he was not able to preserve him.

Ver. 8. And David said unto Achish, But what have I done? and what hast thou found in thy servant, so long as I have been with thee unto this day, that I may not go fight against the enemies of my lord the king?] Achish had told David before, that he found not the least fault in him: Therefore this question may seem to some impertinent: But David was to act his part handsomely, upon this occasion; so that tho' he was inwardly pleased, he would not have them suspect he was glad to be dismissed: And therefore, since the king was satisfied with his fidelity, he asks why he might not be trusted to fight against his enemies, and that his lords would give him a reason? But Abarbinel thinks he never intended this; but being chosen by Achish to be the keeper of his head, (xxviii. 2.) he resolved only to discharge this office, but not to join in the battle against Israel.

Ver. 9. And Achish answered and said to David, I know that thou art good in my sight as an angel of God.] He had learn'd something, as we observed before, ver. 6. of the the Hebrew religion, and (it appears by this) of their language alſo. And the meaning is, he looked upon David as a man ſent down from heaven to him; all things proſpering that he took in hand.

——— Notwithſtanding, the princes of the Philiſtines have ſaid, He ſhall not go up with us to the battle.] They ſeem to have made ſuch an order in council, which the king durſt not contradict.

Ver. 10. Wherefore now riſe up early in the morning.] Leſt any miſchief ſhould come to him, if he delayed his departure.

——— With thy maſter's ſervants that are come with thee.] This intimates, that the lords of the Philiſtines would not truſt them, becauſe they looked on them ſtill as Saul's ſubjects.

——— And aſſoon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.] He adviſes them to loſe no time, but aſſoon as they could ſee their way, to leave the army, and to march to Ziklag.

Ver. 11. So David and his men roſe up early to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philiſtines.] For now they were in the Philiſtines camp, in the land of Iſrael, at Aphek, ver. 1.

——— And the Philiſtines went up to Jezreel.] To engage the Iſraelites who were pitched there, ver. 1.

CHAP. XXX.

1 The Amalekites ſpoil Ziklag. 4 David asking counſel, is encouraged by God to purſue them. 11 By the means of a revived Egyptian, he is brought to the enemies, and recovereth all the ſpoil. 22 Davids law to divide the ſpoil equally between them that fight, and them that keep the ſtuff. 26 He ſendeth preſents to his friends.

AND it came to paſs when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, that the Amalekites had invaded the ſouth and Ziklag, and ſmitten Ziklag, and burnt it with fire:

2 And had taken the women captives, that were therein; they ſlew not any, either great or ſmall, but carried them away, and went on their way.

3 ¶ So David and his men came to the city, and behold, it was burnt with fire, and their wives, and their ſons, and their daughters were taken captives.

4 Then David and the people that were with him, lift up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

5 And Davids two wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

6 And David was greatly diſtreſſed; for the people ſpake of ſtoning him, becauſe the ſoul of all the people was grieved, every man for his ſons, and for his daughters: but David encouraged himſelf in the LORD his God.

7 And David ſaid to Abiathar the prieſt Ahimelechs ſon, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod: and Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

8 And David enquired at the LORD, ſaying, Shall I purſue after this troop? ſhall I overtake them? And he anſwered him, Purſue; for thou ſhalt ſurely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

9 So David went, he and the ſix hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Beſor, where thoſe that were left behind, ſtayed.

10 But David purſued, he and four hundred men: (for two hundred abode behind, which were ſo faint, that they could not go over the brook Beſor.)

11 ¶ And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he did eat, and they made him drink water.

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs, and two cluſters of raiſins: and when he had eaten, his ſpirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, three days and three nights.

13 And David ſaid unto him, To whom belongeſt thou? and whence art thou? And he ſaid, I am a young man of Egypt, ſervant to an Amalekite, and my maſter left me, becauſe three days agone I fell ſick.

14 We made an invaſion upon the ſouth of the Cherethites, and upon the coaſt which belongeth to Judah, and upon the ſouth of Caleb, and we burnt Ziklag with fire.

15 And David ſaid to him, Canſt thou bring me down to this company? And he ſaid, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my maſter, and I will bring thee down to this company.

16 ¶ And when he had brought him down, behold, they were ſpread abroad upon all the earth, eating and drinking, and dancing, becauſe of all the great ſpoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philiſtines, and out of the land of Judah.

17 And David ſmote them from the twilight, even unto the evening of the next day: and there eſcaped not a man of them, ſave four hundred young men which rode upon camels, and fled.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David reſcued his two wives.

19 And there was nothing lacking to them, neither ſmall nor great, neither ſons nor daughters, neither ſpoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them: David recovered all.

20 And

20 And David took all the flocks and the herds: which they drave before those other cattle, and said, This is Davids spoil.

21 ¶ And David came to the two hundred men, which were so faint that they could not follow David, whom they had made also to abide at the brook Besor: and they went forth to meet David, and to meet the people that were with him; and when David came near to the people, he saluted them.

22 Then answered all the wicked men, and men of Belial, of those that went with David, and said, Because they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

23 Then said David, Ye shall not do so, my brethren, with that which the LORD hath given us, who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us, into our hand.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff: they shall part alike.

25 And it was so from that day forward, that he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel unto this day.

26 ¶ And when David came to Ziklag, he sent of the spoil unto the elders of Judah, even to his friends, (saying, Behold, a present for you, of the spoil of the enemies of the LORD)

27 To them which were in Beth-el, and to them which were in south-Ramoth, and to them which were in Jattir,

28 And to them which were in Aroer, and to them which were in Siphmoth, and to them which were in Eshtemoa,

29 And to them which were in Rachal, and to them which were in the cities of the Jerahmeelites, and to them which were in the cities of the Kenites,

30 And to them which were in Hormah, and to them which were in Chor-ashan, and to them which were in Athach, 31 And to them which were in Hebron, and to all the places where David himself and his men were wont to haunt.

Ver. 1. And it came to pass when David and his men were come to Ziklag on the third day, that the Amalekites had invaded the south, and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burnt it with fire.] The Amalekites meditated revenge for the incursions of David and his men into their country, and for the slaughter he had made of their people. They therefore mustered up all their remains of strength, and marched to Ziklag, the abode of David, who happened then to be absent with his small party, so that the town was left destitute of defence, and they easily made themselves masters of that place, and laid it in ashes; but touched not the lives of any of the inhabitants, ver. 2. which, considering what they had suffered so lately from David, may seem to have been a great instance of humanity in them; but the merit of this is not allowed them by some commentators, who represent them as a poor covetous people, who intended to sell their captives into slavery, that they might make money of them: or perhaps might spare them, because they wanted servants for their own use. David had undoubtedly rendered them poor by his devastations, and reduced them to a very inconsiderable number, which, among other considerations, might induce them to spare the lives of the prisoners they had taken at Ziklag; but it is something extraordinary, that they did not express their resentment against David, by some severe treatment of his wives, or the other persons that peculiarly belonged to him, and if this forbearance was not the result of humanity, we should be glad to know the cause to which it may be more properly ascribed.

Ver. 3. So David and his men came to the city, and behold it was burnt with fire, &c.] This calamity befel David, when he seemed to be in the greatest security, having escaped the fury of Saul, and also the service of the Philistines against his own countrymen. But such is the state of this world, that we are often surprized with sudden and unexpected troubles, when we think our selves least obnoxious to them.

Ver. 4. Then David and the people that were with him, lift up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.] Till either the flow of sorrow was entirely exhausted, or till they were sunk into stupidity, by the consideration of the calamity they had sustained.

Ver. 6. And David was greatly distressed, for the people spake of stoning him, &c.] They considered him as the author of their miseries, by coming to Ziklag at first, and then by provoking the Amalekites to this cruelty, and lastly, by his forwardness in marching away with Achish, and leaving their wives and children unguarded against an enemy.

——— But David encouraged himself in the Lord his God.] He considered that the all-wise, and all-powerful Lord of the universe, was his God, by special promise, and true fatherly affection, as he had always shewn himself to be, in the whole course of his providential dispensations to him.

Ver. 7. And David said to Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the Ephod.] From these words Cunæus (lib. 1. de Rep. Heb. cap. 14.) concludes, that the kings of Israel might use the Ephod, as well as the high-priest; because David said, Bring me hither, &c. But this does not signify that he himself intended to use it, but only that he desired it might be used for him; according to what is said of Joshua, Numb. xxvii. 21. that he should stand before Eleazar the high-priest, who should enquire for him, &c.

——— And Abiathar brought thither the Ephod to David.] From these words the same Cunæus endeavours to vindicate the forementioned opinion, because it is not said, that Abiathar brought the Ephod le David, but el David. The former of which expressions, he thinks, might have signified, for his use; but the latter denotes, as he supposes, that it was for David to use himself. This he endeavours to confirm, from the high privilege which the king had above other men, of sitting in the house of God, &c. But this opinion has been confuted by the learned Braunius, (lib. 2. de Vest. Hebr. Sacerd. cap. 20. n. 32.) who well observes, as likewise doth Buxtorf, that in the preceding words, David says, bring the Ephod, li, that is, mea causa, or in meam gratiam, for my sake, or on my account.

Ver. 8. And David enquired of the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them?] He enquired by the ministration of Abiathar, and his manner of enquiry refutes the opinion of the Jews, that two questions were not to be asked at one time. For David still continues to ask two here, as he had before done at Keilah, tho' God, say they, had there set him right in his enquiry and taught him to conſult the Divine Oracle in another manner.

———And he anſwered him, purſue, for thou ſhalt ſurely overtake them, and without fail recover all.] God anſwers both queſtions at once, and tells him alſo, more than he asked; namely, that he ſhould regain all that had been loſt. The Divine Majeſty anſwered more ſlowly and gradually, chap. xxiii. 11. but he now anſwers ſpeedily and fully at once, becauſe the preſent buſineſs required more expedition. So infinitely gracious is our God, that he vouchafes to conſider the particular degree of our neceſſities, and accomodates his kind providence to them accordingly.

Ver. 9. So David went, he and the ſix hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Beſor.] David was ſo animated with the Divine Promiſe, that he immediately marched with his men as far as the brook Beſor, which falls into the Mediterranean ſea, between Gaza and Rhinocorura; or rather, between Rhinocorura and Egypt, according to St. Jerom. This is called the river of the wilderneſs, Amos vi. 14. and is unadviſedly taken by ſome for the river of Egypt, mentioned in ſome parts of Scripture, but which is a different ſtream.

When David arrived at this brook, two hundred of his men were obliged to remain there, as being incapable of continuing their march, ver. 10. Grief perhaps made them neglect to take neceſſary refreſhment before they ſet out.

Ver. 11. And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, &c.] David paſſed the brook with thoſe four hundred men, who were not ſo fatigued as their companions; and while they were in ſuſpence which way to proceed, ſome of his troops met an Egyptian, who was on the point of periſhing by hunger and thirſt, for he had neither ate nor drank for the ſpace of three days and as many nights; but when they had refreſhed him with food and drink, they brought him to David, who asked him from whence he came, and to whom he belonged? The poor man anſwered, that he was an Egyptian, and had been ſervant to an Amalekite, who left him in a deſtitute condition, becauſe he had been taken ſick three days ago, ver. 13. It was a barbarous act to leave him to periſh in that manner, when they had a ſufficient number of camels for the carriage of men, as well as of the ſpoils they had taken. But this inhumanity coſt them dear, for it occaſioned the loſs of their own lives. Such is the wonderful providence of the Moſt High, who governs all the deſires and thoughts, all the counſels and works, and whatever elſe is tranſacted among men.

Ver. 14. We made an invaſion upon the ſouth of the Cherethites.] The Egyptian proceeds to acquaint David with the particular expeditions that were lately made by the Amalekites. The firſt of which was againſt the Cherethites, who were the ſame with the Philiſtines. For the Arabians, as Bochart obſerves, called their country Keritha, and the Syrians Creth; and the inhabitants of it were ſtyled Crethi, or Crethim, by the Hebrews. And to put all out of doubt, the ſouth of the Cherethites, here mentioned, is in the ſixth verſe explained, the land of the Philiſtines.

———And upon the coaſt which belongeth to Judah.] Namely, the ſouth coaſt of that tribe.

———And upon the ſouth of Caleb.] This particular land is not mentioned in any other part of Scripture, but, in all probability, it was that ſouth part of Judah which was given to Caleb, and which was inherited by his poſterity, Joſh. xiv. 13.

———And we burnt Ziklag with fire.] This was the laſt of their expeditions.

Ver. 15. And David ſaid to him, Canſt thou bring me down to this company? And he ſaid, Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, nor deliver me into the hands of my maſter, and I will bring thee down to this company.] It was natural for David to ſuppoſe, that this Egyptian might be able to conduct him to ſome place where the Amalekites had halted, in order to refreſh themſelves after their victory. This the man promiſed to do, provided David would not, when he had enjoyed the benefit of his diſcovery, cauſe him to be ſlain, as a perſon not to be truſted, after betraying the army in which he had ſerved: And likewiſe would not deliver him up to his maſter, who perhaps had treated him like a ſlave.

David having diſſipated all ſcruples from the mind of this man, he then conducted the Iſraelites, with the utmoſt fidelity, to the place where the Amalekites were giving a looſe to their joy for their late victory, and the rich acquiſitions they had gained. Some of them were careleſly ſtretched on the earth, with their thoughts intent on nothing but feaſting, others were dancing, as it were in triumph for the revenge they had taken on their enemies. In a word, the whole army was entirely unprepared for the reception of an enemy.

Ver. 17. And David ſmote them from the twilight, even unto the evening of the next day.] While they were thus immerſed in riot, and thoughtleſs mirth, David and his men poured in upon them, at the break of day, and ſlaughtered their hoſt till the evening, which among the Jews was the beginning of the next day. In conſequence of which, they were all cut off, except four hundred young men, who rode upon camels, ver. 17. and who leaving all their companions and booty behind them, were burthened with nothing but the doleful tidings of ſo fatal an overthrow, after the great ſucceſs they had obtained in their attempt upon Ziklag.

David, by this ſignal victory, reſcued his two wives, together with all the reſt of the captives; and not only recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away, but likewiſe enriched his army with their flocks and herds, and other ſpoils. The cattle which had thus been taken from the defeated enemies, were drove by David's ſoldiers before thoſe cattle that had been taken from the people of Ziklag, and the general voice was, this is Davids ſpoil, ver. 20. Not that he challenged the whole to himſelf, but it was a declaration that he had acquired it by his valour and conduct.

David, after this glorious victory, marched back with his little army, and rejoined the two hundred men who had been conſtrained by their fatigue to halt at the brook Beſor. He then ſaluted them in an affectionate manner, and told them, as we may naturally ſuppoſe by what follows, that their inability to accompany him any farther in his expedition againſt the Amalekites, ſhould not deprive them of their ſhare in the ſpoils he had obtained. Upon which ſome avaricious and diſorderly perſons, whom the Sacred Text ſtyles men of Belial, oppoſed the generous declaration made by David, and ſaid, It was highly unreaſonable to allot any part of the booty to thoſe who had not ſhared the dangers of the battle.

Ver. 23. Then ſaid David.] Who ſtill preſerved his authority over the moſt wicked among them.

——— Yea ſhall not do ſo, my brethren.] He overrules their murmuring oppoſition, but thought fit to do it in a friendly manner, calling them brethren; not only as of the ſame nation and religion with himſelf, but likewiſe as his fellow ſoldiers.

——— With that which the Lord hath given us, who hath preſerved us, &c.] Which is as if he had ſaid, Since God has vouchſafed to be ſo good to us, we ought not to act unkindly by our brethren.

Ver. 24. For who will hearken unto you in this matter?] He was confident, that no perſon who had the leaſt regard to equity would be of their opinion.

—— But as his part is that goeth down to the battle, ſo ſhall his part be that tarrieth by the ſtuff: they ſhall part alike.] This was a very equitable and prudent determination; for thoſe who remained with the baggage, were expoſed to hazards as well as their brethren; and were likewiſe a body of reſerve to whom theſe might retreat, in caſe of an overthrow; and they were now in actual ſervice, in the ſtation wherein their general had placed them.

Polybius explains the order of dividing the ſpoils of war, ſome part of which was allotted to thoſe who remained in the camp; but the proportions were various in ſeveral places. In ſome a ſimple portion was given to a footman, a double to a centurion, and a treble to a horſeman. In other places they varied from this kind of diſtribution; but in what manner ſoever the diviſion was made, the commander in chief was allowed to take the beſt of the ſpoils to himſelf; as perhaps David now did, and then left the remainder to be equally divided among his men. The Talmudiſt ſay, that in after-times, the king had all the royal furniture that was found in the tent of the conquered prince, conſigned to him for his ſhare.

Ver.

Ver. 25. And it was so from that day forward, that he made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel, unto this day.] The equity of this law appears from hence; that by common consent these two hundred men were left behind, to look after their baggage; and they were part of the same body of men, linked together in the same common society; and were hindered by meer weariness from going to fight, which otherwise they would have done. And their will was accepted for the deed, and they were in the same common danger; for if the four hundred had been routed, their enemies would soon have cut them off.

This law may seem to have been ordained before by God himself in Numbers xxxi. which if it were, it may be thought strange that David did not alledge that law, to quiet the present contention. But is is evident, this was a very different case from that; for threescore thousand who staid at home, had no more among them, than the twelve thousand had who went to the battle, ver. 27 of that chapter; and what was then done was not ordained to be observed as a statute through all generations. This therefore was a new law, but perpetually continued to the time of the Maccabees; as appears from the second book of their history, chap. viii. ver. 28, 30. And Osiander observes, that it pleased the Romans to do the same, as Festus also tells us. See Josh. xxii. 8. But the most ancient custom among the Romans was (as Godescalcus Stewechius shews at large, upon Vegetius de Re Militari, lib. 2. cap. 7.) to burn part of the spoils as an offering to their Gods; and for the rest, sometimes the soldiers were permitted to keep what every man had got, to himself; and sometimes if the necessities of the common-wealth required, they were all brought to the Quæstor, to be put into the publick Treasury. Out of those which every man kept to himself, they were wont, when they came home, to have some of them upon the posts of the gates to their houses; which is was lawful to remove, when an House was sold to another man.

Ver. 26. And when David came to Ziklag, he sent of the spoil to the elders of Judah, even to his friends.] By this it seems plain, that he had reserved some part of the spoil to himself; out of which he made presents to his friends; some of which were of the best quality in the tribe of Judah.

——Saying behold a present for you, of the spoil of the enemies of the Lord.] In the Hebrew a blessing for you, &c. So he calls the present, because it was a token that he wished all prosperity to them, who had been kind to him in his banishment, and help'd to maintain and protect him, and whom he was desirous still to oblige, that they might more readily receive him, when he had a right to take possession of the kingdom.

Ver. 27. To them which were in Bethel.] This seems to have been the same place with that which is called Baalath, and Kirjath-baal, in the enumeration of the cities of Judah, Josh. xvi. 9, 60. and it was afterward consigned to the tribe of Simeon. It is placed between Azem, or Asemon, and Chasar-sual; and consequently advanced very far toward Arabia Petræa. There was probably a temple of Baal in this place, whose name the Israelites changed into Kirjath-jearim, which signifies, urbs sylvarum, a city of woods, because of the fine growths of trees with which it was shaded, and whereby it was rendered fit for idolatrous uses.

——And to them which were in South-Ramoth.] This was a place in the tribe of Simeon, Josh. xix. 8. and it was called Ramoth in the south, to distinguish it from Ramoth Gilead, which lay northward.

——And to them which were in Jattir.] This was a city in the mountainous part of the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 48. It was afterward given up to the Levites of Kohath's family, Josh. xxi. 14. Eusebius says, that Jattir, or Jether, or Jethira, is situated in the canton called Daroma, toward the city of Malatha, twenty miles from Eleutheropolis. It is probably the same as Ether, or Athar, which in the time of St. Jerom was a large town, in the southern part of Judah.

Ver. 28. And to them which were in Aroer.] This is supposed to have been a city in the tribe of Judah. Eusebius, and St. Jerom, speak of Aruir, twenty miles from Jerusalem, toward the north. There were other cities of this name, one in the tribe of Gad, and situated on the northern bank of the brook Arnon, at the extremity of the country which the Hebrews possessed beyond Jordan. Reland thinks there was a city of this name near Rabbah of the Ammonites. The word Aroer, signifies heath, and it is probable that several places in Judæa may have taken their name from it, understood in that signification.

——And to them which were in Siphmoth, and to them which were in Eshtemoa.] The exact situation of the former of these places is not known, but it was probably in the tribe of Judah. Eshtemoa, or Eshtemoth, was a city in the southern part of Judah. Eusebius says, it was a large town in the canton of Eleutheropolis. A cession was made of it to the priests, to be an habitation for them, 1 Ch. vi. 58.

Ver. 29. And to them which were in Rachal.] This likewise was a city in the southern part of Judah.

——And to them which were in the cities of the Jerahmeelites.] Jerahmeel was a canton in the portion of Judah, toward the south of this tribe; and it was possessed by the descendants of Jerahmeel, the son of Hezron.

——And to them which were in the cities of the Kenites.] The Kenites were a people who dwelt westward of the Dead-sea, and extended themselves into Arabia Petræa. Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, was a Kenite, and in the time of Saul those people were mingled with the Amalekites. They, indeed, were one of those nations whose land God had promised to the descendants of Abraham; but, in consideration of Jethro, all of them, who submitted to the Hebrews, were suffered to live in their own country; the rest fled, in all probability, to the Edomites, and Amalekites. The lands of the Kenites were in Judah's partition.

Balaam having been invited by Balak, king of Moab, to curse the Israelites, stood upon a mountain, from whence he could view the camp of Israel, and the land of Kain, and said these words, "Strong is thy dwelling-place, and "thou putteſt thy nest in a rock; nevertheless the Kenite "shall be wasted, until Ashur shall carry thee away captive." The Kenites dwelt in rocks and mountains that were almost inaccessible. The word ken, signifies a nest, a hole, a cave; and kinnim may be rendered by Troglodytes, in Greek. The Kenites were conquered and carried into captivity by Nebuchadnezzar.

Ver. 30. And to them which were in Hormah.] This city is called by the different names of Herma, Harma, or Aramah; but it should be written Chorma, or Cherma. It was called Zephath, before the Hebrews gave it the name of Hormah, which signifies anathema, on the following occasion. The king of Arad, who was a Canaanite, and dwelt to the south of the Land of promise, having attack'd the Hebrews, put them to flight, and took a very rich book from them. The Israelites hereupon engaged themselves by vow, to devote to execration every thing belonging to that prince, Judges i. 17. for which reason this place was called Hormah; and it belonged to the tribe of Simeon.

——And to them which were in Chor-ashan, and to them which were in Athach.] It is probable, that these two places were likewise in the tribe of Simeon.

——And to them which were in Hebron.] Hebron, or Chebron, was one of the most ancient cities in the world, and was built seven years before Tanais, the capital of lower Egypt. Some think, that it was founded by Arba, one of the oldest giants of Palestine; for which reason it was called Kirjath-arba, which signifies Arba's city; but this name was afterward changed into that of Hebron. It was situated on an eminence twenty miles southward from Jerusalem, and twenty miles north from Beer-sheba. Not far from Hebron was the oak, or turpentine tree, under which Abraham received three angels, Gen. xviii. 1, &c. Eusebius, Sozomen, and several other ancient writers, speak of the veneration, which not only Christians, but even the Pagans themselves had for this tree.

Hebron was in the allotment of Judah. Here Zachary and Elizabeth are said by some to have dwelt. Hebron is still in being, but much fallen from its ancient lustre.

CHAP. XXXI.

1 Saul having loſt his army, and his ſons ſlain, he and his armour-bearer kill themſelves. 7 The Philiſtines poſſeſs the forſaken towns of the Iſraelites. 8 They triumph over the dead carcaſes. 11 They of Jabeſh-gilead, recovering the bodies by night, burn them at Jabeſh, and mournfully bury their bones.

NOW the Philiſtines fought againſt Iſrael: and the men of Iſrael fled from before the Philiſtines, and fell down ſlain in mount Gilboa.

2 And the Philiſtines followed hard upon Saul, and upon his ſons; and the Philiſtines ſlew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Malchiſhua, Sauls ſons.

3 And the battle went ſore againſt Saul, and the archers hit him, and he was ſore wounded of the archers.

4 Then ſaid Saul unto his armour-bearer, Draw thy ſword, and thruſt me through therewith; leſt theſe uncircumciſed come and thruſt me through, and abuſe me. But his armour-bearer would not; for he was ſore afraid: therefore Saul took a ſword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armour-bearer ſaw that Saul was dead, he fell likewiſe upon his ſword, and died with him.

6 So Saul died, and his three ſons, and his armour-bearer, and all his men that ſame day together.

7 ¶ And when the men of Iſrael that were on the other ſide of the valley, and they that were on the other ſide Jordan, ſaw that the men of Iſrael fled, and that Saul and his ſons were dead, they forſook the cities, and fled; and the Philiſtines came and dwelt in them.

8 And it came to paſs on the morrow, when the Philiſtines came to ſtrip the ſlain, that they found Saul and his three ſons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And they cut off his head, and ſtripped off his armour, and ſent into the land of the Philiſtines round about, to publiſh it in the houſe of their idols, and among the people.

10 And they put his armour in the houſe of Aſhtaroth: and they faſtned his body to the wall of Beth-ſhan.

11 ¶ And when the inhabitants of Jabeſh-gilead heard of that which the Philiſtines had done to Saul:

12 All the valiant men aroſe, and went all night, and took the body of Saul, and the bodies of his ſons from the wall of Beth-ſhan, and came to Jabeſh, and burnt them there.

13 And they took their bones, and buried them under a tree at Jabeſh, and faſted ſeven days.

Ver. 1. And the Philiſtines fought againſt Iſrael.] As they began the quarrel, ſo they ſeem to have began the fight.

Ver. 2. And the Philiſtines followed hard upon Saul, and upon his ſons; and the Philiſtines ſlew Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Malchiſhua, Saul's ſons.] Iſhboſheth, the fourth ſon of Saul, not being a warlike man, was either not in the engagement, or elſe he eſcaped by flight, like Abner, and other men of note. Jonathan, that faithful and generous friend to David, ſeems to have deſerved a better fate; but the Providence of God ſuffered him to be ſlain, to facilitate David's advancement to the throne of Iſrael; for tho' he had freely conſented, that David ſhould be Saul's ſucceſſor, yet ſo great was the fondneſs of the people for him, that many of them might have formed a party, in order to confer the royal dignity upon him, in oppoſition to David.

Ver. 3. And the battle went ſore againſt Saul.] His victorious enemies purſued him ſo cloſe, that he had no hope of eſcaping from them.

——— And the archers hit him, and he was ſore wounded of the archers.] We think it neceſſary to obſerve, that in this place, and likewiſe in the Chronicles, where the account of Saul's death is repeated, that the root of the verb, here tranſlated wounded, is chull, which ſignifies, to be in dread or pain, and alludes to the pangs of a woman in travail, and not challal, to wound. So that it doth not appear, that Saul was wounded, but only in extreme anguiſh and dread, when he ſaw himſelf ſo thick beſet with enemies, that there was no poſſibility for his eſcape.

Ver. 4. And Saul ſaid unto his armour-bearer, Draw thy ſword, and thruſt me through therewith leſt thoſe uncircumciſed come and thruſt me through, and abuſe me.] He was apprehenſive that they would put him to ſome ignominious death, or make ſport of him in a barbarous and unmanly manner, as their anceſtors did with Samſon.

The armour-bearer of Saul had too much reſpect for his ſovereign, to execute this fatal command; which when Saul perceived, he ruſhed upon his own ſword, and ended his unfortunate life. The faithful ſervant ſeeing his lord dead, was reſolved not to ſurvive him, and immediately threw himſelf on his own ſword, acting in an undaunted manner, that ſevere part by himſelf which he had refuſed to do by his maſter. The Jews pretend that this armour-bearer was Doeg the Edomite, but for what reaſon they beſt know. Thus died Saul, the firſt king of Iſrael, after a reign of about forty years.

The day after the battle, when the Philiſtines came to take the ſpoils of the dead, they found Saul and his three ſons extended on the plain. This perhaps, was a ſpectacle they little imagined they ſhould ſee, and their implacable rage could not be ſatisfied, till they had cut off the dead king's head, and ſtripped him of his armour, which they depoſited in the temple of Aſhtaroth. They likewiſe had the inhumanity to hang up his body on the wall of Beth-ſhan, in order to expoſe it to publick ſhame and reproach, as if he had been the greateſt of malefactors. That part of the wall where this indignity was offered to the dead monarch, was oppoſite, perhaps, to the principal ſtreet, becauſe it is ſaid, 2 Sam. xxi. 12. that his body was hung up in the ſtreet of this city. As to his head, we read, 1 Chron. x. 10. that it was faſtened up in the temple of Dagon. Sometime after this unworthy proceeding, the inhabitants of Jabeſh-Gilead, being informed of the indignities that were offered to the bodies of Saul and his ſons, went by night to Beth-ſhan and took them down, and then brought them into their city, beyond Jordan, where they burnt the remains of the fleſh, and buried the bones in a grove that was near their city. They likewiſe faſted and mourned ſeven days for the unfortunate king, in a generous commemoration of the ſignal ſervice he had rendered to their city, at the glorious beginning of his reign, when he delivered them from the intended cruelty of their implacable enemies the Ammonites. Several years after, David cauſed theſe bones to be removed from the grove at Jabeſh, and they were then depoſited in the ſepulchre of Kiſh, the father of Saul, at Gibeah.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

SECOND BOOK of SAMUEL,

Otherwiſe called the SECOND BOOK of the K I N G S.

The ARGUMENT.

This book contains a particular account of the events that happened after the death of Saul, and in the reign of his ſucceſſor David: in which we find a lively repreſentation of the wonderful goodneſs of God to this prince, and the ſingular favours he conferred upon him: Firſt, with regard to temporal bleſſings; God having raiſed him, in the admirable courſe of his providence, and after a long ſeries of dangers and afflictions, to the crown of Judah, and afterward to that of all Iſrael. He likewiſe bleſſed him with a numerous poſterity, brave officers and valiant ſoldiers; adorned him, in his own perſon, with a moſt heroic generoſity; eſtabliſhed his kingdom, and greatly enlarged its limits; and crowned his wars with many victories obtained againſt his enemies, as well at home as abroad.

Secondly, With reſpect to ſpiritual mercies, in which God diſtinguiſhed his goodneſs to him, in conducting him by the ſpirit of faith, adoption, and prophecy; inſpiring him with an unparallell'd devotion to his Sacred Service; and enriching him with the virtues of wiſdom, juſtice, clemency, humility, and patience, which frequently ſhone forth with all their ſplendour, in his conduct and government.

But, on the other hand, this book likewiſe gives us a particular account of thoſe aggravated tranſgreſſions with which the life of David was ſometimes ſtained, to the provocation of his great benefactor; and eſpecially in his conduct with reſpect to the wife of Uriah, and in his proud numbering the people, of which, tho' he afterward ſincerely repented, yet was he ſeverely puniſhed by God, for his own good, and the edification of his church.

Among the chaſtiſements which God inflicted upon him for his ſins, we may reckon his ſon Amnon's raviſhing his ſiſter Tamar; for which indignity he was afterward murthered by the command of his brother Abſalom, who, for that purpoſe, had invited all the kings ſons to a feaſt. To this we may add, the horrible and unnatural conſpiracy and rebellion of Abſalom, his ſon, againſt him, in conſequence of which he was conſtrained in his old age to have recourſe to flight, for the preſervation of his own life: tho' indeed the Lord never forſook him either in this, or any other extremity; but ſtrengthened and ſupported him by a firm faith and confidence, and afforded him a favourable iſſue, by giving him the victory over all his enemies; defeating and infatuating their counſels againſt him, and turning all things, in the end, to his real welfare and advantage, and to the utter ruin of his adverſaries and oppreſſors; that ſo the Divine Majeſty might manifeſt himſelf to be a holy and a faithful God, who notwithſtanding the innumerable defects, iniquities and demerits of his children, maintains his gracious covenant with them in the moſt inviolable manner; tho' he never indulges them in their ſins.

This book contains the hiſtory of about forty years, from the beginning of David's reign, to the end thereof; except only that the conſpiracy of his ſon Adonijah, and his own death, are not here inſerted, but are ſet down at the beginning of the following book, which is the firſt of Kings.

The former part of the firſt book of Samuel, as likewiſe the books of Ruth and Judges, were in all probability compiled by Samuel himſelf, as we have formerly obſerved; but the reſt of it, with this of the ſecond book of Samuel, were written by other holy perſons, and prophets, who were divinely inſpired, ſuch as Nathan, Gad, and others.

CHAP. I.

1 The Amalekite, who brought tidings of the overthrow, and accuſed himſelf of Saul's death is ſlain. 17 David lamenteth Saul and Jonathan with a ſong.

NOW it came to paſs after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Amalekites, and David had abode two days in Ziklag:

2 It came even to paſs on the third day, that behold, a man came out of the camp from Saul, with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head: and ſo it was when he came to David, that he fell to the earth, and did obeiſance.

3 And David ſaid unto him, From whence cameſt thou? And he ſaid unto him, out of the camp of Iſrael am I eſcaped.

4 And David ſaid unto him, How went the matter? I pray thee, tell me. And he anſwered, That the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people alſo are fallen and dead, and Saul and Jonathan his ſon are dead alſo.

5 And David ſaid unto the young man that told him, How knoweſt thou that Saul and Jonathan his ſon be dead?

6 And the young man that told him, ſaid, As I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa, behold, Saul, leaned upon his ſpear: and lo, the chariots and horſemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he ſaw me, and called unto me: and I anſwered, Here am I.

8 And he ſaid unto me, Who art thou? And I anſwered him, I am an Amalekite.

9 He ſaid unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and ſlay me, : for anguiſh is come upon me, becauſe my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I ſtood upon him, and ſlew him, becauſe I was ſure that he could not live, after that he was fallen: and I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

11 Then David took hold on his clothes and rent them, and likewiſe all the men that were with him.

12 And they mourned and wept, and faſted until even, for Saul and for Jonathan his ſon, and for the people of the LORD, and for the houſe of Iſrael; becauſe they were fallen by the ſword.

13 ¶ And David ſaid unto the young man that told him, Whence art thou? And he anſwered, I am the ſon of a ſtranger, an Amalekite.

14 And David ſaid unto him, How waſt thou not afraid to ſtretch forth thine hand, to deſtroy the LORDs anointed?

15 And David called one of the young men, and ſaid, Go near, and fall upon him. And he ſmote him that he died.

16 And David ſaid unto him, Thy blood be upon thy head: for thy mouth hath teſtified againſt thee, ſaying, I have ſlain the LORDs anointed.

17 ¶ And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul, and over Jonathan his ſon.

18 (Alſo he bade them teach the children of Judah the uſe of the bow: behold, it is written in the book of Jaſher.)

19 The beauty of Iſrael is ſlain upon thy high places: how are the mighty fallen!

20 Tell it not in Gath, publiſh it not in the ſtreets of Askelon: leſt the daughters of the Philiſtines rejoice, leſt the daughters of the uncircumciſed triumph.

21 Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you, nor fields of offerings: for there the ſhield of the mighty is vilely caſt away, the ſhield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.

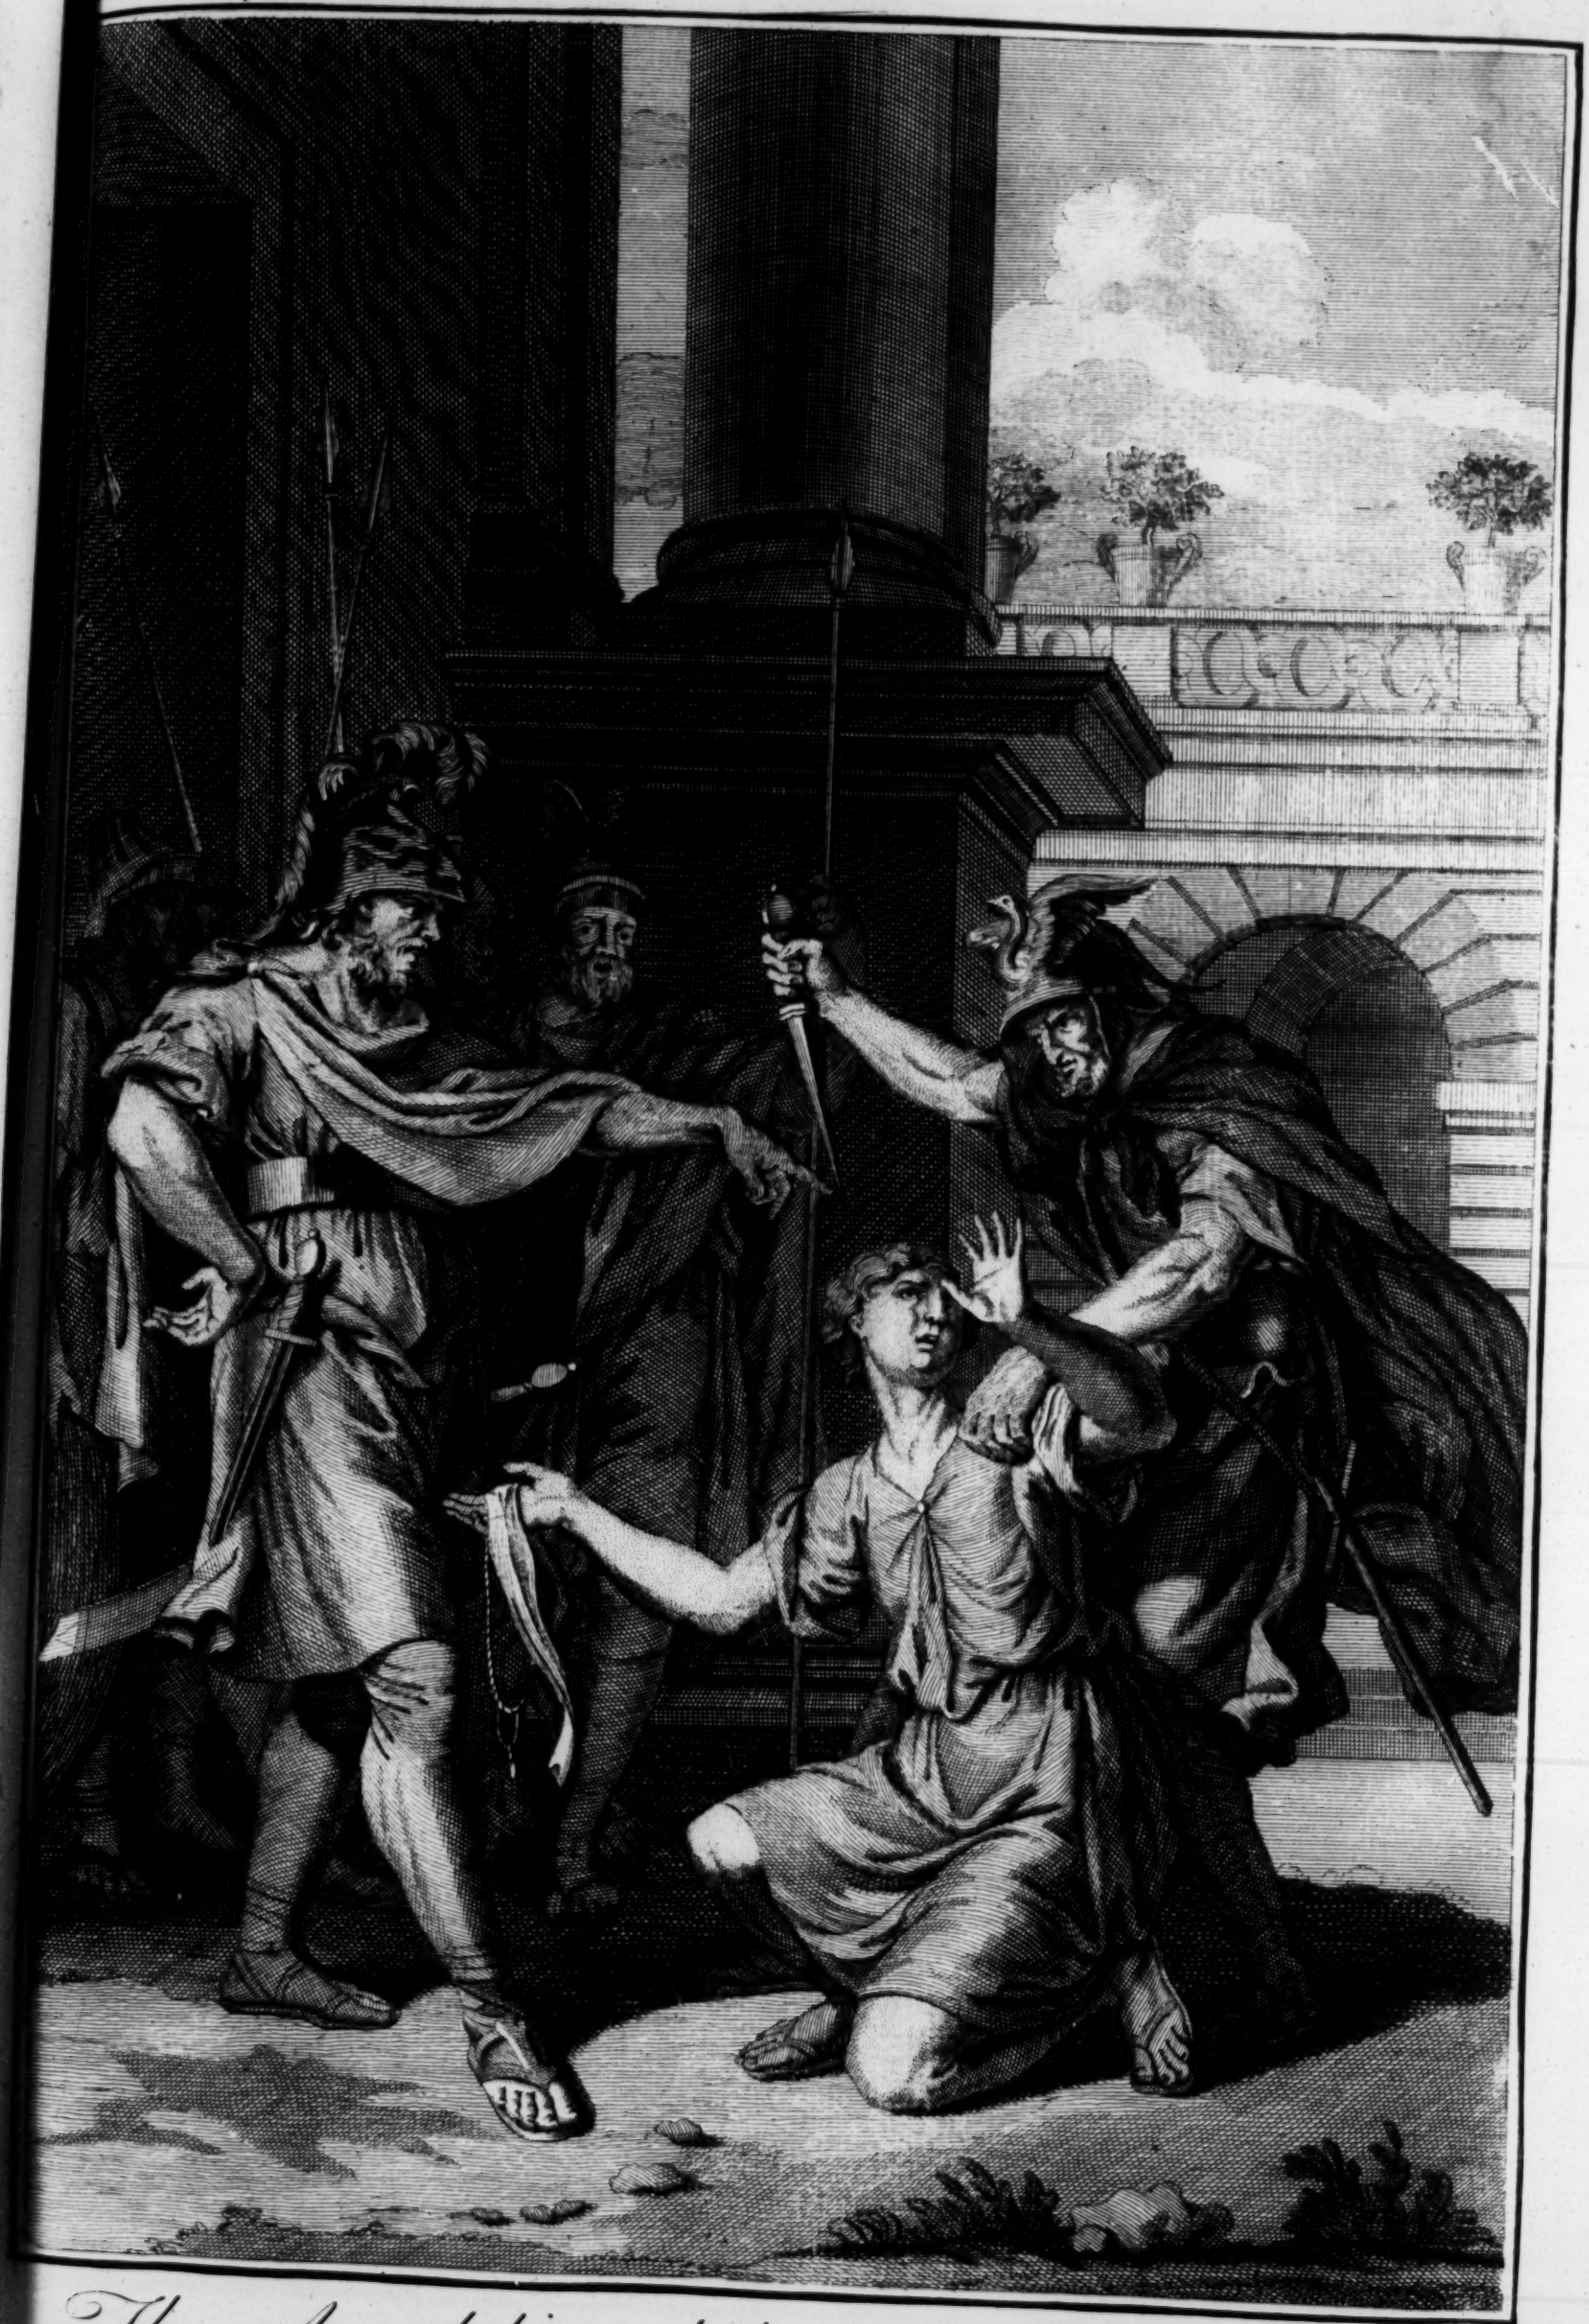
22 From the blood of the ſlain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back, and the ſword of Saul returned not empty.



I. Basire fculp.

The Amalekite slain who slew Saul.

23 Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleaſant in their lives, and in their death they were not divided: they were ſwifter than eagles, they were ſtronger than lions.

24 Ye daughters of Iſrael, weep over Saul, who clothed you in ſcarlet, with other delights, who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.

25 How are the mighty fallen in the midſt of the battle! O Jonathan, thou waſt ſlain in thine high places.

26 I am diſtreſſed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleaſant haſt thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, paſſing the love of women.

27 How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war periſhed!

Ver. 1. Now it came to paſs after the death of Saul, when David was returned from the ſlaughter of the Amalekites.] The battle between Saul and the Philiſtines was fought about the time when David was in purſuit of the Amalekites.

——— And David had abode two days in Ziklag.] It ſeems the Amalekites had not burnt this town in ſuch a manner as to render it uninhabitable. Perhaps they were ſo well ſatisfied with the ſpoils they had obtained, that they did not think of purſuing their revenge to the utmoſt extremity.

Ver 2. It came even to paſs on the third day, that behold, a man came out of the camp from Saul, with his clothes rent, and earth upon his head, &c.] This man was an Amalekite, as he himſelf informs David, ver. 8. but becauſe the Sacred Hiſtorian has not told us from what family he ſprung, nor mentioned any other particulars concerning him, than thoſe which are recorded in this chapter, the Jews have been induſtrious to ſupply that imaginary deficiency. Some of them will have him to have been Doeg the Edomite, whom they likewiſe pretend was Saul's armour-bearer, as has been already obſerved. Others ſay he was the ſon of that enemy to David, and add, that his father intruſted him with the crown and bracelets of Saul, during the battle with the Philiſtines. The author of an eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, which is aſcribed without any reaſon to Philo the Jew, declares that his name was Edab, and that he was the ſon of Agag, that king of the Amalekites whom Saul defeated and took priſoner. After this account of the Amalekites extraction, the author introduces a very extraordinary circumſtance; for he tells us that Saul, when he was expiring, ſaw this man approaching him, upon which he ſaid to him, "Be witneſs now to "the accompliſhment of the words of Samuel, who told "me, in one of his predictions, that a ſon of Agag "would prove fatal to me. I command thee to go to "David, after my death, and ſay to him, I have ſlain "thine enemy, &c."

Tho' we have no authority from ſcripture, to believe this perſon was the ſon of Doeg, yet the manner in which ſome have endeavoured to prove the impoſſibility of his being ſo, is very ſuperficial: This man (ſay they) was an Amalekite, and therefore could not be the ſon of Doeg, who was an Edomite. But they ought to have conſider'd, that all Amalekites were Edomites, tho' all Edomites were not Amalekites. For Amalek was the grandſon of Eſau (the father of the Edomites) by his ſon Eliphaz, Gen. xxxvi. 15, 16.

This man, whoever he was, came from the camp of Saul, and the marks of mourning which appeared upon him made it evident, that he was a meſſenger of ſome bad tydings. He accordingly acquainted David, that the Philiſtines had gained a compleat victory over the army of Iſrael, and that Saul and his ſon Jonathan were among the number of the ſlain. David then asked him, how he came to know that the king and his ſon were dead; upon which the Amalekite gave him the following account:

Ver. 6. — As I happened by chance upon mount Gilboa.] One would imagine, by this, that he was not a ſoldier, but a countryman, who had occaſion to paſs that way.

Euſebius and St. Jerom inform us, that this mountain of Gilboa was ſix miles from Bethſan, otherwiſe called Scythopolis, and that there was a large place ſtill to be ſeen there, called Gelbus. William of Tyre (lib. 2. c. 26.) ſays, that at the foot of mount Gilboa there is a ſpring which runs near the city of Jezreel.

——— Behold, Saul leaned upon his ſpear.] Endeavouring to force it through his body.

——— And lo, the chariots and horſemen followed hard after him.] Which might make him apprehenſive, that he ſhould fall into their hands, before he could diſpatch himſelf, and elude their rage.

Ver. 7. And when he looked behind him, he ſaw me, and called unto me.] Saul looked round about him, to ſee if any of his own ſervants were near, that he might employ their aid to haſten his tragical end.

Ver. 8. And he ſaid unto me, Who art thou? And I anſwered him, I am an Amalekite.] This perſon repreſents himſelf as not diſſembling his country, tho' he was ſenſible, that Saul had no reaſon to be a friend to it.

Ver. 9. And he ſaid unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and ſlay me.] Saul deſired the Amalekite to lean ſo hard upon him, with the whole weight of his body, that the ſpear might run through him, ſince he himſelf had not ſtrength enough to force a paſſage for it. This, however, is a very unlikely circumſtance; for Saul, in all probability, would have been as unwilling to be ſlain by an Amalekite, as by a Philiſtine.

——— For anguiſh is come upon me.] The Hebrew word ſchabatz is variouſly expounded: Some tranſlate it, trembling; others, convulſions; and the LXX render it by the word σκότος, darkneſs. Kimchi affirms it was a diſeaſe, which ſome ſay was the cramp; but in Scripture, as Braunius obſerves, (Lib. 1. de Veſtitu Sacerd. Hebr. cap. 17. ſect. 9.) it never has any one of theſe ſignifications, but is to be interpreted of ſome ornamental part of a garment. And therefore our marginal tranſlation is to be preferred, namely, my embroider'd coat, or my coat of mail, as Diodate tranſlates it, prevents the ſpear from piercing far into my body. The coat of mail conſiſted of little rings, implicated one within another, which render'd it not eaſily penetrable. And thus Ralbag among the Jews underſtands it.

——— Becauſe my life is yet whole in me.] He was not as yet mortally wounded, by the efforts he had made to deſtroy himſelf.

Ver. 10. So I ſtood upon him, and ſlew him, becauſe I was ſure that he could not live.] This was a notorious falſhood, invented by the Amalekite, in order to gain the favour of David, as he expected he ſhould. For, firſt, Saul was not killed by a ſpear, as this man pretends, but by his own ſword, 1 Sam. xxxi. 4. Secondly, it is expreſly ſaid, that Saul's armour-bearer ſaw that Saul was dead, 1 Sam. xxxi. 5. which was a circumſtance that he would undoubtedly examine into and know, before he killed himſelf, that he might not ſurvive his maſter. Thirdly, Saul's death is aſcribed, in the moſt expreſs terms, to his own action, namely, his falling upon his ſword.

——— After that he was fallen.] This the Amalekite adds by way of mitigation and excuſe, that his killing Saul might be eſteemed an act of neceſſity and kindneſs, and not of choice, or in conſequence of any ill-will to that prince. But here alſo he betrays himſelf by his own words; for how could it be neceſſary for him to kill Saul, when his life was yet whole within him, as this man had juſt now declared? ver. 9.

——— And I took the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.] Saul was the firſt among the Jews, who had the enſigns of regal authority; for the judges, his predeceſſors, had not any, but were mere miniſters of God, who alone was their king and governor.

But it is not probable that Saul wore his crown in the battle, for that would have diſtinguiſhed him as a mark for the Philiſtine archers to ſhoot at, in conſequence of which he muſt ſoon have been ſlain; but it was carried along along with him into the field by ſome of his attendants, in order to be replaced on his head, if he had obtained the victory, and returned triumphant from the field. The Jews think that Doeg, his armour-bearer, had it in his cuſtody, and that before he killed himſelf, he gave it to his ſon, (this young Amalekite) hoping he might thereby ingratiate himſelf with David.

Ver. 11. Then David took hold on his clothes, and rent them, and likewiſe all the men that were with him.] This was the uſual indication of extraordinary ſorrow, and violent emotions of mind; and it was not peculiar to the Jews, but was likewiſe practiſed by all nations, as we learn from Homer, Herodotus, Virgil, and other ancient authors.

Ver. 12. And they mourned, and wept, and faſted until even.] Till the evening ſacrifice was offered: tho' Buxtorf, in his Synag. Judaica, thinks they abſtained from all refreſhment of food, till the ſtars appeared.

——— For Saul and for Jonathan his ſons, and for the people of the Lord, and for the houſe of Iſrael; becauſe they were fallen by the ſword.] David had ample cauſe to mourn for Jonathan, who was the ſincereſt and moſt generous friend he ever had; but ſome think he might juſtly have rejoiced to hear of the death of Saul, who had long been his moſt inveterate enemy. But ſurely a man of a noble ſpirit may be allowed to devote a few compaſſionate tears to the memory of a dead foe, eſpecially when he loſes his life like Saul, by thoſe who were equal enemies to them both. We may add too, that David, in bewailing the untimely death of Saul, lamented him as a publick perſon, who had lately been reconciled to him, and might poſſibly have relapſed no more into his averſion for him, if he had been permitted to live longer. The manner of his death was ſufficient to affect a perſon of David's humanity and virtue, and eſpecially if he had been informed, as poſſibly he might, that Saul had ſo lately been to conſult a ſorcereſs, and had not ſince diſcovered any tokens of repentance for that criminal proceeding.

Ver. 15. And David called one of the young men, and ſaid, Go near, and fall upon him. And he ſmote him that he died.] This was the recompence the Amalekite gained for his officious falſhood. There, indeed, was a known law, that no man ſhould be condemned to die by the teſtimony of one witneſs: And the Jews inform us, that no judge was to ſit alone upon capital affairs, but was to have ſome other aſſociated with him in his juriſdiction; and that no man's evidence was to be taken againſt himſelf. But this was the extraordinary prerogative of the Jewiſh kings, that they might alone hear any man's cauſe, and condemn him if they thought him guilty, and that from the teſtimony of one witneſs, or the ſole confeſſion of the party. But after all, it may perhaps be thought ſomething ſevere, that this man ſhould ſuffer death, for doing what Saul himſelf deſired, and even when he could not live many moments longer, if the Amalekite ſpoke truth. Abarbinel therefore thinks, that as this perſon was an Amalekite, David concluded that he killed Saul out of revenge for the ſlaughter he had made of his countrymen.

Ver. 17. And David lamented with this lamentation over Saul, and over Jonathan his ſon.] David and his ſervants had already mourned the unhappy fate of the father and ſon; but their deaths now inſpired his poetic genius with one of the fineſt elegies that was ever compoſed, and which the Sacred Hiſtorian has tranſmitted to all poſterity.

———(Alſo he bade them teach the children of Judah the uſe of the bow: behold it is written in the book of Jaſher.)] This comes in as a parentheſis, between the former verſe and what follows, in order to ſhew the early endeavours of David to promote the good of the people, that they might be provided with proper means to defend themſelves: For they now looking upon him as the king God deſigned ſhould rule over them, he ordered that they ſhould immediately improve themſelves in the exerciſe of the bow, in which the Philiſtines excelled them at that time. Some expoſitors have thought that the words, the uſe of the bow, are the title of this elegiac ſong, and that the Jews were to ſing it while they were performing their military exerciſes; but the former ſeems a more natural interpretation, and we therefore have adhered to it.

We can arrive at no certainty, with reſpect to the book of Jaſher. Victorinus Strigelius adventures to ſay, Haud dubie fuit hiſtoria eccleſiaſtica, qualis nunc eſt Euſebiana, aut Theodoretica. It undoubtedly was an eccleſiaſtical hiſtory, like that which we now have of Euſebius and Theodoret. But we are rather inclined to think, that as the word Jaſher ſignifies right, it was ſome treatiſe on the right art of making war, on which ſubject the Romans wrote many books; particularly Cato, Cornelius Celſus, Frontinus and Paternus; which were abridged by Vegetius de Re Militari. Procopius Gazæus thinks theſe words declare, Hanc hiſtoriam ex multi libris collectam eſſe; That this hiſtory was compiled out of many prophetical books. Others ſuppoſe that the book of Jaſher was a collection of the poetic praiſes of great men; and perhaps they may be in the right.

Ver. 19. The beauty of Iſrael is ſlain upon thy high places.] The Hebrew word hattſevi, which is rendered beauty, by our tranſlators, properly ſignifies a roe, which is a creature remarkable for its ſwiftneſs; and we ſhall find this ſenſe admirably accommodated to the praiſe of a hero who died in a battle that was fought on a mountain. Swiftneſs of foot was anciently eſteemed a great accompliſhment in military men, eſpecially in countries that were mountainous, like that of Judæa. Hence David praiſes God, for having made his feet like hinds feet, and for ſetting him upon high places, Pſalm xviii. 33. Homer likewiſe frequently calls the greateſt hero in the Grecian camp, πόδας ὠκὺς Ἀχιλλεύς, the ſwift-footed Achilles. The Sacred Hiſtorian has alſo repreſented, Aſahel as light of foot as a wild roe, in the 2d chapter of this book, ver. 18. The ſpouſe likewiſe in the canticles is compared to the ſame creature, for the celerity of his motions, chap. ii. ver. 9, 17. and chap. viii. 14. David therefore, in order to celebrate the exceeding ſwiftneſs of Saul, ſays, The roe of Iſrael is ſlain upon the high places; for this is the true tranſlation of the paſſage before us.

——— How are the mighty fallen!] How calamitous and unexpected is the fall of the mighty heroes of Iſrael!

Ver. 20. Tell it not in Gath, publiſh it not in the ſtreets of Askelon.] Theſe are pathetic expreſſions of great ſorrow, that this overthrow ſhould be publiſhed in the Philiſtine cities, where David ardently wiſhed it might be for ever unknown.

——— Leſt the daughters of the Philiſtines rejoice, leſt the daughters of the uncircumciſed triumph.] In conformity to the cuſtom of thoſe countries, where the women celebrated with ſongs and dances, the victory of the men over their enemies; ſee Exod. xv. 1, &c. Judges xi. 34.

Ver. 21. Ye mountains of Gilboa, let there be no dew, neither let there be rain upon you, nor fields of offerings.] No more let the genial dews and rains from heaven deſcend upon your verdant ſummits, O ye mountains of Gilboa, that have long been ſo fertile, but are now polluted by the effuſion of the royal blood of Iſrael.

——— For there the ſhield of the mighty is vilely caſt away.] For on thy top, O Gilboa, was the ſhield of Saul caſt away and abandoned, as if it had been the buckler of the meaneſt ſoldier in his army.

——— The ſhield of Saul, as though he had not been anointed with oil.] As if he had been a common ſoldier; for theſe words are generally underſtood as ſpoken of Saul. But the words as though he had are not in the Hebrew, where there is only not anointed with oil; which may as well relate to the ſhield, as the Jews interpret it, and thus explain it. By the holy oil men were ſet apart for ſome great office, as that of prieſts, and ſometimes kings. Now when any perſon, in a ſudden danger of the ſtate, was conſtituted captain-general of their army, it was cuſtomary for them to anoint him; that by this ceremonial he might be animated to fight the Lord's battles with intrepidity. And ſuch a perſon was called the anointed of war; nay, they affirm, that their armour was ſometimes anointed, to increaſe their confidence of ſucceſs.

Ver. 22. From the blood of the ſlain, from the fat of the mighty, the bow of Jonathan turned not back.] The ſhafts which Jonathan launched from his bow were always unerring, and they drank the blood of the enemies who dared to oppoſe him; and the mightieſt of their hoſt lay bleeding in the duſt before him.

——— And the ſword of Saul returned not empty.] His ſword was not employed in vain for the deliverance and glory glory of Iſrael; and whenever he wielded the fatal blade, the fierceſt of his enemies were laid low.

Ver. 23. Saul and Jonathan were lovely and pleaſant in their lives.] They were always affable and courteous to their people, and gained their beſt affections by the exerciſe of virtues that ſhone brighter than the royal diadem.

—— And in their death they were not divided.] Death, in all its terrors, was unable to make Jonathan forſake his father; he ruſhed upon deſtruction, with a reſolution that no ſtroke of fate ſhould divide them from each other.

—— They were ſwifter than eagles, they were ſtronger than lions.] They launched upon their foes with the rapidity of ſwift-wing'd eagles, and confounded their battle with the ſtrength and intrepidity of lions.

—— Ye daughters of Iſrael, weep over Saul, who clothed you in ſcarlet, with other delights, who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel.] Weep with a generous and grateful ſorrow, ye daughters of Iſrael, over the remains of Saul, who deck'd you with the radiant ſpoils of your enemies, and ſecured you in the enjoyment of thoſe delights, that ought for ever to endear his memory to you.

Ver. 25. How are the mighty fallen in the midſt of the battle! O Jonathan, thou waſt ſlain in thine high places!] How are the mighty cut down by the edge of grim war! O Jonathan, thou waſt ſlain on thoſe high places, where the cauſe of thy country was defended by thee, with a bravery that merited a better fate!

Ver. 26. I am diſtreſſed for thee, my brother Jonathan: very pleaſant haſt thou been unto me: thy love to me was wonderful, paſſing the love of women.] O Jonathan, thou beſt of brothers, thy unhappy fate rends my ſoul with anguiſh, thou didſt ever render thyſelf amiable and pleaſant unto me. Thy untainted friendſhip for me exceeded the tenderneſs of conjugal affection.

Ver. 27. How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war periſhed!] How are the deſolate ſons of Iſrael deprived of their greateſt heroes! How is all military glory now extinguiſhed in our mournful land!

CHAP. II.

1 David by Gods direction, with his company, goeth up to Hebron, where he is made king of Judah. 5 He commendeth them of Jabeſh-gilead, for their kindneſs to Saul. 8 Abner maketh Iſh-boſheth king of Iſrael. 12 A mortal skirmiſh between twelve of Abners, and twelve of Joabs men. 18 Aſahel is ſlain. 25 At Abners motion Joab ſoundeth a retreat. 32 Aſahels burial.

AND it came to paſs after this, that David enquired of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? And the LORD ſaid unto him, Go up. And David ſaid, Whither ſhall I go up? and he ſaid, Unto Hebron.

2 So David went up thither, and his two wives alſo, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail Nabals wife the Carmelite.

3 And his men that were with him, did David bring up, every man with his houſhold: and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron.

4 And the men of Judah came, and there they anointed David king over the houſe of Judah: and they told David, ſaying, That the men of Jabeſh-gilead were they that buried Saul.

5 ¶ And David ſent meſſengers unto the men of Jabeſh-gilead, and ſaid unto them, Bleſſed be ye of the LORD, that ye have ſhewed this kindneſs unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.

6 And now the LORD ſhew kindneſs and truth unto you: and I alſo will requite you this kindneſs, becauſe ye have done this thing.

7 Therefore now let your hands be ſtrengthned, and be ye valiant: for your maſter Saul is dead, and alſo the houſe of Judah have anointed me king over them.

8 ¶ But Abner the ſon of Ner, captain of Sauls hoſt, took Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim.

9 And he made him king over Gilead, and over the Aſhurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Iſrael.

10 Iſh-boſheth Sauls ſon was forty years old when he began to reign over Iſrael, and reigned two years: but the houſe of Judah followed David.

11 (And the time that David was king in Hebron over the houſe of Judah, was ſeven years and ſix months.)

12 ¶ And Abner the ſon of Ner, and the ſervants of Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, went out from Mahanaim, to Gibeon.

13 And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, and the ſervants of David went out, and met together by the pool of Gibeon: and they ſat down, the one on the one ſide of the pool, and the other on the other ſide of the pool.

14 And Abner ſaid to Joab, Let the young men now ariſe, and play before us. And Joab ſaid, Let them ariſe.

15 Then there aroſe and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, and twelve of the ſervants of David.

16 And they caught every one his fellow by the head, and thruſt his ſword in his fellows ſide; ſo they fell down together: wherefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very ſore battle that day: and Abner was beaten, and the men of Iſrael, before the ſervants of David.

18 ¶ And there were three ſons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abiſhai, and Aſahel: and Aſahel was as light of foot as a wild roe.

19 And Aſahel purſued after Abner, and in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left, from following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and ſaid, Art thou Aſahel? And he anſwered, I am.

21 And Abner ſaid to him, Turn thee aſide to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour. But Aſahel would not turn aſide from following of him.

22 And Abner ſaid again to Aſahel, Turn thee aſide from following me: wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground? how then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

23 Howbeit he refuſed to turn aſide: wherefore Abner with the hinder end of the ſpear ſmote him under the fifth rib, that the ſpear came out behind him; and he fell down there, and died in the ſame place: and it came to paſs, that as many as came to the place where Aſahel fell down and died, ſtood ſtill.

24 Joab alſo and Abiſhai purſued after Abner: and the ſun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah by the way of the wilderneſs of Gibeon.

25 ¶ And the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together after Abner, and became one troop, and ſtood on the top of an hill.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and ſaid, Shall the ſword devour for ever? knoweſt thou not that it will be bitterneſs in the latter end? how long ſhall it be then e're thou bid the people return from following their brethren?

27 And Joab ſaid, As God liveth, unleſs thou hadſt ſpoken, ſurely then in the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people ſtood ſtill, and purſued after Iſrael no more, neither fought they any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and paſſed over Jordan, and went through all Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.

30 And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of Davids ſervants nineteen men and Aſahel.

31 But the ſervants of David had ſmitten of Benjamin, and of Abners men, ſo that three hundred and threeſcore men died.

32 ¶ And they took up Aſahel, and buried him in the ſepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem: and Joab and his men went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after this, that David enquired of the Lord.] By Abiathar the high-prieſt, as he had often done before, 1 Sam. xxvi. 9. and other places.

——— Saying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah?] Which was his own tribe, where he had moſt friends, and therefore it was proper, he thought, to addreſs himſelf to them who were beſt affected to him. But tho' he had a right to the kingdom by God's deſignation, yet he would not enter into poſſeſſion, nor take upon him the adminiſtration of affairs, without God's advice and direction.

——— And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go up.] He approved of his going up into that tribe, and thereby gave him hope of ſucceſs.

——— And David ſaid, Whither ſhall I go up?] He asked theſe queſtions diſtinctly, as the Jews ſay the manner was to do, and not two queſtions at once. See the notes on 1 Sam. xxviii. 11. and ſee what we have further noted, chap. xxx. 8.

——— And he ſaid, Unto Hebron.] Which was a principal city in that tribe, and ſituated in the middle of it; where the people might reſort to him with greater eaſe and convenience, than in Ziklag; which was his own town by the gift of Achiſh, and at firſt in the lot of Judah; ſee 1 Sam. xxvii. 6.

Ver. 2. So David went up thither, and his two wives alſo, Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs, and Abigail Nabal's wife the Carmelite.] Who having been hitherto companions of his diſtreſs and troubles, were now advanced to be partakers of his proſperity. This Theogena, the wife of Agathocles (as Strigelius obſerves) made the character of a good wife, who in marriage enters into ſociety with a husband, in all things, both good and evil.

Ver. 3. And his men that were with him did David bring up, every man with his houſhold.] He took care to provide for his followers, and their families, according to every one's merit. But this, it is likely, was not done till he was ſettled: For to go up with ſo many armed men had been to have frighted them into compliance.

——— And they dwelt in the cities of Hebron.] Which was given the prieſts to be a city of refuge, Joſh. xxi. 11, 12. and for that reaſon could not contain all David's followers, but him and his court only. The reſt were diſpoſed of in the cities depending upon Hebron.

Ver. 4. And the men of Judah came.] The principal perſons, who repreſented the reſt.

——— And there they anointed David king.] Who had been privately anointed by Samuel, ſome time before; but that was only a deſignation of him to the kingdom: Into which he was now ſolemnly inaugurated by this public unction.

——— Over the houſe of Judah.] Who would not preſume to know the ſenſe and intention of all Iſrael: Tho' they hoped they would follow this example, as they afterward did, and anointed him again, chap. v. ver. 3.

——— And they told David, ſaying, That the men of Jabeſh-gilead were they that buried Saul.] Which it ſeems he had not heard of, during his reſidence at Ziklag; but now (by ſome diſcourſe concerning Saul's death) that noble action was related to him; which is recorded to their honour, 1 Sam. xxxi. 11, 12, 13.

Ver. 5. And David ſent meſſengers unto the men of Jabeſh-gilead, and ſaid unto them, Bleſſed be ye of the Lord, that ye have ſhewed this kindneſs unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.] This demonſtrates the great piety, as well as the great prudence of David. For he teſtified the true reſpect and unfeigned kindneſs he had for Saul, tho' his virulent enemy: And by his ſo heartily and earneſtly wiſhing, that the men of Jabeſh might be rewarded for their pious action, he invited them (who were Iſraelites on the other ſide Jordan) to own him for their king.

Ver. 6. And now the Lord ſhew kindneſs and truth unto you; and I alſo will requite you this kindneſs, becauſe ye have done this thing.] He doth not content himſelf merely with with praying God to reward them (which he repeats again) but promiſes that he would himſelf take care of them, by defending them from the Philiſtines, if they ſhould offer to invade them, for entring their country without leave, and taking thence the trophies of their victory.

Ver. 7. Therefore now let your hands be ſtrengthned, and be ye valiant.] As they had eminently been, 1 Sam. xxxi. 12.

——For your maſter Saul is dead.] Or, though your maſter Saul be dead.

——And alſo the houſe of Judah have anointed me king over them.] He would not have them diſcouraged, becauſe they wanted one to head them; for he being inveſted with the royal dignity by the tribe of Judah, would look upon himſelf as bound to protect them alſo.

Ver. 8. But Abner the ſon of Ner, captain of Saul's hoſt.] A man of the greateſt authority in Iſrael, after Saul was dead, being general of all their forces.

——Took Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, and brought him over to Mahanaim.] He is called Eth-baal, 1 Chron. viii. 31. as there are ſeveral other names, which end indifferently, either in Boſheth, or Baal. For inſtance, Gideon is called Jerubaal, Judges ix. 1. and Jerubbeſheth, 2 Sam. xi. 21. And Mephiboſheth is called Meribbaal, 1 Chron. viii. 34. For Boſheth ſignifies ſhame and confuſion; and Baal being an infamous idol, the Holy Scripture makes theſe names end promiſcuouſly in Baal, or Boſheth, or Beſheth.

Ver. 9. And he made him king over Gilead.] Over all the tribes on the other ſide Jordan; which are comprehended under this name.

——And over the Aſhurites.] The Chaldee paraphraſt underſtands hereby the tribe of Aſhur; who tho' remote from Mahanaim, were forward to acknowledge him.

——And over Jezreel] A large and noble valley, on the borders of Zebulon, Iſſachar and Naphtali; who are all comprehended under this word.

——And over Ephraim, and over Benjamin.] Under whom the Simeonites are comprehended.

——And over all Iſrael.] All the tribes on this ſide Jordan, ſave the tribe of Judah.

Ver. 10. Iſh-boſheth Saul's ſon was forty years old when he began to reign over Iſrael.] Therefore he was born that very year, in which Saul was made king: For he reigned forty years, as St. Paul tells us, Acts xiii. 21.

——And reigned two years.] Before there was any hoſtility between him and David. So Ralbag expounds it, who makes this cohere with ver 12. it being a mere fancy of the Jews in Seder Olam Rabba, that the throne was vacant, and that there was no king in Iſrael for five years. Victorinus Strigelius's conjecture is far better: Who, after he had given the foregoing interpretation of Ralbag, adds, That after the war broke out between David and Iſh-boſheth, and David waxed ſtronger and ſtronger, chap. iii. 1. Iſh-boſheth being an unactive prince, and unfit to command, Abner took the adminiſtration of the government upon himſelf, and managed the war the other five years which paſſed before David came to the throne of Iſrael. Theſe five years the ſcripture doth not reckon as a part of Iſh-boſheth's reign, becauſe he had the mere name of a king, but no authority at all.

——But the houſe of Judah followed David.] Cloſely adher'd to him, and were entirely commanded by him.

Ver. 11. (And the Time that David was king in Hebron over the houſe of Judah, was ſeven years and ſix months.)] So long therefore Iſh-boſheth reigned over Iſrael. Unleſs we will ſuppoſe, either that the Iſraelites were five years deliberating whether he, or Mephiboſheth ſhould be king, (whoſe right it was by the laws of ſucceſſion) or that he reigning two years after the death of Saul, they were five years deliberating whether they ſhould acknowledge David or not; neither of which ſuppoſitions ſeems probable, as Ralbag thinks; who judiciouſly obſerves, that thoſe words, he reigned two years, are to be joined with ver. 12. and Abner the ſon of Ner went out, &c. That is, ſaith he, The two firſt years of his reign there was no war between the houſe of Saul and David; and then there had been no open war, if Abner had not been the author of it, &c.

Ver. 12. And Abner the ſon of Ner, and the ſervants of Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul.] The principal officers about the king.

——Went out from Mahanaim, to Gibeon.] They paſſed over Jordan, into the country of Benjamin, where Gibeon was, (Joſh. xviii 25) to fight with Judah, and to bring them into the obedience of Saul's ſon. It is obſervable, that David did not begin any hoſtility, but waited to ſee how God would diſpoſe things in his favour.

Ver. 13. And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, and the ſervants of David went out.] To oppoſe the deſigns of the Iſraelites: For Joab was the chief commander of David's forces, whom the principal officers of his houſhold attended.

——And met together by the pool of Gibeon: And they ſat down, the one on the one ſide of the pool, and the other on the other ſide of the pool.] The two armies faced one another, (as we now ſpeak) being parted only by the pool that was between them.

Ver. 14. And Abner ſaid to Joab.] We ſuppoſe David had commanded Joab not to begin the quarrel, but only to act the defenſive part; for he had ſworn to Saul, that he would not cut off his ſeed: and therefore would not willingly engage againſt Iſh-boſheth, 1 Sam. xxiv. 21.

——Let the young men now ariſe, and play before us, &c.] He deſires that ſome ſoldiers might be pickt out from the reſt, and make the two armies ſport, as the gladiators were wont to do in after-times among the Romans: Whereby alſo they might make a trial of their courage and ſtrength. So Joſephus ſaith, Abner was deſirous to learn ποτερ@ αὐτῶν ἀνδρειοτέρους στρατιώτας ἔχῃ, Which of the two had the braveſt ſoldiers.

Ver. 15. Then there aroſe and went over.] The pool of Gideon.

——By number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Iſh-boſheth the Son of Saul.] They ſtill were forward to begin the hoſtility: And Abner choſe this number out of Benjamin, for the honour of his own tribe, we ſuppoſe, and becauſe they were a valiant people; as appears by the ſtory in Judges xx.

——And twelve of the ſervants of David.] Whoſe valour, no doubt, had been proved in former exploits.

Ver. 16. And they caught every one his fellow.] That is, the ſervants of David, laſt mentioned, caught each of them one of the Benjamites that was his oppoſite.

——By the head.] That is, by the hair of his head, which it was the cuſtom to wear very long in thoſe days.

——And thruſt his ſword in his fellow's ſide.] That is, David's men killed every one of the Benjamites with whom they were each engaged: So ſome ſay Joſephus underſtood it; though we can find no ſuch thing in him.

——So they fell down together.] All the twelve men of Benjamin fell down dead together.

——Wherefore that place was called Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.] The Hebrew words ſignify, the field of ſtrong men; as hard and firm as a rock.

Ver. 17 And there was a very ſore battle that day.] The Iſraelites, enraged at the loſs of their valiant men, maintained a furious fight the reſt of that day.

——And Abner was beaten, and the men of Iſrael, before the ſervants of David.] Succeſs ſtill attended the men of Judah.

Ver. 18. And there were three ſons of Zeruiah there.] She was David's ſiſter, and therefore theſe were his nephews.

——Joab, and Abiſhai, and Aſahel.] All three very valiant men, and great commanders, as appears from 1 Chron. xxvii 7. where the laſt of them is mentioned as one of David's twelve captains over four and twenty thouſand men. See alſo chap. xi. 26. of that book.

——And Aſahel was as light of foot as a wild roe.] We noted in the foregoing chapter, and in other places, that to be ſwift of foot, to purſue the enemies, was a quality highly eſteemed in warriers. And therefore Plato would have this to be one of the exerciſes wherein youth ſhould be trained up, viz. racing. Ἐστιγὲν πάντων πολεμικώτατον ἡ σώμασ@ ὀξύτης πάντας· ἡ μὲν ἀπὸ τ ποδῶν, ἡ δ ἀπὸ τ χειρῶν &c. Lib. 8. De Legibus, p. 852. Edit. Serrani.

Ver. 19. And Aſahel purſued after Abner.] Being ambitious of the glory, either of killing or taking alive the greateſt man in Iſrael.

——And

——And in going he turned not to the right hand nor to the left, from following Abner.] Nothing could turn him aſide to purſue any other deſign; But he went directly forward, having Abner only in his eye.

Ver. 20. Then Abner looked behind him, and ſaid, Art thou Aſahel? And he anſwered, I am.] He addreſſes him in a civil manner, having no mind to kill him.

Ver. 21. And Abner ſaid to him, Turn thee aſide to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his armour.] That he might not return without ſome ſpoil, he bids him take one of his attendants, his arms and all, and be content with the glory of carrying away ſuch a priſoner. Thus Kimchi expounds it. Others thinks he bids him try his valour upon one of his ſervants, and diſarm him, and not venture to encounter him who was an old ſoldier.

——But Aſahel would not turn aſide from following of him.] Being poſſeſſed with a vain deſire of more glory, than it was reaſonable to expect.

Ver. 22. And Abner ſaid again to Aſahel, Turn thee aſide from following me: wherefore ſhould I ſmite thee to the ground? how then ſhould I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?] Who was a fierce man, and he knew would ſtudy revenge.

Ver. 23. Howbeit he refuſed to turn aſide: wherefore Abner with the hinder end of the ſpear ſmote him under the fifth rib, that the ſpear came out behind him.] Pierced quite through his liver and bowels. See chap. xx. 10. So R. Johannes, (in the Gemara Sanhedrim, cap. vi. ſect. 7.) ſaith the fifth rib is the place where the liver and gall are ſeated.

——And he fell down there, and died in the ſame place.] He died immediately upon the ſpot (as we ſpeak) not being able to go ſo much as one ſtep further. So dangerous it is for a man to confide in his own natural ſtrength, or to refuſe offers of peace, or deſpiſe a flying enemy, as Pellicanus here obſerves. The old ſaying was, If an enemy fly, make way for him.

——And it came to paſs, that as many as came to the place where Aſahel fell down and died, ſtood ſtill.] Ceaſed the purſuit; fearing perhaps the ſame fate, or that Aſahel's body ſhould be expoſed to any indignity.

Ver. 24. Joab alſo and Abiſhai purſued after Abner: and the ſun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah by the way of the wilderneſs of Gibeon.] They were not ſo nimble as Aſahel, and therefore could not overtake Abner; yet ſo furious, that the death of Aſahel could not ſtop them till they came to this place.

Ver. 25. And the children of Benjamin gathered themſelves together after Abner, and became one troop, and ſtood on the top of an hill.] Some of this tribe, of which Abner was, and who were valiant people, as we obſerved before, rallied, as we now ſpeak, and ſtood in a body, as if they would renew the fight.

Ver. 26. Then Abner called to Joab.] Who was on the top of another hill, ver. 24.

——And ſaid, Shall the ſword devour for ever?] There ought to be a meaſure ſet to our anger; which ſhould go down with the ſun, as the Apoſtle ſpeaks.

——Knoweſt thou not that it will be bitterneſs in the latter end?] In civil war, as Cicero ſpeaks, in the fourth book of his familiar Epiſtles, all things are miſerable, and nothing more miſerable than victory itſelf; which makes the conqueror do many things againſt his own will and inclination, to gratify thoſe by whom he conquers. Therefore he ſaith in another place, Extremum omnium malorum eſt belli civilis victoria, Victory in a civil war is the greateſt of all evils. Such was this; as he puts him in mind in the next words, that they who killed one another were brethren.

——How long ſhall it be then e're thou bid the people return from following their brethren?] They were all deſcended from one common father, and worſhipped all one and the ſame God.

Ver. 27. And Joab ſaid, As God liveth, unleſs thou hadſt ſpoken, ſurely then in the morning the people had gone up every one from following his brother.] He wiſhes he had been of this mind in the morning, for then there had been no fighting at all, if he had not deſired it, ver. 14. So Dr. Lightfoot paraphraſes this verſe, "If thou hadſt not "ſaid what thou didſt in the morning (Let the young "men ariſe, and play before us) ſurely the people had "gone every one from his brother: and there had been "never a blow ſtruck, but that thou didſt provoke it."

Ver. 28. So Joab blew a trumpet.] Cauſed a retreat to be ſounded.

——And all the people ſtood ſtill, and purſued after Iſrael no more, neither fought they any more.] Neither at that time, nor any other.

Ver. 29. And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and paſſed over Jordan.] They made all the haſte they could home; being afraid of truſting themſelves near to the army that had beaten them.

——And went through all Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.] Some think, by Bithron is meant the mountain of Bethor, mentioned Canticles ii. 16.

Ver. 30. And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together.] Returning from the purſuit, every one reſorted to the company to which he belonged.

——There lacked of David's ſervants nineteen men, and Aſahel.] This is an argument, that the twelve men of Judah, who began the fight in a combat with as many of Benjamin were not killed; for if they were, then there would have been but ſeven men killed in the battle, which is not probable.

Ver. 31. But the ſervants of David had ſmitten of Benjamin and of Abner's men, ſo that three hundred and threeſcore men died.] This loſs was not great in itſelf; for, it is likely, David had given order, his men ſhould be as ſparing as they could in killing their brethren, who were, he knew, to be his ſubjects.

Ver. 32. And they took up Aſahel, and buried him in the ſepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem.] We think Joſephus takes this right, who ſaith, Joab and his men lodged all night in the place of battle, and buried their dead; and then next morning carried Aſahel to be buried among his anceſtors.

——And Joab and his men went all night.] Having buried Aſael, they marched all the next night toward Hebron.

——And they came to Hebron at break of day.] Where they gave David an account of all this action.

CHAP. III.

1 During the war David ſtill waxeth ſtronger. 2 Six ſons were born to him in Hebron. 6 Abner diſpleaſed with Iſh-boſheth, 12 revolteth to David. 13 David requireth a condition to bring him his wife Michal. 17 Abner having communed with the Iſraelites, is feaſted by David, and diſmiſſed. 22 Joab returning from battle, is diſpleaſed with the king, and killeth Abner. 28 David curſeth Joab, 31 and mourneth for Abner.

NOW there was long war between the houſe of Saul, and the houſe of David: but David waxed ſtronger and ſtronger, and the houſe of Saul waxed weaker and weaker.

2 ¶ And unto David were ſons born in Hebron: and his firſt born was Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs.

3 And his ſecond, Chileab, of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite: and the third, Abſalom the ſon of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai king of Geſhur:

4 And the fourth Adonijah, the ſon of Haggith: and the fifth, Shephatiah the ſon of Abital:

5 And the ſixth, Ithream, by Eglah Davids wife: theſe were born to David in Hebron.

6 ¶ And

6 ¶ And it came to paſs while there was war between the houſe of Saul, and the houſe of David, that Abner made himſelf ſtrong for the houſe of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whoſe name was Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Iſh-boſheth ſaid to Abner, Wherefore haſt thou gone in unto my fathers concubine?

8 Then was Abner very wroth for the words of Iſh-boſheth, and ſaid, Am I a dogs head, which againſt Judah do ſhew kindneſs this day unto the houſe of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargeſt me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

9 So do God to Abner, and more alſo, except as the LORD hath ſworn to David, even ſo I do to him:

10 To tranſlate the kingdom from the houſe of Saul, and to ſet up the throne of David over Iſrael, and over Judah, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba.

11 And he could not anſwer Abner a word again, becauſe he feared him.

12 ¶ And Abner ſent meſſengers to David on his behalf, ſaying, Whoſe is the land? ſaying alſo, Make thy league with me, and behold, my hand ſhall be with thee, to bring about all Iſrael unto thee.

13 ¶ And he ſaid, Well, I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, that is, Thou ſhalt not ſee my face, except thou firſt bring Michal Sauls daughter, when thou comeſt to ſee my face.

14 And David ſent meſſengers to Iſh-boſheth Sauls ſon, ſaying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I eſpouſed to me for an hundred foreskins of the Philiſtines.

15 And Iſh-boſheth ſent, and took her from her husband, even from Phaltiel the ſon of Laiſh.

16 And her husband went with her along weeping behind her to Bahurim: then ſaid Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned.

17 ¶ And Abner had communication with the elders of Iſrael, ſaying, Ye ſought for David in times paſt to be king over you.

18 Now then do it; for the LORD hath ſpoken of David, ſaying, By the hand of my ſervant David I will ſave my people Iſrael out of the hand of the Philiſtines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

19 And Abner alſo ſpake in the ears of Benjamin: and Abner went alſo to ſpeak in the ears of David in Hebron, all that ſeemed good to Iſrael, and that ſeemed good to the whole houſe of Benjamin.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him: and David made Abner, and the men that were with him, a feaſt.

21 And Abner ſaid unto David, I will ariſe, and go, and will gather all Iſrael unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayſt reign over all that thine heart deſireth. And David ſent Abner away; and he went in peace.

22 ¶ And behold, the ſervants of David and Joab came from purſuing a troop, and brought in a great ſpoil with them (but Abner was not with David in Hebron, for he had ſent him away, and he was gone in peace.)

23 When Joab, and all the hoſt that was with him, were come, they told Joab, ſaying, Abner the ſon of Ner came to the king, and he hath ſent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 Then Joab came to the king, and ſaid, What haſt thou done? behold, Abner came unto thee, why is it that thou haſt ſent him away, and he is quite gone?

25 Thou knoweſt Abner the ſon of Ner, that he came to deceive thee, and to know thy going out, and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doſt.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, he ſent meſſengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah; but David knew it not.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab took him aſide in the gate to ſpeak with him quietly: and ſmote him there under the fifth rib, that he died, for the blood of Aſahel his brother.

28 ¶ And afterward, when David heard it, he ſaid, I and my kingdom are guiltleſs before the LORD for ever, from the blood of Abner the ſon of Ner:

29 Let it reſt on the head of Joab, and on all his fathers houſe, and let there not fail from the houſe of Joab one that hath an iſſue, or that is a leper, or that leaneth on a ſtaff, or that falleth on the ſword, or that lacketh bread.

30 So Joab and Abiſhai his brother ſlew Abner, becauſe he had ſlain their brother Aſahel at Gibeon in the battle.

31 ¶ And David ſaid to Joab, and to all the people that were with him, Rent your clothes, and gird you with ſackcloth, and mourn before Abner. And king David himſelf followed the bier.

32 And they buried Abner in Hebron: and the king lift up his voice, and wept at the grave of Abner; and all the people wept.

33 And the king lamented over Abner, and ſaid, Died Abner as a fool dieth?

34 Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters: as a man falleth before wicked men, ſo felleſt thou. And all the people wept again over him.

35 And when all the people came to cauſe David to eat meat while it was yet day, David ſware, ſaying, So do God to me, and more alſo, if I taſte bread or ought elſe, till the ſun be down.

36 And all the people took notice of it, and it pleaſed them: as whatſoever the king did, pleaſed all the people.

37 For all the people and all Iſrael underſtood that day, that it was not of the king to ſlay Abner the ſon of Ner.

38 And the king ſaid unto his ſervants, Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Iſrael?

39 And I am this day weak, though anointed king; and theſe men the ſons of Zeruiah be too hard for me: the LORD ſhall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedneſs.

Ver. 1. Now there was long war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David.] Their enmity continuing throughout the whole reign of Iſh-boſheth, it is probable there were many skirmiſhes between Iſrael and Judah, but no pitched battle that we read of; and the contrary ſeems to be affirmed in the preceding chapter, ver. 28.

——— But David waxed ſtronger and ſtronger, &c.] In all their rencounters the ſuperiority was on the ſide of David; and we may naturally ſuppoſe, that many of the Iſraelites came over to his party, which greatly contributed to his ſtrength, and weakned the houſe of Saul.

Ver. 2. And unto David were ſons born in Hebron.] He had no children, it ſeems, during his exile, or if he had, they were daughters.

——— And his firſt ſon was Amnon, of Ahinoam the Jezreeliteſs.] She was eſpouſed to him before Abigail, and brought forth his firſt-born ſon, who afterward proved a great affliction to him.

Ver. 3. And his ſecond, Chileab, of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.] We have no further account any where of this ſecond ſon; only he is called Daniel, 1 Chron. iii. 1. The Hebrew doctors ſay, that David called him Daniel when he was born, and that this was his primary name; becauſe, ſaid he, God hath judged, or vindicated me from Nabal. But he afterward called him Chileab, which ſignifies like to his father, becauſe he reſembled David in his countenance. They add, that David gave him this latter name, to ſilence the ſcoffers of that age, who ſaid Abigail had conceived this ſon by Nabal; for the confutation of which calumny God was pleaſed to order, that the faſhion of his face ſhould perfectly reſemble that of David.

——— And the third, Abſalom, the ſon of Maacah, the daughter of Talmai, king of Geſhur.] We read of the Geſhurites in the foregoing book, chap. xxvii. 8. upon whom, it is there ſaid, David made an inroad; and brought away this fair captive, a little before the death of Saul, as the Jews ſay; and they add, that he eſpouſed her when he came to Hebron, and had ſufficiently prepared her to be a proſelyte. But this account is very improbable, becauſe it is ſaid, that David ſlew all the women in that invaſion. We muſt therefore look for other Jeſhurites, whom we find in the north, as the fore-named were in the ſouth. See Deut. iii. 14. Joſh. xii. 5. How David came to obtain the daughter of the king of this people is not eaſy to determine. Perhaps he thought it policy to ſecure the friendſhip of the king of Geſhur, who lay near to Iſh-boſheth, and might be a curb to him, if he attempted any thing againſt Judah.

Ver. 4. And the fourth, Adonijah, the ſon of Haggith: and the fifth, Shephatiah, the ſon of Abital.] With reſpect to the former of theſe, we read, in the beginning of the next book, how his ambition occaſioned his deſtruction, (as did that of Abſalom) but we have no farther account of the other.

Ver. 5. And the ſixth, Ithream, by Eglah Davids wife.] As ſhe is the only one who is called David's wife, though the reſt were ſo likewiſe, the Jews have imagined from hence, that Michal, who was his firſt wife, is here called Eglah, becauſe ſhe was a very amiable woman, in whom he much delighted, when he firſt eſpouſed her. It is ſaid, indeed, chap. vi. ver. 23. of this book, that ſhe had no child until the day of her death; but the meaning is, ſhe was barren after ſhe had reproached David for dancing before the ark; but we are not to infer from thence, that ſhe never had a child before that time.

Ver. 6. And it came to paſs while there was war between the houſe of Saul and the houſe of David, that Abner made himſelf ſtrong for the houſe of Saul.] He went up and down through all the tribes of Iſrael to ſtrengthen the intereſt of his maſter, and confirm the people in their allegiance to him.

Ver. 7. And Saul had a concubine, whoſe name was Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah.] By whom he had two ſons, chap. xxi. 8.

——— And Iſh-boſheth ſaid to Abner, Wherefore haſt thou gone in unto my fathers concubine?] Abner, who had uſed all his endeavours to ſtrengthen the party of Iſh-boſheth, ſet ſo great a value upon his own ſervices, that he made no ſcruple to have a criminal intercourſe with one of the concubines of Saul. It appears, by the ſequel of the Jewiſh hiſtory, that it was a very high crime, amounting to no leſs than treaſon, to marry a king's widow, 1 Kings ii. 13, &c. much more therefore muſt it have been ſo to debauch her, as Abner did Rizpah. So that Iſh-boſheth, notwithſtanding his obligations to that general, could not avoid reſenting ſuch an affront to the royal dignity, as came little ſhort of an attempt upon his crown. Abner, however, was ſo offended at the reprimand he received from this prince, that he ſwore he would from that moment become a friend to David, and bring all the tribes under his obedience, ver. 8, 9, 10. Nor did he delay to make his words good, by privately ſending meſſengers, firſt to David, and then to the elders of Iſrael, in order to form a revolt. David returned for anſwer, that he would make a league with him, provided he would bring Michal, Saul's daughter, when he came to ſee his face, ver. 13. This was a very reaſonable condition, if Abner was in a capacity to accompliſh it. For Michal was David's firſt and beloved wife, and ſhe had been compelled to eſpouſe another man, who could not lawfully poſſeſs her, David not having given her any bill of divorce. There was ſomething of policy alſo in this demand; namely, that he might ingratiate himſelf with the Iſraelites, by manifeſting an extraordinary affection for the houſe of Saul.

Ver. 14. And David ſent meſſengers to Iſh-boſheth Sauls ſon, ſaying, Deliver me my wife Michal, &c.] We do not read what anſwer Abner returned to David, when he required the above-mentioned condition of him. But it is is probable he let David know, as the truth really was, that it was not in his power to bring Michal, without the consent of Ish-bosheth, whose sister, as well as subject, she was; or, at least, that it was not safe to attempt it; and therefore Abner advised David to send to her brother, who could not easily deny what he desired.

David followed this counsel of Abner, and it had all the success he wished; for Abner undoubtedly represented to Ish-bosheth, that David's demand was entirely just, and whether that prince had any suspicion of him or not, yet his circumstances were so tottering, that he dared not refuse him any thing; Abner therefore, accompanied by twenty men, went and presented Michal to David, who received her in a very gracious and affectionate manner. But as Abner was returning home, Joab, unknown to David, sent for him back to Hebron, under some friendly pretext, and killed him assoon as he was come to the gate of the city, under pretence, indeed, of revenging the death of his own brother Asahel; but much more likely, to rid himself of so powerful a rival. Assoon as David heard of it, he protested his innocence of that bloody deed, and vented his resentment in imprecations against the author of it; tho' his indignation certainly transported him into too great an excess, when he wished that all the family of Joab might suffer for the crime he alone had committed, ver. 29. David then caused Abner to be interred in a very honourable manner, and accompanied his corpse to the grave with all the tokens of sorrow and respect.

Ver. 33. And the king lamented over Abner.] Josephus looks upon what follows as a kind of epitaph upon Abner, who, as that author declares, was buried in a magnificent manner by David.

——— And said, Died Abner as a fool dieth?] By a fool, in Scripture, is frequently meant a wicked man, or a malefactor; and so the sense, according to this translation, is, Did he die by the hand of justice, for some notorious crime committed by him? Or did he die by his own folly? But the Hebrew words may be rendered thus, How like a fool died Abner? Or, should Abner have died like a fool? That is, what pity is it that so valiant a man should die by treachery, and when he was in no condition to defend himself!

Ver. 34. Thy hands were not bound, nor thy feet put into fetters.] He was not a prisoner, but had both hands and feet at liberty, and yet was incapable of employing them for his preservation. He was neither a notorious offender, nor a coward; but was murdered, in the most perfidious manner, by one in seeming friendship with him.

——As a man falleth before wicked men, so fellest thou.] That is, before a secret assassin.

——— And all the people wept.] When they heard this speech of the king, they were so affected, that it drew tears more plentifully from them.

Ver. 35. And when all the people came to cause David to eat meat, while it was yet day.] This was a custom among the Hebrews; whose friends came, after a funeral was over, to comfort those who had buried their dead, and send in provisions for a feast, it being supposed that the mourners themselves were so afflicted, as not to be able to think of their necessary food.

———David sware, saying, So do God to me, and more also, if I taste bread or ought else, till the sun be down.] He determined to keep a rigid fast, which did not end till the sun was set. Hence it appears, that the Jews buried their dead by day.

Ver. 36. And all the people took notice of it, and it pleased them: as whatsoever the king did, pleased all the people.] They were pleased with the honour he had rendered to the remains of this great man, and he thereby ingratiated himself with the people to such a degree, that they were disposed to put the best construction upon all his actions.

Ver. 38. And the king said unto his servants, Know ye not, that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?] He bids them consider the birth of Abner, as likewise his power, authority, and valour, together with all his other excellent qualities; and they would then not be surprised that he had buried him with so much pomp, and mourned so heavily for him.

Ver. 39. And I am this day weak.] In the Hebrew it is tender, that is, his kingdom was not then settled and confirmed.

——— Though anointed king.] Or, as the words may be translated, and anointed king; that is, not born to a kingdom, but newly called to it, without any hereditary right to the authority, which made it more slender than if it had been of a long duration. This seems to have been the reason why he did not then punish Joab for the murder of Abner; and prudence made him defer it till a better opportunity. For Joab had been very faithful to him in his adversity, and had an extraordinary power among the military men; he was likewise an excellent soldier, which made him very necessary to David, in a time of civil war and discord between Judah and Israel.

—— And these men the sons of Zeruiah be too hard for me.] Joab and his brother had gained such an interest in the soldiery, and among the people both in the court and country, that David knew not how to deal with them. Yet he not only sufficiently shewed, that he detested their actions, but that he did not stand in awe of them. For he commanded Joab to attend Abner's funeral, with his clothes rent, and in sackcloth; and to his face commended Abner highly, and condemned his murder of him, ver. 31, 33, 34. which was certainly a great mortification to him, and a kind of penance for the crime he had committed.

——The Lord shall reward the doer of evil according to his wickedness.] David was confident, that God would punish Joab, as he deserved, in due time. And this may be considered as a prayer, that God would not suffer him to escape his Divine Vengeance.

CHAP. IV.

1 The Israelites being troubled at the death of Abner, 2 Baanah and Rechab slay Ish-bosheth, and bring his head to Hebron. 9 David causeth them to be slain, and Ish-bosheths head to be buried.

AND when Sauls son heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, his hands were feeble, and all the Israelites were troubled.

2 And Sauls son had two men that were captains of bands: the name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the other Rechab, the sons of Rimmon a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin: (for Beeroth also was reckoned to Benjamin;

3 And the Beerothites fled to Gittaim, and were sojourners there until this day.)

4 And Jonathan, Sauls son, had a son, that was lame of his feet, and was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurse took him up, and fled: and it came to pass as she made haste to flee, that he fell and became lame; and his name was Mephibosheth.

5 And the sons of Rimmon the Beerothite, Rechab and Baanah, went, and came about the heat of the day to the house of Ish-bosheth, who lay on a bed at noon.

6 And they came thither into the midst of the house, as though they would have fetched wheat; and they smote him under the fifth rib; and Rechab and Baanah his brother escaped.

7 For when they came into the house, he lay on his bed in his bed-chamber, and they ſmote him, and ſlew him, and beheaded him, and took his head, and gat them away through the plain all night.

8 And they brought the head of Iſh-boſheth unto David to Hebron, and ſaid to the king, Behold the head of Iſh-boſheth the ſon of Saul, thine enemy, which ſought thy life; and the LORD hath avenged my lord the king this day of Saul and of his ſeed.

9 ¶ And David anſwered Rechab and Baanah his brother, the ſons of Rimmon the Beerothite, and ſaid unto them, As the LORD liveth, who hath redeemed my ſoul out of all adverſity,

10 When one told me, ſaying, Behold, Saul is dead (thinking to have brought good tidings) I took hold of him, and ſlew him in Ziklag, who thought that I would have given him a reward for his tidings:

11 How much more when wicked men have ſlain a righteous perſon in his own houſe, upon his bed? ſhall I not therefore now require his blood of your hand, and take you away from the earth?

12 And David commanded his young men, and they ſlew them, and cut off their hands and their feet, and hanged them up over the pool in Hebron: but they took the head of Iſh-boſheth, and buried it in the ſepulchre of Abner in Hebron.

Ver. 1. And when Sauls ſon heard that Abner was dead in Hebron, his hands were feeble, and all the Iſraelites were troubled.] Iſh-boſheth ſoon heard of the death of Abner, and as that general had been the main ſupport of his kingdom, he loſt all ſpirit, and began to be apprehenſive that David would now be too ſtrong for him. The Iſraelites were likewiſe troubled, becauſe the treaty with David was broke off by the death of Abner, and they foreſaw, that ſome great change would be occaſioned by the loſs of ſo great a man.

Ver. 2. And Sauls ſon had two men that were captains of bands.] Captains, perhaps, of two companies of the king's guards.

———The name of the one was Baanah, and the name of the other Rechab, the ſons of Rimmon a Beerothite, of the children of Benjamin.] They were ſprung from the king's own tribe, which induced him to repoſe the greateſt confidence in them.

——— (For Beeroth was alſo reckoned to Benjamin.] Tho' it was now poſſeſſed by the Philiſtines, yet it belonged to the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 25. Beeroth was a city that firſt belonged to the Gibeonites, Joſh. ix. 17. Euſebius declares, that it was ſituated at the diſtance of ſeven miles from Jeruſalem, in the way toward Nicopolis. St. Jerom, inſtead of Nicopolis, reads Neapolis, or Naplouſe; but Mr. Realand prefers the reading of Euſebius, Palæſtin. Illuſtrat. lib. 3. p. 618, 619.

—— And the Beerothites fled to Gittaim, and were ſojourners there until this day.)] When Saul was ſlain, ſeveral Iſraelites fled from their cities, and the Philiſtines took poſſeſſion of them, among which was Beeroth, which had likewiſe been forſaken by its inhabitants. There was a place called Gittaim in the ſame tribe of Benjamin, Nehem. xi. 33. but that can hardly be the ſame as the Gittaim here mentioned; for the Beerothites, in all probability, fled to a greater diſtance from the Philiſtines. The word Gittaim has the ſame import with Gath, which ſignifies a preſs; wherefore it is no wonder there ſhould be ſeveral places of this name in Paleſtine.

Why the Sacred Hiſtorian ſhould here inſert this account of the Beerothites, may be difficult to determine. Perhaps it was to ſhew, that theſe two brethren, Baanah and Rechab, were ſoldiers of fortune, whoſe neceſſities compelled them to ſeek for a ſupport, and which they obtained at the court of Iſh-boſheth.

Ver. 4. And Jonathan, Sauls ſon, had a ſon that was lame of his feet, and was five years old when the tidings came of Saul and Jonathan out of Jezreel, and his nurſe took him up and fled, &c.] This ſeems to be related, in order to ſhew what it was that emboldened theſe two captains to commit the horrid action which is related in the two following verſes; becauſe he who was the next avenger of blood, was not only very young, but likewiſe lame, and conſequently unable to purſue them.

Theſe wretches therefore reſolved to deſtroy Iſh-boſheth, in hopes of recommending themſelves to David, by that impious barbarity. They accordingly took the opportunity of the heat of the day, when he was lain down on his bed, to come into his houſe, under a pretence of fetching their allowance of corn; and to enter into his chamber, where they barbarouſly murdered the ſleeping prince; and having cut off his head, fled away with it unperceived, to Hebron, where they preſented it to David, with their congratulations upon the death of his competitor, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8.

It was hardly to be expected that David, who had puniſhed the young Amalekite with death, for pretending to have killed Saul, could forbear expreſſing a much greater horror at this more inhuman regicide; or that he would inflict a milder puniſhment upon the authors of it, whatever advantage might redound to his affairs from it. Accordingly he commanded them to be immediately put to death, and their hands and feet to be cut off, and hung up over the pool in Hebron. As for the head of the unfortunate Iſh-boſheth, David cauſed it to be buried in the ſepulchre of Abner, which was alſo in the ſame city.

CHAP. V.

1 The tribes come to Hebron to anoint David over Iſrael. 4 Davids age. 6 He taking Zion from the Jebuſites, dwelleth in it. 11 Hiram ſendeth to David. 13 Eleven ſons are born to him in Jeruſalem. 17 David directed by God, ſmiteth the Philiſtines at Baal-Perazim, 22 And again at the mulberry-trees.

THEN came all the tribes of Iſrael to David unto Hebron, and ſpake, ſaying, Behold, we are thy bone and thy fleſh.

2 Alſo in time paſt when Saul was king over us, thou waſt he that leddeſt out and broughteſt in Iſrael: and the LORD ſaid to thee, Thou ſhalt feed my people Iſrael, and thou ſhalt be a captain over Iſrael.

3 So all the elders of Iſrael came to the king to Hebron, and king David made a league with them in Hebron before the LORD: and they anointed David king over Iſrael.

4 ¶ David was thirty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years.

5 In Hebron he reigned over Judah ſeven years and ſix months, and in Jeruſalem ſalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Iſrael and Judah.

6 ¶ And the king and his men went to Jeruſalem unto the Jebuſites, the inhabitants of the land: which ſpake unto David, ſaying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou ſhalt not come in hither: thinking, David cannot come in hither.

7 Nevertheleſs, David took the ſtrong hold of Zion: the ſame is, the city of David.

8 And David ſaid on that day, Whoſoever getteth up to the gutter, and ſmiteth the Jebuſites, and the lame, and the blind, that are hated of Davids ſoul, he ſhall be chief and captain: wherefore they ſaid, The blind and the lame ſhall not come into the houſe.

9 So David dwelt in the fort, and called it, The city of David; and David built round about, from Millo and inward.

10 And David went on, and grew great, and the LORD God of hoſts was with him.

11 ¶ And Hiram king of Tyre ſent meſſengers to David, and cedar-trees, and carpenters and maſons: and they built David an houſe.

12 And David perceived that the LORD had eſtabliſhed him king over Iſrael, and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Iſraels ſake.

13 ¶ And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jeruſalem, after he was come from Hebron: and there were yet ſons and daughters born to David.

14 And theſe be the names of thoſe that were born unto him in Jeruſalem; Shammuah, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon,

15 Ibhar alſo, and Eliſhua, and Nepheg, and Japhia,

16 And Eliſhama, and Eliada, and Eliphalet.

17 ¶ But when the Philiſtines heard that they had anointed David king over Iſrael, all the Philiſtines came up to ſeek David; and David heard of it, and went down to the hold.

18 The Philiſtines alſo came and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.

19 And David enquired of the LORD, ſaying, Shall I go up to the Philiſtines? wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD ſaid unto David, Go up: for I will doubtleſs deliver the Philiſtines into thine hand.

20 And David came to Baal-perazim, and David ſmote them there, and ſaid, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place, Baal-perazim.

21 And there they left their images, and David and his men burnt them.

22 ¶ And the Philiſtines came up yet again, and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.

23 And when David enquired of the LORD, he ſaid, Thou ſhalt not go up: but fetch a compaſs behind them, and come upon them over-againſt the mulberry-trees.

24 And let it be when thou heareſt the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees, that then thou ſhalt beſtir thyſelf: for then ſhall the LORD go out before thee, to ſmite the hoſt of the Philiſtines.

25 And David did ſo, as the LORD had commanded him; and ſmote the Philiſtines from Geba, until thou come to Gazer.

Ver. 1. Then came all the tribes of Iſrael to David unto Hebron, and ſpake, ſaying, We are thy bone and thy fleſh.] David by this time had reigned in Hebron, over Judah, about ſeven years and a half, and when the reſt of the tribes heard of the death of Iſh-boſheth, they ſent ambaſſadors from each tribe, to pay their homage to him. They were not overcome by the arms, but by the piety and juſtice of David, to acknowledge him their king. For which, they alledge ſeveral reaſons. The firſt in general, that he was qualified by the law of God, Deut. xvii. 15. which required they ſhould chooſe one of their brethren, and not a ſtranger. Now David was of the ſame blood with them, being deſcended from the ſame common father Iſrael.

Ver. 2. Alſo in time paſt when Saul was king over us, thou waſt he that leddeſt out and broughteſt in Iſrael.] Thou waſt our chief commander in our ſucceſsful expeditions againſt the Philiſtines; and thy valour and good conduct, which have rendered thee the darling of the people, qualify thee more than any other, for the throne of Iſrael.

——— And the Lord ſaid to thee, Thou ſhalt feed my people Iſrael, &c.] This was the chief argument of all; namely, that God, they knew, had deſigned him long ago for their king; having ſaid, by the prophet Samuel, that he ſhould feed, that is, rule and govern them, and fight their battles. We do not read theſe words any where before now: But Samuel having anointed him, undoubtedly repreſented his office to him under the name of the paſtor of the people.

Ver 3. So all the elders of Iſrael came to the king to Hebron] He gave the meſſengers ſuch a gracious reception, and ſo thankfully declared his acceptance of the offer they made him, that, upon their return with his anſwer, the elders of Iſrael, by whom are meant the chief perſons of authority in every tribe, came to wait upon him, in the name of the reſt of that tribe whom they repreſented.

——— And king David made a league with them in Hebron.] Whereby he obliged himſelf to govern them according to the laws of God; and the people, on their part, promiſed fidelity and obedience to him.

——— Before the Lord.] The ark of God's preſence was not in Hebron; and therefore it may be asked how it could be ſaid, that he made a league before the Lord?

The anſwer is obvious, David was now in the congregation of the mighty, or magiſtrates, where God uſed to be preſent, Pſalm lxxxii. 1. In the publick aſſembly now met together in God's name, and fear, and, as in his preſence, to call upon, and appeal to him, as the witneſs and judge of their tranſactions.

——— And they anointed David king over Iſrael.] They anointed him by the miniſtration of the high prieſt whoſe office it was, and thereby teſtified their conſent that he ſhould reign over them. He was anointed three times; firſt by Samuel, in the houſe of his father Jeſſe, 1 Sam. xvi. 13. Secondly, when the tribe of Judah owned him for their king, chap. ii. of this book, ver. 4. And now, when all Iſrael did the ſame. For which, Abarbinel aſſigns this reaſon; "David's unction was repeated ſo often, that it "might be the foundation, and root, and principle, of all "his poſterity." Who, unleſs any controverſy aroſe about the ſucceſſion, needed no unction, ſince they were already anointed in him.

Ver. 6. And the king and his men went to Jeruſalem.] He determined to wreſt this city from the Jebuſites, who hitherto had poſſeſſed a noble part of it, namely, the fort of Zion; but the Iſraelites dwelt in the other part of the city. We ſhall have an opportunity of deſcribing this celebrated city, in the courſe of this work.

——— Unto the Jebuſites the inhabitants of the land.] That is, of this part of the land.

——— Which ſpake unto David, ſaying, Except thou take away the blind and the lame, thou ſhalt not come in hither: thinking David cannot come in hither.] They imagined their fortreſs to be ſo impregnable, that, in a vein of contempt, they told David the blind and the lame were able to defend it againſt him, and all his forces. This ſeems to be the natural meaning of the paſſage before us. There, however, are ſeveral expoſitors, who, by the blind and the lame, underſtand the images of the falſe deities of the Jebuſites, and give this turn to their expreſſions, Our gods, whom ye call lame and blind, that have eyes and ſee not, feet and walk not, they ſhall defend us, and you muſt overcome them before you can conquer us. But we prefer the former ſenſe, as being moſt eaſy, natural, and proper; whereas the latter is metaphorical, and ſeems doubtful and forced.

Ver. 7. Nevertheleſs David took the ſtrong hold of Zion: the ſame is the city of David.] This heroic prince was not diſcouraged from his enterpriſe by the ſarcaſtical language of his adverſaries, but he aſſaulted and took the fort, and made it his royal ſeat.

Ver. 8. And David ſaid on that day, Whoſoever getteth up to the gutter, and ſmiteth the Jebuſites, and the lame and the blind, that are hated of David's ſoul, he ſhall be chief and captain.] We know not how our tranſlators came to tranſpoſe the words, "he that ſmiteth the Jebu-"ſites," which in the Hebrew are firſt. "He that "ſmiteth the Jebuſites, let him throw down into the "ditch (which was by the wall) both the blind and the "lame, whom David extremely hates." Thus Bochart tranſlates the words, and if his verſion be admitted, there will be no need to add theſe words, "he ſhall be chief "and captain," out of 1 Chron. xi. 6. to make out the ſenſe, which is compleat without them.

——— Wherefore they ſaid, The blind and the lame ſhall not come into the houſe.] Or, as it is in the margin, "be-"cauſe they had ſaid, even the blind and the lame, he "ſhall not come into the houſe." That is, becauſe they had inſulted him with the blind and lame, as if theſe could defend the fort, and prevent him from entring into it: He was highly provoked to wiſh they might be thrown headlong from their walls into the ditch. And then by the houſe is not meant either the houſe of David, or the houſe of the Lord, as many take it, but that very fort wherein the Jebuſites had dwelt, and from which they were now excluded.

Ver. 9. So David dwelt in the fort, and called it, The city of David; and David built round about, from Millo, and inward.] The fort was not capacious enough to contain the whole court of David, together with all his guards, and others who had occaſion to reſort thither, and therefore he raiſed additional buildings about it, from Millo, which ſome take for a low place between the fort and the city, and which being now filled with people, was diſtinguiſhed by the name of Millo, which ſignifies filled up.

Ver. 10. And David went on and grew great, and the Lord God of hoſts was with him.] He proceeded to the enlargement of his dominions, as well as his royal city; and all his undertakings were attended with proſperity, becauſe he was bleſſed by that God who commands the armies of heaven and earth.

Ver. 11. And Hiram king of Tyre ſent meſſengers to David, and cedar-trees, &c.] Ancient hiſtory, both ſacred and profane, is ſilent as to the ſeries of the kings who reigned at Tyre, before Abibal the father of Hiram, with whom Joſephus, and Theophilus Antiochenus, begin the ſucceſſion; with which they have furniſhed us from Menander the Epheſian, and Dius, both authors of unqueſtionable credit, as Joſephus repreſents them, (Cont. Apion. lib. 1.) Dius, who was by birth a Phœnician, compiled the hiſtory of Tyre, from the public records, which were carefully preſerved in that city. And Menander compiled the lives and actions of princes both Greek and Barbarian, as the ſame Joſephus tells us, from the public archives of the places he treats of.

The firſt king of Tyre, mentioned by theſe hiſtorians, as quoted by Joſephus and Theophilus, is Abibal, as Joſephus calls him, or Abeimal, as he is named by Theophilus. He was cotemporary with David, and probably joined with the neighbouring nations againſt him, ſince David counts the inhabitants of Tyre among his enemies, Pſalm lxxxiii. 7. The Tyrian officers, who ſerved the Philiſtines againſt Samuel, as we are told by the ſon of Sirach, Ecclus. xlvi. might have been ſent by him.

Abibal was ſucceeded by his ſon Hiram, whom Theophilus ſometimes calls Hieromus, and ſometimes Hieromenus; Joſephus, Hiram and Irom; Tatian and Zonarus, Chiramus. This prince maintained a ſtrict friendſhip with David, to whom he ſent ambaſſadors, probably to congratulate him upon his victory over the Jebuſites, and to conclude an alliance with him; and he likewiſe preſented him with cedar-trees, and ſent ſkilful workmen to build him a palace in Jeruſalem; and he is ſaid in Scripture to have been ever a lover of David, 1 Kings v. 1.

Ver. 12. And David perceived that the Lord had eſtabliſhed him king over Iſrael, and that he had exalted his kingdom for his people Iſrael's ſake.] It is an excellent reflection which Pelicanus made long ago upon theſe words: "This is the greateſt grace of a king, that he certainly "believes himſelf to be made a king by God, for the ſake "of his people: And let him often call to mind, the "people were not created or ordained by God for the "king."

Ver. 13. And David took him more concubines and wives out of Jeruſalem, &c.] The difference between a wife and a concubine, the Talmudiſts generally ſay was, that the latter had neither dowry ſettled upon her, nor was taken with all the rites and ſolemnities of marriage; notwithſtanding which, ſhe was a wife of a lower rank. How many David had of both ſorts is not certain. We read, indeed, of ſix wives whom he had before, chap. iii. 2, &c. and the Jews, after their way, endeavour to prove from chap. xi. 8. of this book, that he had eighteen in all; which number it was not lawful for the king to exceed: And the Jews believe, that all Solomon's miſcarriages were owing to his exceeding that number.

———And there were yet ſons and daughters born to David.] It was eſteemed a piece of political wiſdom in princes, to endeavour to have many children, that by matching them into many potent families, their intereſt might be ſtrengthned.

Ver. 14. And theſe be the names of thoſe that were born unto him in Jeruſalem; Shammuah, and Shobab, and Nathan, and Solomon.] Theſe are the very ſame with thoſe in 1 Chron. iii. 5. if we except a ſmall variation in the firſt.

Ver. 15. Ibhar alſo, and Eliſhua, &c.] There are only ſeven mentioned in this and the following verſe; but in 1 Chron. iii. 8. there are nine. Of which difference Kimchi gives this account, namely, that mention is here made only of the ſons he had by his wives; but there ſome are added which he had by his concubines, which doth not well agree with what there follows, ver. 9.

Ver. 17. But when the Philiſtines heard that they had anointed David king over Iſrael, all the Philiſtines came up to ſeek David.] They ſeem to have been quiet during the war between Iſh-boſheth and Judah, hoping perhaps that they they would deſtroy one another; but when once David began to reign without a competitor, they thought it incumbent on them to beſtir themſelves.

——— And David heard of it, and went down to the hold.] Intelligence being brought him of their motions, he went from the fort of Sion to ſome other ſtrong place below, where his army might conveniently rendezvous.

Ver. 18. The Philiſtines alſo came and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.] Which is tranſlated, the valley of giants, Joſh. xv. 8. It lay weſtward from Jeruſalem, which city the Philiſtines perhaps intended to aſſault.

Ver. 19. And David enquired of the Lord, ſaying, Shall I go up to the Philiſtines? &c.] David would not truſt to the place of ſtrength whither he had retreated, neither did he intend to act merely upon the defenſive. He therefore enquired of the Lord, whether he ſhould advance and attack the Philiſtines, and God vouchſafed to give him ſuch a favourable anſwer, as immediately diſſipated all apprehenſions of their great numbers.

Ver. 20. And David came to Baal-perazim.] For thither the Philiſtines marched from Rephaim, where they firſt pitched; as appears from 1 Chron. xiv. 11. Here David defeated their army with great ſlaughter, and then ſaid, "The Lord hath broken forth upon mine enemies "before me, as the breach of waters," that is, he hath overwhelmed and ſcattered them, as waters, when they make a breach in a bank, overflow, and bear away all before them.

——— Therefore he called the name of that place Baal-perazim.] That it might remind him and his poſterity of the great power and goodneſs which God manifeſted to Iſrael in this place, where the Philiſtines were ſtruck with ſuch a conſternation, that they forgot, when they fled, to carry off their gods. Baal-Perazim ſignifies the Lord of diviſions, or the divider.

Ver. 21. And there they left their images.] Which they had brought into the field, to be carried before their hoſt, as an indication that their gods were preſent among them. Thus we read, 2 Chron. xxv. 14. that the Edomites had their gods with them when they fought with Amaziah. And thoſe pagans learnt this from the Iſraelites, who carried the ark, the ſymbol of God's preſence, in their army, when they went to encounter the Philiſtines, who ſaw and took it, in the ſame manner as the Iſraelites now captivated their images. But obſerve the difference between the ſacred Ark, and theſe ſenſeleſs idols. The Ark, when it fell into the hands of the Philiſtines, plagued them in a dreadful manner; but their images had no power to injure the Iſraelites, nor ſecure themſelves from being burnt by them.

Ver. 22. And the Philiſtines came up yet again, and ſpread themſelves in the valley of Rephaim.] They were ſenſible, that their all lay at ſtake, and therefore muſtered up their whole ſtrength on this occaſion. Joſephus indeed ſuppoſes they were unable to raiſe a conſiderable army themſelves, and that they were joined by the Syrians and Phœnicians. As a proof of which he alledges, that they returned home upon their firſt defeat, and came back to the charge again with thrice the number of men they had before, and drew up in the ſame place where the former battle was fought; and that they were again miraculouſly defeated with very great eaſe, and put to flight with the loſs of all their baggage, and their gods, (Antiq. l. 7. c. 4.) Joſephus is very fond of trebling the forces of a people vanquiſhed by his countrymen; but why he ſhould imagine the Philiſtines were reduced to ſo low an ebb, as to be unable to maintain a war againſt David with their own forces, we do not clearly perceive, even tho' we ſhould allow of the great ſlaughter and deſtruction that author makes of them, in ſome of their preceding battles.

Ver. 23. And when David enquired of the Lord.] Tho' he had already been ſo ſucceſsful, yet he would not make any new attempt without the previous direction of God, to whom he was ſenſible that he owed the former victory.

——— He ſaid, Thou ſhalt not go up.] That is, not directly, to engage them in a pitched battle, as he did before.

—— But fetch a compaſs behind them.] Where they were not apprehenſive of any danger.

——— And come upon them over-againſt the mulberry-trees.] A ſituation well known to David, who was now taught by God himſelf not to expect victory always by main ſtrength, but ſometimes to make uſe of ſtratagems.

Ver. 24. And let it be when thou heareſt the ſound of a going in the tops of the mulberry-trees.] The Hebrew word beroſhe ſhould not have been render'd in the tops, but in the beginnings, or the very entrance into the plantation of the mulberry-trees; where God intended to make a ſound, as if a vaſt number of men were marching, to fall upon the Philiſtines. The Hebrew word roſch ſignifies not only the head, but the beginning of any thing. As in Nahum iii. 10. the top, as it is in our verſion, tho' it ought to be tranſlated, the head of every ſtreet, is the beginning of thoſe ſtreets. And, Iſaiah li. 20. Jer. xxii. 6. Gilead is called the head of Libanus, becauſe Libanus begins where Gilead ends.

——— That then thou ſhalt beſtir thyſelf.] Thou ſhalt then fall upon the Philiſtines with all the bravery thou canſt exert.

——— For then ſhall the Lord go out before thee, to ſmite the hoſt of the Philiſtines.] By cauſing them to hear the dreadful ſound of a mighty hoſt coming to aſſault them; in conſequence of which they ſhould be ſtruck with panic terrors, and have no ſuſpicion of the approach of David's army in their rear.

Ver. 25. And David did ſo, as the Lord had commanded him; and ſmote the Philiſtines from Geba, until thou come to Gazer.] He purſued them to the very confines of their own land; for Joſephus ſaith concerning Gazer, ἥδε ἔστιν ὅρος αὐτῶν τῆ χώρας, that it was the border of their country.

Geba, or Gabaa, ſignifies a hill, and therefore it is not at all ſurpriſing, to ſee ſo many places, in a mountainous country like Judæa, called Gibeah, Gibeon, Gabbutha, Gibethon, Gabbath, Gaba or Geba; all which ſignify no more than an eminence.

CHAP. VI.

1 David fetcheth the ark from Kirjath-jearim on a new cart. 6 Uzzah is ſmitten at Perez-uzzah. 11 God bleſſeth Obed-Edom for the ark. 12 David bringeth the ark into Zion with ſacrifices, danceth before it, for which Michal deſpiſeth him. 17 He placeth it in a tabernacle with great joy and feaſting. 20 Michal reproving David for his religious joy, is childleſs to her death.

AGAIN David gathered together all the choſen men of Iſrael, thirty thouſand.

2 And David aroſe, and went with all the people that were with him, from Baale of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God, whoſe name is called by the name of the LORD of hoſts, that dwelleth between the cherubims.

3 And they ſet the ark of God upon a new cart, and brought it out of the houſe of Abinadab that was in Gibeah: and Uzzah and Ahio the ſons of Abinadab, drave the new cart.

4 And they brought it out of the houſe of Abinadab, which was at Gibeah, accompanying the ark of God; and Ahio went before the ark.

5 And David and all the houſe of Iſrael played before the LORD on all manner of inſtruments made of fir wood, even on harps, and on pſalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

6 ¶ And

6 ¶ And when they came to Nachons threſhing-floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it, for the oxen ſhook it.

7 And the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt Uzzah, and God ſmote him there for his error, and there he died by the ark of God.

8 And David was diſpleaſed, becauſe the LORD had made a breach upon Uzzah: and he called the name of the place, Perez-uzzah to this day.

9 And David was afraid of the LORD that day, and ſaid, How ſhall the ark of the LORD come to me?

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David: but David carried it aſide into the houſe of Obed-edom the Gittite.

11 And the ark of the LORD continued in the houſe of Obed-edom the Gittite, three months: and the LORD bleſſed Obed-edom, and all his houſhold.

12 ¶ And it was told king David, ſaying, The LORD hath bleſſed the houſe of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, becauſe of the ark of God. So David went and brought up the ark of God from the houſe of Obed-edom, into the city of David, with gladneſs.

13 And it was ſo, that when they that bare the ark of the LORD, had gone ſix paces, he ſacrificed oxen and fatlings.

14 And David danced before the LORD with all his might, and David was girded with a linen ephod.

15 So David and all the houſe of Iſrael brought up the ark of the LORD with ſhouting, and with the ſound of the trumpet.

16 And as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, Michal Sauls daughter looked through a window, and ſaw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and ſhe deſpiſed him in her heart.

17 ¶ And they brought in the ark of the LORD, and ſet it in his place, in the midſt of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it: and David offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, before the LORD.

18 And as ſoon as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, he bleſſed the people in the name of the LORD of hoſts.

19 And he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Iſrael, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of fleſh, and a flagon of wine: ſo all the people departed every one to his houſe.

20 ¶ Then David returned to bleſs his houſhold: and Michal the daughter of Saul came out to meet David, and ſaid, How glorions was the king of Iſrael to day, who uncovered himſelf to day in the eyes of the handmaids of his ſervants, as one of the vain fellows ſhameleſly uncovereth himſelf!

21 And David ſaid unto Michal, It was before the LORD, which choſe me before thy father, and before all his houſe, to appoint me ruler over the people of the LORD, over Iſrael: therefore will I play before the LORD.

22 And I will yet be more vile than thus, and will be baſe in mine own ſight: and of the maid-ſervants which thou haſt ſpoken of, of them ſhall I be had in honour.

23 Therefore Michal the daughter of Saul had no child until the day of her death.

Ver. 1. Again, David gathered together all the choſen men of Iſrael, thirty thouſand.] The extraordinary ſucceſs with which the arms of David had been crowned in his wars with the Philiſtines, and the univerſal peace which then reigned through the whole kingdom, inſpired that pious prince with the higheſt ſentiments of gratitude and religion, and made him deſirous of rendring his city, the center, as it were, of God's worſhip, by tranſporting thither the ſacred ark, which had continued almoſt fifty years at Kirjath-jearim, Archbiſhop Uſher reckons that it was brought from Gilgal to Shiloh, in the firſt ſabbatical year, and that it was likewiſe removed in ſuch another year from Kirjath-jearim to the city of David; and that the 68th Pſalm was ſung by the people who accompanied this ſolemn proceſſion. (Ann. p. 36.)

David ſummoned the principal perſons in Iſrael to attend the ark; or, as others will have it, the moſt mighty men, to the number of thirty thouſand, to be a guard to it, in caſe any of their enemies ſhould attempt to diſturb the intended ſolemnity.

Ver. 2. And David aroſe, and went with all the people that were with him, from Baale of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God.] Baale of Judah is the ſame with Kirjath-jearim, 1 Chron. xiii. 6. and it is called Baalah, Joſh. xv. 9. and Kirjath-baal, Joſh. xv. 60. and here Baale of Judah, becauſe it belonged to that tribe. Some think there is a great difficulty here, becauſe it is ſaid they went from Baale, whereas the author of the 1ſt book of Chron. declares, chap. xiii. 6. they went to Baale; But there is no diſagreement in theſe two places: For they muſt go to it, before they could come from it. And here mention is made of their motion from thence, after they had gone to it.

——Whoſe name is called by the name of the Lord of hoſts, that dwelleth between the cherubims.] Ludovicus de Dieu thinks the moſt ſimple and genuine conſtruction of theſe words may be formed, by referring the word aſcher (which) not to the ark, but unto God, and tranſlating them thus: "Who is called the name, the name of "the Lord of hoſts, ſitting on the cherubims, upon it." This, ſays he, is an extraordinary commendation of the ark, that it is the ark of that God, who being incomprehenſible and unbounded in his eſſence, is called abſolutely the name, even the name of the Lord of hoſts, who ſitteth on the cherubims over the ark.

Ver. 3. And they ſet the ark of God upon a new cart, &c.] The ark, in conſequence of the reſolution which had been taken for its removal, was placed upon a new cart, and brought from the houſe of Abinadab to Jeruſalem, accompanied by David and his court, and likewiſe by multitudes of prieſts and Levites, who ſang and played upon various inſtruments, and by a numerous concourſe of people from all the parts of the kingdom. There however was a very great irregularity in placing the ark upon a cart, ſince, according to the law of Moſes, it ought to have been carried upon the ſhoulders of this Kohathites, Numb. vii. 9. for which reaſon no waggons were allowed them, as there were to the reſt of the Levites, for carrying ſeveral parts of the tabernacle. Why the ark was thus placed on a cart, is not eaſy to be accounted for, unleſs it were in imitation of the Philiſtines, who did the ſame, 1 Sam. vi. 7, 8. and they not being puniſhed for placing the ark on a new cart, the Iſraelites perhaps imagined they might follow their example with ſafety.

Ver. 6. And when they came to Nachon's threſhing-floor.] It has been commonly thought that Nachon was the name of a man, but Bochart thinks it rather the name of a place, ſo called by anticipation, for the ſtroke upon Uzzah. For nacha ſignifies to ſmite, and nachon ſignifies perculſion. So this floor was ever after called, the floor of perculſion, becauſe God ſmote Uzzah in this place. And accordingly, in 1 Chron. xiii. 9. it is called the floor of Chidon; which is the very ſame. For chid ſignifies deſtruction.

The oxen that drew the cart, happening to ſtart at ſomething, were like to have overthrown it, upon which Uzzah, one of Abinadab's ſons, who drove it, clapt his hand upon the ark in a ſurprize, but was ſtruck with immediate death for his preſumption. This ſudden and ſevere puniſhment, which David himſelf was much ſurpriſed and diſpleaſed at, ver. 8. has given ſo much offence to ſome interpreters, that they have ſought for a quite different ſenſe of the words, in order to make the crime of Uzzah greater than is commonly apprehended. The original runs literally thus, "And Uzzah ſeized the ark, for the cattle ſhook," from whence they would conclude, that he rather offered ſome indignity to it, than endeavoured to prevent its falling. But, beſide that this is contrary to all the ancient verſions, and to the book of Chronicles, where this fact is related in a more clear and circumſtantial manner, it is certain that, if this had been the caſe, David would have expreſſed his reſentment againſt Uzzah, inſtead of teſtifying any diſſatisfaction at the puniſhment inflicted on him by God. Uzzah being a Levite, ought to have remembered, that it was prohibited, under pain of death, to all but the prieſts, to touch the ark; and even theſe were only to touch the ſtaves by which it was carried, and which, for that reaſon, were never to be taken from it. Perhaps alſo Uzzah was the contriver of this new manner of carrying the ark upon a cart, inſtead of the ſhoulders of the Kohathites. However, if this puniſhment ſhould ſtill ſeem too ſevere, one may ſuppoſe, that God inflicted it upon him, in order to inſpire the people with a greater reſpect and awe for that ſacred ſymbol of his preſence, than they were naturally inclined to.

David could not forbear expreſſing his diſpleaſure at this inſtance of the Divine ſeverity, ver. 8. For he perhaps imagined it would detract much from his authority, to have ſuch an accident happen in the beginning of his reign, and at ſuch a ſolemnity of great joy, which was hereby diſturbed and interrupted. In memory of this dreadful ſtroke, he called the place where it was inflicted, Perez-Uzzah, which ſignifies, the breach or puniſhment of Uzzah. And as he himſelf was apprehenſive of the Divine diſpleaſure, ver. 9. for ſome miſ-conduct he might have been guilty of, with reſpect to the ark, he would not preſume to place it in his own city, but carried it to the houſe of Obed-edom, ver. 10. who is called a Gittite, not from his being born, or from his dwelling in Gath, which was a city of the Philiſtines, but from Gath-rimmon, a Levitical city, Joſh. xxi. 24, 25. For it is certain, Obed-edom, was a Levite, 1 Chron. xv. 18, 21, 24. —xvi. 5. who, we ſuppoſe, was willing to receive the ark, and reſolved to treat it with the greateſt reverence, that he might not offend the Divine Majeſty.

The ark continued in the houſe of Obed-edom, for the ſpace of three months, when David being informed, that God had bleſſed this Levite in a very extraordinary manner, ever ſince the ark had been under his roof, reſolved to procure a ſhare of theſe Divine favours by removing it to his own houſe, ver. 11, 12. He however took care to have that removal performed in a more regular manner than the former, by preparing a tabernacle for its reception, ver. 17. and by offering ſacrifices at the end of every ſix paces, for this is thought by ſome to be the meaning of the expreſſion, ver. 13. tho' it is there only ſaid, that when the bearers "had gone ſix paces, he ſacrificed oxen and fatlings." Some think, that Uzzah being ſtruck dead within ſix yards of his own houſe, David cauſed theſe ſacrifices to be made at the end of the firſt ſix ſteps of the prieſts, to intreat the Lord to be more favourable this time; but we find in the Chronicles, chap. xii. that they repeated the ſame ſacrifices, when they came near David's houſe, in thankfulneſs that God permitted the Levites to bring the ark to the place appointed for its reception, without any accident.

It may perhaps be wondered at, that David choſe to erect a new tabernacle for the ark, inſtead of ſending for that which Moſes had cauſed to be made in the wilderneſs. It may be ſuppoſed indeed, that the precincture of his palace was not capacious enough for it; but whatever the reaſon be, it is certain that it continued ſtill, with the altar, and all its other Sacred utenſils, at Gibeon, till Solomon, having built his temple, cauſed them to be brought and depoſited in it, as we ſhall ſee in its proper place.

David teſtified an uncommon joy, upon this ſolemn removal of the ark; for he put on a linnen ephod, and danced before the ark, to the ſound of a great number of inſtruments, ver. 14, 15. inſomuch that Michal, who ſaw the proceſſion through a window, could not forbear deſpiſing and reflecting upon him, for acting, as ſhe thought, ſo far beneath a king of Iſrael, and for immodeſtly expoſing himſelf, after the manner of ſhameleſs fellows, ver. 20. but this is not credible, for David undoubtedly kept within the rules of decency, when he was thus jocund, and acted according to the command of God, who required the Iſraelites to rejoice in their feaſts, not with a laſcivious and petulant joy, but with ſuch as was pious and moderate.

Ver. 21. And David ſaid unto Michal, It was before the Lord, which choſe me before thy father, and before all his houſe, to appoint me ruler over the people of the Lord, over Iſrael: therefore will I play before the Lord.] Who had conferred ſo many favours upon David, that he thought he could not ſhew himſelf thankful enough to ſo great a benefactor; but he thought fit to humble the pride of Michal, by putting her in mind, how God had rejected all her family, and advanced him to the throne of Iſrael.

Ver. 22. And I will yet be more vile than thus, and will be baſe in my own ſight.] He thought nothing too mean for him to ſtoop to, if he thereby could render any honour to God.

——And of the maid-ſervants which thou haſt ſpoken of, of them ſhall I be had in honour.] The more he humbled himſelf to do honour to God, the more, he was confident, he ſhould be magnified, and reſpected by his people; the eſteem of the meaneſt of whom upon that account, he valued much more than all the vain-glorious praiſes Michal could beſtow upon him, for aſſuming an air of grandeur, and neglecting the ſervice of God.

Ver. 23. Therefore Michal the daughter of Saul had no child until the day of her death.] She had children before this fact, but none after it, according to the Gemara Sanhedrim, cap. 2. ſect. 8.

CHAP. VII.

1 Nathan firſt approving the purpoſe of David to build God an houſe, 4 After by the word of God forbiddeth him. 12 He promiſeth him benefits and bleſſings in his ſeed. 18 Davids prayer and thankſgiving.

AND it came to paſs when the king ſat in his houſe, and the LORD had given him reſt round about from all his enemies;

2 That the king ſaid unto Nathan the prophet, See now, I dwell in an houſe of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains.

3 And Nathan ſaid to the king, Go, do all that is in thine heart: for the LORD is with thee.

4 ¶ And it came to paſs that night, that the word of the LORD came unto Nathan, ſaying,

5 Go and tell my ſervant David, Thus ſaith the LORD, Shalt thou build me an houſe for me to dwell in?

6 Whereas I have not dwelt in any houſe, ſince the time that I brought up the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle.

7 In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Iſrael, ſpake I a word with any of the tribes of Iſrael, whom I commanded to feed my people Iſrael, ſaying, Why build ye not me an houſe of cedar?

8 Now therefore, ſo ſhalt thou ſay unto my ſervant David, Thus ſaith the LORD of hoſts, I took thee from the ſheep-cote from following the ſheep, to be ruler over my people, over Iſrael.

9 And I was with thee whitherſoever thou wenteſt, and have cut off all thine enemies out of thy ſight, and have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 (Moreover, I will appoint a place for my people Iſrael, and will plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more: neither ſhall the children of wickedneſs afflict them any more, as beforetime, 11 And as ſince the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Iſrael, and have cauſed thee to reſt from all thine enemies.) Alſo the LORD telleth thee, that he will make thee an houſe.

12 ¶ And when thy days be fulfilled, and thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers, I will ſet up thy ſeed after thee, which ſhall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will eſtabliſh his kingdom.

13 He ſhall build an houſe for my Name, and I will ſtabliſh the throne of his kingdom for ever.

14 I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon: if he commit iniquity, I will chaſten him with the rod of men, and with the ſtripes of the children of men:

15 But my mercy ſhall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

16 And thine houſe, and thy kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever before thee: thy throne ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever.

17 ¶ According to all theſe words, and according to all this viſion, ſo did Nathan ſpeak unto David.

18 ¶ Then went king David in, and ſat before the LORD, and he ſaid, Who am I, O Lord GOD? and what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto?

19 And this was yet a ſmall thing in thy ſight, O Lord GOD; but thou haſt ſpoken alſo of thy ſervants houſe for a great while to come; and is this the manner of man, O Lord GOD?

20 And what can David ſay more unto thee; for thou, Lord GOD, knoweſt thy ſervant.

21 For thy words ſake, and according to thine own heart haſt thou done all theſe great things, to make thy ſervant know them.

22 Wherefore thou art great, O LORD God: for there is none like thee, neither is there any God beſide thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

23 And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Iſrael, whom God went to redeem for a people to himſelf, and to make him a name, and to do for you great things, and terrible, for thy land, before thy people which thou redeemedſt to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods?

24 For thou haſt confirmed to thy ſelf thy people Iſrael to be a people unto thee for ever: and thou, LORD, art become their God.

25 And now, O LORD God, the word that thou haſt ſpoken concerning thy ſervant, and concerning his houſe, eſtabliſh it for ever, and do as thou haſt ſaid.

26 And let thy name be magnified for ever, ſaying, The LORD of hoſts is the God over Iſrael: and let the houſe of thy ſervant David be eſtabliſhed before thee.

27 For

27 For thou, O LORD of hoſts, God of Iſrael, haſt revealed to thy ſervant, ſaying, I will build thee an houſe: therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.

28 And now, O Lord GOD, thou art that God, and thy words be true, and thou haſt promiſed this goodneſs unto thy ſervant.

29 Therefore now let it pleaſe thee to bleſs the houſe of thy ſervant, that it may continue for ever before thee: for thou, O Lord GOD, haſt ſpoken it, and with thy bleſſing let the houſe of thy ſervant be bleſſed for ever.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, when the king ſat in his houſe, and the Lord had given him reſt round about from all his enemies.] So that he paſſed his time agreeably in the palace king Hiram had built for him, having no diſturbance from the Philiſtines, or other neighbouring nations.

Ver. 2. That the king ſaid unto Nathan the prophet, See now I dwell in an houſe of cedar, but the ark of the Lord dwelleth within curtains.] Like a religious prince, he employed much of his time in pious meditations; and, among other particulars, reflected upon the meanneſs of God's habitation, in compariſon with the ſplendour of his own; which he thought ought not to be endured, and therefore reſolved to build a ſtately manſion for the reſidence of the Divine Majeſty among them. The prophet applauded this pious deſign, not doubting but God would ratify and proſper it; but the Lord appeared to him that night, ver. 4 and directed him to go and ſpeak to the king in the following manner.

Ver. 5.——Thus ſaith the Lord, Shalt thou build me an houſe for me to dwell in?] The meaning is, he ſhould not build one. But this manner of ſpeaking expreſſed the Divine Will ſomething ſharply; to reprove him for his forwardneſs, (without asking God's conſent) not only in deſigning, but in making a vow, that he would forthwith build God an houſe. For, it is probable, that upon Nathan's approving his intention, he made that vow, mentioned, Pſalm cxxxii. 3, 4, 5. "Surely I will not go up "to my bed, nor give ſleep to mine eyes, &c. till I have "found out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the "mighty God of Jacob."

Ver. 6. Whereas I have not dwelt in any houſe, ſince the time that I brought up the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, even to this day.] As much as to ſay; How comeſt thou to deſign me a fixed habitation, ſince neither I, nor any one elſe ever thought of one from the time ye have been a people?

——— But have walked in a tent and a tabernacle.] I have contented my ſelf with a moveable manſion, conſiſting of a tent and a tabernacle, in which I was always preſent to conduct my people from place to place. By a tent is meant, the inward hangings of the houſe, and by the tabernacle, the boards to which they were faſtened; and the badgers ſkins, &c. which covered the whole.

Ver. 7. In all places wherein I have walked with all the children of Iſrael, ſpake I a word with any of the tribes of Iſrael?] That is, of the judges of Iſrael, as it is interpreted 1 Chron. xvii 6. For the word ſhibte ſignifies not only tribes, but ſceptres, and conſequently ſupreme governors, as the judges were.

———Whom I commanded to feed my people Iſrael.] God did not command the tribes, but the ſupreme governors of them, to feed, that is, to rule his people, and take care of their happineſs. The Hebrew word for feed being raga, and the Syriac rega, ſome learned men thence derive the Latin words regere, and reges; kings being deſigned by God to be the paſtors of their people.

———Saying, Why built ye not me an houſe of cedar?] God was the propereſt judge what houſe was agreeable to him, and he had never ſignified that he diſliked his preſent, and deſired a more ſtately habitation.

Ver. 8. Now therefore, ſo ſhalt thou ſay unto my ſervant David.] God, however, owned David to be his faithful ſervant, and therefore accepted his pious intentions, as we expreſly read, 1 Kings viii. 18.

——Thus ſaith the Lord of hoſts, I took thee from the ſheep-cote, &c.] Therefore he might be certain that God accepted his gratitude, in deſigning to build him an houſe.

Ver. 9 And I was with thee whitherſoever thou wentеſt.] In the time of his baniſhment, when he was frequently preſerved by the ſignal interpoſition of the Divine Providence.

———And have cut off all thine enemies out of thy ſight.] Both thoſe in Iſrael, and thoſe in the neighbouring countries.

——— And have made thee a great name, like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.] Cauſed him to be renowned in all the circumjacent countries, as a potent prince, and a mighty warrior; and, perhaps, as an holy prophet, greatly beloved of God, and of all his people.

Ver. 10. (Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Iſrael.] Or rather, I have appointed or eſtabliſhed a place, &c. namely, the land of Canaan, into which God had graciouſly conducted them according to his promiſe.

———And will plant them.] Will cauſe them to take firm root there.

———That they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more.] That they may now have a fixed habitation of their own, and no longer wander in uncertainty, as they did in the wilderneſs.

———Neither ſhall the children of wickedneſs.] The idolatrous nations around them.

———Afflict them any more, as before time.] When they were in the land of Egypt.

Ver. 11. And as ſince the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Iſrael.] Nor ſhall they be afflicted by any of their Pagan neighbours, as they frequently were, when judges were raiſed up for their deliverance. But all this is to be underſtood with a condition; namely, except they ſhould notoriouſly forſake God, and rebel againſt him, which being ſo often declared in other places, it was needleſs to mention it here. Or this may have a reference to the later ages of the world, when the people of Iſrael ſhall acknowledge the Great Meſſiah, and become converts to him. They ſhall then be recalled out of captivity, and be planted in their own place, where they ſhall enjoy a far greater degree of tranquility, than ever they experienced before. And this agrees beſt with the future tenſe, I will appoint —— and will plant them, &c. otherwiſe, the work was already compleated, God having actually planted them in the land he had appointed for their ſettlement.

———And have cauſed thee to reſt from all thine enemies.)] Given him a quiet poſſeſſion of the whole kingdom of Iſrael; which never was-in ſo happy a condition as now. A flouriſhing people is a great bleſſing to the king who governs them, and is therefore mentioned in this verſe as an inſtance of God's great kindneſs to David.

———Alſo the Lord telleth thee, that he will make thee an houſe.] For thy good intentions to make him an houſe, he will make thee an houſe, that is, he will encreaſe and uphold thy poſterity, and continue the kingdom in thy family.

Ver. 12. And when thy days ſhall be fulfilled, and thou ſhalt ſleep with thy fathers.] This implies, that his days ſhould be compleated, and prolonged to the uſual courſe of nature, and that he ſhould not be cut off in the midſt of them, by any violent or untimely death.

——I will ſet up thy ſeed after thee, which ſhall proceed out of thy bowels.] From theſe words the Jews infer, that the crown could not devolve to Amnon, Abſalom, Adonijah, nor to any of thoſe ſons who were born before this promiſe; but as the future tenſe is frequently uſed for the perfect, according to the genius of the Hebrew language, the argument is no way concluſive, unleſs we throw into the ſcale the objection which is urged againſt the father; and conſider it as equally ſtrong againſt thoſe ſons, who, being all warriors, had undoubtedly embrued their hands in blood; from which, Solomon was to be altogether free. This exception, indeed, is not mentioned in this ſecond book of Samuel, but we find it urged in the book of the Chronicles, as an argument why God did not think David pure enough to erect ſo ſacred an edifice to him, 1 Chron. xxii. 8. xxviii. 3.

Ver. 13. He ſhall build an houſe for my name.] This is meant literally, and immediately of Solomon, who alone built the material houſe or temple; but myſtically and ultimately of Chriſt, who is the builder of God's ſpiritual houſe or temple, Heb. iii. 3, 6. 1 Pet. ii. 5.

—— And I will eſtabliſh the throne of his kingdom for ever.] This cannot be underſtood of Solomon alone, ſince his kingdom was not for ever; but of David's poſterity, with a ſpecial reſpect to Chriſt, in whoſe perſon the kingdom was to be lodged for ever, Iſa. ix. 7. Dan. ii. 44. Luke i. 32, 33.

Ver. 14. And I will be his father, and he ſhall be my ſon.] This the Apoſtle ſhews is meant of Chriſt, Heb. i. 5. For tho' Solomon was called Jedidiah, as an indication that he was beloved of God, yet, in the compleat ſenſe of the words, Chriſt only is intended, who is God's beloved ſon, in whom he is well pleaſed.

——If he commit iniquity, I will chaſten him with the rod of men, &c] This is a mixt prophecy, ſome part of which belongs to Chriſt, and the other part to Solomon and his ſucceſſors in the kingdom of Iſrael, who, it is plain, are ſolely intended in theſe words.

Ver. 15. But my mercy ſhall not depart away from him, as I took it from Saul, &c] God promiſes not to tranſlate the kingdom into another family, as he took it from Saul to beſtow it on David.

Ver. 16. And thy houſe and thy kingdom ſhall be eſtabliſhed for ever.] This is chiefly intended of the kingdom of Chriſt; and gave occaſion to the Jews to ſay, We have heard out of the law, that Chriſt abideth for ever, John xii 34. This likewiſe is confirmed by the rule which Maimonides lays down, in his More Nevochim; namely, that tho' the Hebrew word olam doth not neceſſarily ſignify eternally, yet it has that import when joined with ath, either before or after it. And ſuch is the caſe here; for this kingdom is ſaid to be eſtabliſhed, ath olam: which therefore can belong to none but Chriſt, for David's kingdom had an end.

Ver. 17. According to all theſe words, and according to all this viſion, ſo did Nathan ſpeak unto David.] This ſhews the integrity of the prophet, who was not aſhamed to retract his own words, when he was better taught of God. And, as Dionyſius obſerves in an epiſtle to Novatus, μεῖζον ἔσαι τῷ ζφάλματι τὸ κατόρθωμα, the correction of his fault was more eminently remarkable than the fault itſelf.

Ver. 18. Then went king David in, and ſat before the Lord.] That is, before the ark, which was the ſymbol of his Divine Preſence. Many great men tranſlate the word jaſhab, not ſat, but remained before the Lord; particularly Vatablus, upon 1 Chron. xvii. 16. and others, who allow the king might ſit in the temple, but not at prayer; and therefore they expound this paſſage in the following manner, He took his ſeat in the tabernacle before the ark, and then made the following prayer, ſtanding up, as the manner was when they worſhipped God.

——— And he ſaid, Who am I, O Lord God? and what is my houſe, that thou haſt brought me hitherto?] How infinitely unworthy am I and my family of this great honour and happineſs! David begins his addreſs to God in a very becoming manner, with a moſt profound debaſement of himſelf, and an open confeſſion of his own unworthineſs to receive ſuch bleſſings, as the Divine Majeſty had already beſtowed upon him.

Ver. 19. And this was yet a ſmall thing in thy ſight, O Lord God; but thou haſt ſpoken alſo of thy ſervant's houſe for a great while to come.] Next, he magnifies the benignity of God, who did not think it ſufficient that he had made David a great king, but likewiſe promiſed him, that his poſterity, and at laſt the Lord Chriſt, ſhould ſit upon his throne.

——— And is this the manner of man, O Lord God?] Is it cuſtomary with men to deal ſo kindly by their inferiors, as thou, O Lord, haſt dealt by me? No, it is the prerogative of Divine Grace to give ſuch promiſes and largeſſes as this.

Ver. 20. And what can David ſay more unto thee?] Words cannot expreſs either my obligations to thee, or the ſenſe of them which is impreſſed upon my ſoul. Or, the meaning may be, What can I ask or deſire of thee more than thou haſt already granted me?

——— For thou, Lord God, knoweſt thy ſervant.] Thou knoweſt my deep ſenſe of thy favours, and of my obligations to thee: Thou art likewiſe perfectly acquainted with my condition, and knoweſt what I do, or may need hereafter; I therefore entertain an humble confidence, that thou wilt be ready to ſupply me accordingly.

Ver. 21. For thy word's ſake.] That thou may'ſt accompliſh thy promiſes made to me by Samuel and Nathan, and thereby demonſtrate thy faithfulneſs.

——And according to thine own heart haſt thou done all theſe great things.] Of thine own mere liberality and good pleaſure, without any deſert of mine. So far was David, tho' now a very gracious man, from thinking his actions meritorious.

——— To make thy ſervant know them.] That thy gracious and wonderful purpoſes of mercy toward me might be manifeſted both to me and others, by thy moſt benevolent words and actions.

Ver. 22. Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God.] Both in power and goodneſs, as is evident by the great and good things thou haſt done for me.

—— For there is none like thee, neither is there any God beſide thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.] What we have heard from our parents, or out of thy word, concerning the incomparable excellency of thy Sacred Majeſty, and of thy works; even of that have I this day received eminent experience.

Ver. 23. And what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Iſrael, whom God went to redeem for a people to himſelf.] David here ſeems to imitate the words of Moſes, in Deut. iv. 7. 34 —— And to make him a name.] That all the world might be ſenſible of his mighty power and amazing goodneſs.

—— And to do for you great things, and terrible, for thy land, before thy people, which thou redeemedſt to thee from Egypt, from the nations and their gods.] Some underſtand, by gods, their rulers. But even their gods were altogether as unable as their kings and rulers to ſave the nations, whom the God of Iſrael drove out.

Ver. 24. For thou haſt confirmed to thyſelf thy people Iſrael to be a people unto thee for ever: and thou, Lord, art become their God.] This is the ſum of the covenant between God and them, namely, that they ſhould be his obedient people, and that he then would bleſs them, and be a gracious God unto them.

Ver. 25. And now, O Lord God, the word that thou haſt ſpoken concerning thy ſervant, and concerning his houſe, eſtabliſh it for ever, &c.] After he had uttered his thankful acknowledgments, he makes his humble prayer to God, that he would perform his promiſe to him. For tho' he did not doubt its accompliſhment, it however became him to make it his requeſt.

Ver. 26. And let thy name be magnified for ever, ſaying, The Lord of hoſts is the God over Iſrael, &c.] David did not deſire this merely for his own ſake, but that God might be glorified in what he did for him; and men might acknowledge, that the God of Iſrael was the Lord of heaven and earth, and faithful in his promiſe to the houſe of David.

Ver. 27. For thou, O Lord of hoſts, God of Iſrael, haſt revealed to thy ſervant, ſaying, I will build thee an houſe: therefore hath thy ſervant found in his heart to pray this prayer unto thee.] That he might not be thought too preſumptuous in his requeſt, he profeſſes he ſhould not have offered it, if God had not encouraged it by his moſt gracious promiſe to him.

Ver. 28. And now, O Lord God, thou art that God, and thy words be true, &c.] He profeſſes his belief of the immutability of the Divine nature, and of the truth of every particular which God had ſaid: Upon which he relied with an unſhaken faith.

Ver. 29. Now therefore let it pleaſe thee to bleſs the houſe of thy ſervant, &c.] Since God had been ſo gracious to him, as to make ſuch promiſes in his favour, and as it was impoſſible that his word ſhould be obnoxious to the leaſt fallibility, David grows more confident to repeat his petition.

tion. This is not the vain repetition condemned by our bleſſed Saviour, but it proceeded from the abundant affection of a heart devoutly wrought upon, and which could not ſufficiently acknowledge the goodneſs of God, and expreſs his own full perſuaſion, that the Divine Word would be moſt punctually accompliſhed.

CHAP. VIII.

1 David ſubdueth the Philiſtines and the Moabites. 3 He ſmiteth Hadadezer, and the Syrians. 9 Toi ſendeth Joram with preſents to bleſs him. 11 The preſents and the ſpoil David dedicateth to God. 14 He putteth gariſons in Edom. 16 Davids officers.

AND after this it came to paſs, that David ſmote the Philiſtines, and ſubdued them: and David took Metheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philiſtines.

2 And he ſmote Moab, and meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground: even with two lines meaſured he, to put to death; and with one full line, to keep alive: and ſo the Moabites became Davids ſervants, and brought gifts.

3 ¶ And David ſmote alſo Hadadezer the ſon of Rehob, king of Zobah, as he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thouſand chariots, and ſeven hundred horſemen, and twenty thouſand footmen: and David houghed all the chariot-horſes, but reſerved of them for an hundred chariots.

5 And when the Syrians of Damaſcus came to ſuccour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David ſlew of the Syrians two and twenty thouſand men.

6 Then David put gariſons in Syria of Damaſcus: and the Syrians became ſervants to David, and brought gifts: and the LORD preſerved David whitherſoever he went.

7 And David took the ſhields of gold that were on the ſervants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jeruſalem.

8 And from Betah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took exceeding much braſs.

9 ¶ When Toi king of Hamath heard that David had ſmitten all the hoſt of Hadadezer,

10 Then Toi ſent Joram his ſon unto king David, to ſalute him, and to bleſs him, becauſe he had fought againſt Hadadezer, and ſmitten him: (for Hadadezer had wars with Toi) and Joram brought with him veſſels of ſilver, and veſſels of gold, and veſſels of braſs;

11 Which alſo king David did dedicate unto the LORD, with the ſilver and gold that he had dedicate of all nations which he ſubdued:

12 Of Syria, and of Moab, and of the children of Ammon, and of the Philiſtines, and of Amalek, and of the ſpoil of Hadadezer ſon of Rehob, king of Zobah.

13 And David gat him a name when he returned from ſmiting of the Syrians in the valley of Salt, being eighteen thouſand men.

14 ¶ And he put gariſons in Edom; throughout all Edom put he gariſons, and all they of Edom became Davids ſervants: and the LORD preſerved David whitherſoever he went.

15 And David reigned over all Iſrael, and David executed judgment and juſtice unto all his people.

16 And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah was over the hoſt; and Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder;

17 And Zadok the ſon of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the ſon of Abiathar, were the prieſts; and Seraiah was the ſcribe;

18 And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites; and Davids ſons were chief rulers.

Ver. 1. And after this it came to paſs, that David ſmote the Philiſtines, and ſubdued them.] In the beginning of his reign they invaded him twice, chap. v. ver. 17, 22. but now David turned his arms againſt their country, and brought it into ſubjection to the Iſraelites.

——And David took Metheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philiſtines.] Or, as it is in the margin, the bridle of Ammah which was the famous city of Gath, and the territories belonging to it, as appears by 1 Chron. xviii. 1. And as Gath was the royal ſeat, (for we read of no king in any of their other cities) it may, on many accounts, have been called a bridle to the reſt of the land; but as to its being ſituated on a hill called Ammah, as ſome commentators have imagined, we look upon it to be mere ſuppoſition, they not having produced one good authority for what they advanced, nor indeed do we know of any.

Ver. 2. And he ſmote Moab.] For tho' the king of Moab, out of hatred to Saul, teſtified ſome kindneſs to David, and gave protection to his parents, 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4. yet the Moabites were implacable enemies to the Iſraelites, who therefore were forbidden to admit them into the congregation of the Lord, or to ſeek their peace and proſperity, Deut. xxiii. 6. And tho' God commanded the Iſraelites, in their march to Canaan, to ſpare the Moabites, Deut. ii. 9, 19. yet afterward they proved perfidious and inſolent, and ſhewed themſelves avowed enemies to God, and his people, Numb. xxii. 2, &c. and xxiv. 17, 18. Judges iii. 14, &c. 1 Sam. iv. 47, &c. and thereby provoked God to alter his courſe and conduct toward them.

——And meaſured them with a line, caſting them down to the ground: even with two lines meaſured he, to put to death; and with one full line, to keep alive] It ſeems to have been a cuſtom in the eaſt, to order the priſoners of war to lie down, and to meaſure by a line ſuch a part of them as were intended to be put to death. The Jews declare, that David exerciſed this ſeverity againſt the Moabites, becauſe they had ſlain his parents, and brethren, whom he, during his exile, confided to the care of the king of Moab, 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4. but we rather think they were treated in this manner, becauſe they had always been implacable enemies to the Iſraelites; and the rigour they now ſuffered was probably no more than a juſt retaliation for ſome cruelties of the ſame kind, which the Moabites had committed. However, as the Scripture does not declare, whether David put to death two thirds of the whole nation, or only thoſe who appear'd in arms againſt him, we think it more for the honour of that prince to ſuppoſe the latter.

——— And ſo the Moabites became Davids ſervants, and brought gifts.] They paid David a conſtant tribute, which continued all his days, and likewiſe in the reign of Solomon; but after the diviſion of the kingdom, it was paid to the kings of Iſrael, till after the death of Ahab; and then the Moabites refuſed to pay it any longer, 2 Kings iii. 4, 5.

Ver. 3. David alſo ſmote Hadadezer the ſon of Rehob.] Who is alſo called Hadarezer, 1 Chron. xviii. 3. for the Hebrew letters, daleth and reſch, being very much alike, are frequently interchanged, as Bochart hath ſhewn in many inſtances, Hierozoic. p. 2. lib. 2. cap. 7. Nicolaus Damaſcenus, in a fragment of his, recorded by Joſephus, Antiq. lib. 7. cap. 6. calls him Adad, which was a common name of the kings of Syria, who, agreeable to the cuſtom of the eaſtern princes, took their titles from the celeſtial bodies, as Sir John Marſham obſerves; and Adad was the name of the moſt glorious of them, namely, the ſun, as we are informed by Macrobius, who likewiſe obſerves very juſtly, that Adad ſignifies unus, one.

Rehob, the father of Hadadezer, is ſuppoſed to have been the firſt ſole king of Zobah, and to have laid the foundations of his ſons grandeur.

———King of Zobah.] Zobah was a part of Syria, bounded on the eaſt by the river Euphrates, and on the weſt by the land of Canaan, and the kingdom of Damaſcus. It is frequently called Aram-zobah, or Zobah of Syria, in Scripture.

——— As he went to recover his border at the river Euphrates.] That is, as David went to extend the limits of his kingdom (according to the ancient prophecy, Gen. xv. 18.) toward the river Euphrates, he defeated this king, who probably came out to oppoſe him. See 1 Chron. xviii. 3. where it is ſaid, He went to eſtabliſh his dominion by the river Euphrates; which ſeems to relate to David, and not to Hadadezer.

Ver. 4. And David took from him a thouſand chariots.] The word chariot is not in the Hebrew, but it is very properly ſupplied by our tranſlators out of 1 Chron. xvi. 4. in which book many particulars are explained, which are briefly related here.

——— And ſeven hundred horſemen.] Here again the word horſemen is not in the Hebrew, and inſtead of ſeven hundred, the number is ſaid to be ſeven thouſand, 1 Chron. xviii. 4. But as after a thouſand, ſomething is to be ſupplied, namely, chariots; ſo after ſeven hundred ſomething is likewiſe to be underſtood, namely, captains, (as Abarbinel explains it) under whom many others ſerved; ſo that the full number of commanders and ſoldiers was ſeven thouſand.

——— And twenty thouſand footmen: and David houghed all the chariot-horſes.] Here likewiſe is another ellipſis, for there is no word in the original for horſes. The meaning, however, can only be, that he cut the hamſtrings of the horſes which drew the chariots, and rendered them unſerviceable for the future.

——— But reſerved of them for an hundred chariots.] Probably for his guard, and not for war, God having commanded them not to multiply horſes, Deut. xvii. 16.

Ver. 5. And when the Syrians of Damaſcus came to ſuccour Hadadezer king of Zobah.] For they were near neighbours to this prince.

———David ſlew of the Syrians two and twenty thouſand men.] Which greatly facilitated the conqueſt of their country.

Ver. 6. Then David put gariſons in Syria of Damaſcus.] Aram Damaſek, which we tranſlate, Syria of Damaſcus, was that part of Syria which lay between the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus. This tract is what we properly call Cœle Syria; but as it is difficult to reconcile the ancient geographers, ſo as to be able to determine the bounds of what they mean by Cœle Syria, we therefore preſer Strabo, who informs us, that Cœle Syria was the vale extended between Libanus and Antilibanus; and which undoubtedly was the proper Cœle Syria, and Syria Cava, which we take to have been the ſame. The principal cities of this part of Syria were Heliopolis, now called Balbek, and Damaſcus, whoſe preſent name is Sham. The river Chryſorrhoas, now known by the name of Barrady, ruſhing from Antilibanus down to Damaſcus, is there divided into various ſtreams, for the ſupply and decoration of that city; after which it collects its waters together at ſome diſtance, and ſoon loſes it ſelf in a bog. The rivers Abana and Pharpar muſt have been only branches of this.

The valley, in which Damaſcus is ſituated, has various names in the Sacred Scripture, particularly Hobah, Gen. xiv. 15. The valley of Aven, and Betheden, which ſignifies, the place of pleaſure, Amos i. 5. and Hadrach, Zachar. ix. 1.

———And the Syrians became ſervants to David, and brought gifts.] In order to purchaſe their peace, and likewiſe as a teſtimony of their ſubjection to David.

Ver. 7. And David took the ſhields of gold that were on the ſervants of Hadadezer, &c.] The Hebrew particle el, which we tranſlate on, may more properly be rendered with, that is, in the cuſtody of Hadadezer's ſervants, who were officers in his treaſury; for it can hardly be ſuppoſed, that they brought thoſe golden ſhields into the field of battle.

Ver. 8. And from Betah, and from Berothai, cities of Hadadezer, king David took exceeding much braſs.] Theſe two cities are called by very different names, in 1 Chron. xviii. 6. tho' perhaps of the ſame ſignification, in the language of that country, with theſe in the Hebrew language. Or there might poſſibly be four cities from whence David took large quantities of braſs; two of which cities are here mentioned, and two in the book of Chronicles. It is the opinion of ſome learned men, that theſe cities were ſituated at the foot of mount Libanus, between Emath and Damaſcus; which mount, they ſay, abounded with braſs; but the famous Bochart could not find the braſs of Libanus mentioned by any ancient or modern writer. And the kingdom of Zobah lying about Palmyra, he takes the city, called Berothai, to be the ſame with that which Ptolemy calls Βαραθημα, in Arabia Deſerta, which is very remote from Libanus.

Ver. 9. When Toi king of Hamath heard that David had ſmitten all the hoſt of Hadadezer.] Hamath was another eminent city of Syria, and its name in future times was Epiphania, according to St. Jerom; it was likewiſe ſituated to the north of Judæa. The kingdom of Hamath probably extended it ſelf from the land of Canaan, or more particularly from the kingdom of Rehob ſouthward, to the city Hamath, or Epiphania, northward; but how much higher, is uncertain; and from the coaſt of the Mediterranean-ſea weſtward, to the kingdom of Damaſcus, eaſtward; as may be inferred from Ezek. xlvii. 17, 20. This kingdom is frequently denoted in Scripture by the land of Hamath, and herein lay Riblah, 2 Kings xxiii. 33. And as the extent of the land of Iſrael is frequently repreſented by this expreſſion, from Dan unto Beerſheba, and Numb. xiii. 21. from the wilderneſs of Zin unto Rehob; ſo 1 Kings viii. 65. it is denoted by this expreſſion, from the entring in of Hamath, unto the river of Egypt; and in like manner, 2 Kings xiv. 25. by this, from the entring in of Hamath, unto the ſea of the plain.

Ver. 10. Then Toi ſent Joram his ſon.] Who is called Hadoram, 1 Chron. xviii. 10.

———Unto king David, to ſalute him, and to bleſs him, &c.] To wiſh him a conſtant proſperity, and likewiſe to congratulate him on his good ſucceſs againſt Hadadezer, who had been engaged in wars with Toi, and was too powerful for him.

———And Joram brought with him veſſels of ſilver, &c.] As a preſent to David, whoſe friendſhip Toi was deſirous of obtaining by this embaſſy.

Ver. 11. Which alſo king David did dedicate unto the Lord.] In the ſame manner as he dedicated the ſpoils he took from Hadadezer.

——— With the ſilver and gold that he had dedicate of all nations which he ſubdued.] Theſe words ſeem to import, that he was ſo far from multiplying ſilver and gold to himſelf, (which Moſes had prohibited, Deut. xvii. 16.) that he depoſited all this ſpoil, or the greateſt part of it, in God's treaſury; for the building of the temple, which he deſigned, and his ſon was to accompliſh.

Ver.

Ver. 13. And David gat him a name when he returned from ſmiting of the Syrians in the valley of Salt, being eighteen thouſand men.] There is nothing in the Hebrew anſwering to the word being; this paſſage therefore ſhould be tranſlated, in the valley of Salt eighteen thouſand men; that is, he ſlew this number of Edomites, beſide the twenty-two thouſand Syrians. So we read expreſly, 1 Chr. xviii. 12. and the title of the lxth Pſalm declares they were Edomites, not Syrians, who were ſlain in this valley. Only in that place of the Pſalms, there is mention of no more than twelve thouſand ſlain, which makes ſome think it refers to a diſtinct battle from this. But Abiſhai, who began the fight, perhaps ſlew ſix thouſand, and then Joab, coming in with his reſerve, cut off twelve thouſand more, which in all amount to eighteen thouſand.

By the valley of Salt Epiphanius underſtands the Dead-ſea, which was formerly a famous valley, or rather, it was a valley near that ſea. But neither of theſe opinions have any ſolid foundation, as has been proved by Salmaſius, who takes this valley of Salt to have been in the country of Edom, where this battle was fought; and that it derived its name, either from the ſalt ſprings which were therein, or from the ſalt that was dug up there. (Exercit. Plinianæ, cap. 15. p. 613, 614.

Ver. 15. And David reigned over all Iſrael, and David executed judgment and juſtice upon all his people.] David having finiſhed his foreign wars, applied himſelf to the civil government of the people committed to his care, according to the law of God. Or rather, while he was engaged in ſo many wars abroad, he did not neglect his people at home, but took care that juſtice ſhould be adminiſter'd to them. So that he performed both parts of ſuch a king as the Iſraelites deſired, 1 Sam. viii. 20.

Ver. 16. And Joab the ſon of Zeruiah was over the hoſt.] In conſequence of the promiſe made to that perſon, who ſhould firſt enter the ſtong fort of Zion, when it was aſſaulted by David, 1 Chron. xi. 6.

——— And Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder.] The Hebrew word mazkir importing a retention of ſomething in memory, or bringing to remembrance, induced our tranſlators to render it recorder or remembrancer, as if he wrote the acts of every day, which were afterward digeſted into annals. But this ſure was not ſo conſiderable an employment, as to render him who poſſeſſed it the prime civil officer in the kingdom, as Joab was the military. Therefore Strigelius takes him to have been the chancellor of the kingdom; which is more probable than the opinion of thoſe who take him for the maſter of requeſts, who preſented petitions, and put the king in mind of them.

Ver. 17. And Zadok the ſon of Ahitub, and Ahimelech the ſon of Abiathar, were the prieſts.] Theſe two were the chief of the family of prieſts, next to the high-prieſt, who was Abiathar. They are called ſecond prieſts, in 2 Kings xxv. 18. The former was of the family of Eleazar, 1 Chron. vi. 5. the other of Ithamar; and Zadok is mentioned firſt, as being more acceptable to David than the other; and therefore, it is likely, conſtantly attended at court; the family of Eli now beginning to decline, as in the next reign the other was advanced to the high-prieſthood, and Abiathar and his poſterity quite thrown out.

——— And Seraiah was the ſcribe.] Secretary of ſtate, as we now ſpeak; or, as others imagine, clerk of the council, who ſet down all acts and decrees; others, the keeper of the public accounts. But the Hebrew word ſopher, which we tranſlate ſcribe, importing ſomething of learning, as the word ſcribe in the New Teſtament doth, Biſhop Patrick takes him to have been his prime counſellor in the law, who always attended him.

Ver. 18. And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoida was over both the Cherethites and the Pelethites.] Or, the Crethites and the Plethites, as ſome pronounce theſe words. Theſe were ſoldiers, as appears from chap. xv. 18. xx. 7. 1 Kings i. 34. where they are mentioned as preſent at the proclaiming king Solomon, in oppoſition to Adonijah; which could not have been done ſafely, without the aſſiſtance of ſome armed force; and if they were not the perſons, there were none. They however were not common ſoldiers, but the conſtant guards of David's perſon; like the prætorian bands among the Romans. So Joſephus calls them Σωματοφύλακες, keepers of the body, who never departed from the place where the king was. It is farther probable, that they were ſelected out of a certain nation or family. For the Cherethites inhabited part of Paleſtine, and were indeed the ſame with the Philiſtines. The Pelethites, it is likely, were a family in Iſrael: For we find two of the name of Peleth mentioned in Scripture, one of the tribe of Reuben, Numb. xvi. 1. another of Judah, 1 Chron. ii. 33. Their arms were bows and arrows, and ſlings, if we may believe the Chaldee interpreter, who calls them archers and ſlingers; which may be confirmed by this conjecture, that the Philiſtines having ſeverely gauled the Iſraelites, in the fatal battle with Saul, by their archers, David took care not only to have his people inſtructed in the uſe of the bow, but alſo procured ſome archers from the Cherethites, who were a part of the Philiſtines, to be his guard.

——— And Davids ſons were chief rulers.] So the word cohen often ſignifies, not only a prieſt, but a prince. As in the xxth chapter of this book, ver. 26. Ira the Jairite is ſaid to be a cohen, which we tranſlate chief ruler about David. There can therefore be no doubt, that theſe ſons of David were the principal officers in his court, as appears from 1 Chron. xviii. 17. where it is ſaid, They were at the hand of the king; waiting on him, as chief officers in his court.

CHAP. IX.

1 David by Ziba ſendeth for Mephibosheth. 7 For Jonathans ſake he entertaineth him at his table, and reſtoreth him all that was Sauls. 9 He maketh Ziba his farmer.

AND David ſaid, Is there yet any that is left of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew him kindneſs for Jonathans ſake?

2 And there was of the houſe of Saul, a ſervant whoſe name was Ziba: and when they had called him unto David, the king ſaid unto him, Art thou Ziba? And he ſaid, Thy ſervant is he.

3 And the king ſaid, Is there not yet any of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew the kindneſs of God unto him? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Jonathan hath yet a ſon, which is lame on his feet.

4 And the king ſaid unto him, Where is he? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Behold, he is in the houſe of Machir, the ſon of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.

5 ¶ Then king David ſent, and fet him out of the houſe of Machir, the ſon of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

6 Now when Mephibosheth the ſon of Jonathan the ſon of Saul, was come unto David, he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David ſaid, Mephibosheth. And he anſwered, Behold thy ſervant.

7 ¶ And David ſaid unto him, Fear not; for I will ſurely ſhew thee kindneſs, for Jonathan thy fathers ſake, and will reſtore thee all the land of Saul thy father, and thou ſhalt eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himſelf, and ſaid, What is thy ſervant, that thou ſhouldſt look upon ſuch a dead dog as I am?

9 ¶ Then

9 ¶ Then the king called to Ziba Sauls ſervant, and ſaid unto him, I have given unto thy maſters ſon all that pertained to Saul, and to all his houſe.

10 Thou therefore and thy ſons and thy ſervants ſhall till the land for him, and thou ſhalt bring in the fruits, that thy maſters ſon may have food to eat: but Mephiboſheth thy maſters ſon ſhall eat bread alway at my table. Now Ziba had fifteen ſons, and twenty ſervants.

11 Then ſaid Ziba unto the king, According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his ſervant, ſo ſhall thy ſervant do. As for Mephiboſheth, ſaid the king, he ſhall eat at my table, as one of the kings ſons.

12 And Mephiboſheth had a young ſon, whoſe name was Micha: and all that dwelt in the houſe of Ziba, were ſervants unto Mephiboſheth.

13 So Mephiboſheth dwelt in Jeruſalem: for he did eat continually at the kings table; and was lame on both his feet.

Ver. 1. And David ſaid, Is there yet any that is left of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew him kindneſs for Jonathans ſake?] Neither the cares of ſtate, nor the uncommon proſperity which attended the affairs of David, could eraſe out of his memory the affectionate engagements he had contracted with his late generous friend Jonathan.

Ver. 2. And there was of the houſe of Saul, a ſervant whoſe name was Ziba] He had been employed in ſome buſineſs in Saul's family, but being a Canaanite, as ſome of the Jews will have it, he did not recover his liberty, upon the death of Saul, but ſtill continued in ſervitude under David.

Ver. 3. And the king ſaid, Is there yet any of the houſe of Saul, that I may ſhew the kindneſs of God unto him? And Ziba ſaid, Jonathan hath yet a ſon, &c.] David, like a worthy friend, and a noble prince, was ſollicitous to perform his promiſe to Jonathan, 1 Sam. xx. 14 where he obliged himſelf to ſhew, to the poſterity of that prince, the kindneſs of the Lord; by which is meant that kindneſs which David owed to Jonathan, by virtue of the oath he had ſworn to him; or elſe it may ſignify great and eminent kindneſs.

Ver. 4. And the king ſaid unto him, Where is he? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Behold he is in the houſe of Machir the ſon of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.] This was a place on the other ſide of Jordan, in mount Gilead, where it is likely the friends of Jonathan's ſon, whoſe name was Mephiboſheth, thought him ſafe, as being at a great diſtance from David, whom they looked upon as an enemy.

Ver. 5. Then king David ſent, and fet him out of the houſe of Machir, &c.] David immediately ſent for the young prince to court, and after he had treated him with all poſſible tokens of friendſhip and tenderneſs, he cauſed all the lands of his royal grandfather to be reſtored to him, commanding Ziba to improve them to the beſt advantage for his maſter's ſon. By which laſt words ſome underſtand, the ſon of Mephiboſheth, called Micah, ver. 12. becauſe Ziba was not to provide for Mephiboſheth himſelf, who was to be maintained by the king at his royal table. But the expreſſion may as well be thought to be meant of Mephiboſheth, who had this eſtate conſigned to him, for ſuch uſes as he ſhould think fit to appoint.

Ver. 13. So Mphiboſheth dwelt in Jeruſalem.] Ziba went to take care of his land, which was at Gibeath of Benjamin; but Mephiboſheth remained with the king, that he might partake of his bounty.

——For he did eat continually at the kings table, and was lame on both his feet.] This natural defect did not prevent him from being entertained by the king with the greateſt affection; which procured him, tho' deſpicable in his perſon, the reſpect of the people, as one highly eſteemed by their ſovereign.

CHAP. X.

1 Davids meſſengers ſent to comfort Hanun the ſon of Nahaſh, are villainouſly intreated. 6 The Ammonites, ſtrengthened by the Syrians, are overcome by Joab and Abiſhai. 15 Shobach making a new ſupply of the Syrians at Helam, is ſlain by David.

AND it came to paſs after this, that the king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanun his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

2 Then ſaid David, I will ſhew kindneſs unto Hanun the ſon of Nahaſh, as his father ſhewed kindneſs unto me. And David ſent to comfort him by the hand of his ſervants, for his father. And Davids ſervants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon ſaid unto Hanun their lord, Thinkeſt thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath ſent comforters unto thee? hath not David rather ſent his ſervants unto thee, to ſearch the city, and to ſpy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took Davids ſervants, and ſhaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the middle, even to their buttocks, and ſent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he ſent to meet them, becauſe the men were greatly aſhamed: and the king ſaid, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon ſaw that they ſtank before David, the children of Ammon ſent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thouſand footmen, and of king Maacah a thouſand men, and of Iſh-tob twelve thouſand men.

7 And when David heard of it, he ſent Joab and all the hoſt of the mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in aray at the entring in of the gate: and the Syrians of Zoba and of Rehob, and Iſh-tob, and Maacah, were by themſelves in the field.

9 When Joab ſaw that the front of the battle was againſt him before and behind, he choſe of all the choice men of Iſrael, and put them in aray againſt the Syrians.

10 And

10 And the reſt of the people he delivered into the hand of Abiſhai his brother, that he might put them in aray againſt the children of Ammon.

11 And he ſaid, If the Syrians be too ſtrong for me, then thou ſhalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too ſtrong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 Be of good courage, and let us play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and the LORD do that which ſeemeth him good.

13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle againſt the Syrians: and they fled before him.

14 And when the children of Ammon ſaw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they alſo before Abiſhai, and entred into the city: ſo Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jeruſalem.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael, they gathered themſelves together.

16 And Hadarezer ſent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond the river: and they came to Helam; and Shobach the captain of the hoſt of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And when it was told David, he gathered all Iſrael together, and paſſed over Jordan, and came to Helam: and the Syrians ſet themſelves in aray againſt David, and fought with him.

18 And the Syrians fled before Iſrael, and David ſlew the men of ſeven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and forty thouſand horſemen, and ſmote Shobach the captain of their hoſt, who died there.

19 And when all the kings that were ſervants to Hadarezer ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael, they made peace with Iſrael, and ſerved them. So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after this, that the king of the children of Ammon died.] This king, as it appears by the next verſe, was Nahaſh, whoſe army was defeated by Saul, with great ſlaughter, at Jabeſh-gilead, 1 Sam. xi.

——— And Hanun his ſon reigned in his ſtead.] For that kingdom was hereditary, like moſt others, in thoſe times and countries.

Ver. 2. Then ſaid David, I will ſhew kindneſs unto Hanun the ſon of Nahaſh, as his father ſhewed kindneſs unto me.] All generous minds are actuated by gratitude and compaſſion, and we have a noble inſtance of this truth in David, who remember'd the favours he had received from Nahaſh, and pitied his ſon who had loſt ſuch a father. The Sacred Hiſtorian has not acquainted us with the particulars in which thoſe favours conſiſted, but it is moſt probable, that Nahaſh being an enemy to Saul, from whom he had received a great overthrow, proved a friend to David, when he was perſecuted by that prince.

——— And David ſent to comfort him, by the hand of his ſervants, for his father.] Agreeably to the preſent cuſtom among princes, who ſend ſome of their courtiers to condole the loſs of thoſe with whom they have lived in friendſhip.

——— And David's ſervants came into the land of the children of Ammon.] Where they had audience of Hanun, and acquitted themſelves of their amicable commiſſion. But the courtiers of that weak prince, pretending a ſuſpicion, that the ambaſſadors were ſent by David upon ſome baſe deſign, infuſed ſuch ſiniſter notions into his mind, that he cauſed them to be treated in the ſhameful manner, mentioned ver. 4. and then ſent them away, ſhaving off one half of their beards, which was part of the indignity they ſuſtained, and was the higheſt diſgrace that could be put upon them: For all people thought their hair a great ornament, and never ſhaved their heads or their beards, unleſs in caſe of mourning. The greateſt indignity that can be offered to any man in Perſia, is to cauſe his beard to be ſhaven off, as Tavernier relates, in his Indian Travels, p. 121. where he tells us, the Sophi cauſed an ambaſſador of Aureng Zeb, the great Mogul, to be thus uſed; but this emperor moſt highly reſented the affront that was offered him in the perſon of his ambaſſador, as David did this which was offered him in his.

Ver. 5. When they told it unto David, he ſent to meet them, becauſe they were greatly aſhamed.] He undoubtedly ſent cloaths to cover their nakedneſs, which had been expoſed by the brutal uſage they received by the orders of Hanun.

——— And the king ſaid, Tarry at Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.] Jericho was the firſt place to which they came, in the land of Canaan; and it was then a private village, where they might ſecrete themſelves, till they were fit to appear in public.

Ver. 6. And when the children of Ammon ſaw that they ſtank before David] They wanted not intelligence, how heinouſly David reſented this barbarous treatment of his ambaſſadors, which is expreſſed by a phraſe that ſignifies, they were become very odious to him.

——— The children of Ammon ſent and hired the Syrians of Beth-rehob, &c.] They diſtruſted their own ſtrength, and therefore hired auxiliary forces of their neighbours, particularly thoſe of Beth-rehob, which was a city belonging to the Canaanites, rather than the Syrians, who were only borderers upon it.

——— And of king Maacah, a thouſand men.] Maacah alſo was a city in Paleſtine, beyond Jordan, in the tribe of Manaſſeh, as Rehob was in the tribe of Aſſer; but the Canaanites kept them out of the poſſeſſion of both, Joſh. xiii. 13.] Judges i. 31. Therefore Bochart confutes thoſe who think Aram-maacah was the country of Comagena; for tho' Aram commonly ſignifies Syria, which was divided into many countries, yet the Scripture ſhews, theſe places were not in Syria. But the people of them were called Syrians, becauſe they imitated their manners; as the woman in the Goſpel is called Syro-Phœnician, tho' ſhe was a native of Canaan, Matth. xv. 27. Mark vii. 26.

——— And of Iſh-tob, twelve thouſand men.] Or, of the men of Tob, which was the country to which Jephthah fled from his unkind brethren. See Judges xi. 3.

Ver. 7. And when David heard of it, he ſent Joab, and all the hoſt of the mighty men.] He did not think it prudent to ſtay till they aſſaulted him in his own country, but went and invaded them in theirs.

Joab divided his army into two bodies. The firſt, at the head of which he placed himſelf, was to act againſt the auxiliary troops of the Ammonites. The ſecond, which was commanded by his brother Abiſhai, was to attack the Ammonites themſelves. Each of theſe bodies gained a compleat victory; for the Syrians, who were unable to ſuſtain the ſhock of the Iſraelites, ſhrunk back at the firſt aſſault; and the Ammonites, ſeeing themſelves abandon'd by their allies, fled from the field of battle like them.

Ver. 15. And when the Syrians ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael, they gathered themſelves together.] Being apprehenſive that David would fall upon them for aſſiſting his enemies, they reſolved to be before-hand with him, him, and therefore levied an army to invade him. Hadarezer, king of Aram-zoba, in Meſopotamia, who had already experienced the valour of the Iſraelites, levied a numerous army of the people who border'd on the Euphrates, and conſigned the command of them to Shobach. Of which when David had received intelligence, he headed his own troops himſelf, paſſed the Jordan, and ſlew "the men of ſeven hundred chariots," ver. 18. which at ten men to each chariot, amounted to ſeven thouſand men; forty thouſand of their horſemen were likewiſe left dead in the field of battle; tho' in 1 Chron. xix. 18. they are ſaid to have been forty thouſand footmen: From whence we may infer, that their horſe and foot were mixed together, and that in all forty thouſand of them were ſlain, part horſe, and part footmen. Shobach, the general, was likewiſe ſlain upon the ſpot, ver. 18. for as he was a valiant man, he rather choſe to die, than owe his preſervation to an inglorious flight.

Ver. 19. And when all the kings that were ſervants to Hadarezer ſaw that they were ſmitten before Iſrael.] There were ſeveral petty kings who were ſubject to Hadarezer; who was the moſt potent prince in thoſe parts.

——They made peace with Iſrael, and ſerved them.] As Hadarezer himſelf, in all probability, did. Whereby God fulfilled his promiſe to Abraham, of enlarging the dominion of his poſterity as far as Euphrates, Gen. xv. 18.

——So the Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon any more.] But left them to ſhift for themſelves. In conſequence of which David conquer'd their country.

CHAP. XI.

1 While Joab beſieged Rabbah, David committeth adultery with Bathſheba. 6 Uriah ſent for by David to cover the adultery, would not go home neither ſober nor drunken. 14 He carrieth to Joab the letter of his death. 18 Joab ſendeth the news thereof to David. 26 David taketh Bathſheba to wife.

AND it came to paſs, that after the year was expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that David ſent Joab and his ſervants with him, and all Iſrael; and they deſtroyed the children of Ammon, and beſieged Rabbah: but David tarried ſtill at Jeruſalem.

2 ¶ And it came to paſs in an evening-tide, that David aroſe from off his bed, and walked upon the roof of the kings houſe: and from the roof he ſaw a woman waſhing herſelf, and the woman was very beautiful to look upon.

3 And David ſent and enquired after the woman: and one ſaid, Is not this Bathſheba the daughter of Eliam, the wife of Uriah the Hittite?

4 And David ſent meſſengers, and took her; and ſhe came in unto him, and he lay with her (for ſhe was purified from her uncleanneſs) and ſhe returned unto her houſe.

5 And the woman conceived, and ſent and told David, and ſaid, I am with child.

6 ¶ And David ſent to Joab, ſaying, Send me Uriah the Hittite. And Joab ſent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war proſpered.

8 And David ſaid to Uriah, Go down to thy houſe, and waſh thy feet. And Uriah departed out of the kings houſe, and there followed him a meſs of meat from the king.

9 But Uriah ſlept at the door of the kings houſe, with all the ſervants of his lord, and went not down to his houſe.

10 And when they had told David, ſaying, Uriah went not down unto his houſe, David ſaid unto Uriah, Cameſt thou not from thy journey? why then didſt thou not go down unto thine houſe?

11 And Uriah ſaid unto David, The ark, and Iſrael, and Judah abide in tents, and my lord Joab, and the ſervants of my lord are encamped in the open fields; ſhall I then go into mine houſe, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? as thou liveſt, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not do this thing.

12 And David ſaid to Uriah, Tarry here to-day alſo, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jeruſalem that day and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him, and he made him drunk: and at even he went out to lie on his bed with the ſervants of his lord, but went not down to his houſe.

14 ¶ And it came to paſs in the morning, that David wrote a letter to Joab, and ſent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, ſaying, Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hotteſt battle, and retire ye from him, that he may be ſmitten and die.

16 And it came to paſs when Joab obſerved the city, that he aſſigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab: and there fell ſome of the people of the ſervants of David, and Uriah the Hittite died alſo.

18 ¶ Then Joab ſent and told David all the things concerning the war:

19 And charged the meſſenger, ſaying, When thou haſt made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king,

20 And if ſo be that the kings wrath ariſe, and he ſay unto thee, Wherefore approached ye ſo nigh unto the city when ye did fight? knew ye not that they would ſhoot from the wall?

21 Who

21 Who ſmote Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbeſheth? did not a woman caſt a piece of a milſtone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? why went ye nigh the wall? then ſay thou, Thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo.

22 ¶ So the meſſenger went, and came and ſhewed David all that Joab had ſent him for.

23 And the meſſenger ſaid unto David, Surely the men prevailed againſt us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entring of the gate.

24 And the ſhooters ſhot from off the wall upon thy ſervants, and ſome of the kings ſervants be dead, and thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo.

25 Then David ſaid unto the meſſenger, Thus ſhalt thou ſay unto Joab, Let not this thing diſpleaſe thee: for the ſword devoureth one as well as another: make thy battle more ſtrong againſt the city, and overthrow it; and encourage thou him.

26 ¶ And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, ſhe mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning was paſt, David ſent and fet her to his houſe, and ſhe became his wife, and bare him a ſon: but the thing that David had done, diſpleaſed the LORD.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs, that after the year was expired.] The expreſſion in the Hebrew is, at the return of the year; that is, in the ſpring-time, David ſent his armies to perform that which could not be accompliſhed in the concluſion of the preceding year, when the ſeaſon was unfit for action. For the year ending with the month Adar, the next year began with the month Niſan, which was a proper ſeaſon for taking the field, and ſeems to have derived its name from niſim, which ſignifies, military enſigns, that were uſually advanced in that month. In like manner, the month we call March had its name among the Romans from Mars, their god of war, becauſe they then began their military expeditions.

——— At the time when kings go forth to battle.] The words to battle are added by way of explication, but they are not in the Hebrew, in which language to go forth ſignifies to march out to war, Gen. x. 11. Iſa. xlii. 13.

——— That David ſent Joab and his ſervants with him, and all Iſrael: and they deſtroyed the children of Ammon, and beſieged Rabbah.] Depopulated their country, and formed the ſiege of Rabbah, the royal city of the Ammonites.

Ver. 2. And it came to paſs in an evening-tide, that David aroſe from off his bed, and walked upon the roof of the king's houſe.] In order to enjoy the freſh air; for the roofs of their houſes were flat.

——— And from the roof he ſaw a woman waſhing herſelf.] In her garden, where ſhe then bathed. It is likewiſe probable, that ſhe waſhed in order to cleanſe herſelf from ſuch legal impurities as are mentioned, Lev. xv. 19.

——— And the woman was very beautiful to look upon.] Of a delicate ſhape, and amiable countenance and complexion. Thus Jupiter is ſaid to have ſeen Proſerpine bathing herſelf, and expoſing her perſon to his view, in order to inſpire him with a paſſion for her.

Αυομένης ὅλον εἶδ' ἐσέρχεται Περσεφόνεια.

Ver. 3. And David ſent and enquired after the woman: and one ſaid, Is not this Bathſheba, the daughter of Eliam, the wife of Uriah the Hittite?] This ſeems to have been the anſwer of the perſon who was ſent to enquire about her. Uriah, her husband, is called an Hittite, becauſe he was of that nation, but a proſelyte to the Jewiſh religion; and for his valour made one of the king's guards, among the Cherethites and the Pelethites; which was the reaſon, perhaps, that his houſe was ſo near the royal palace.

Among the number of David's worthies, we find one Eliam, chap. xxiii. 34. who was the ſon of Achitophel, and is thought to have been the father of Bathſheba. And that David's violation of her honour provoked Achitophel to join in the conſpiracy of Abſalom.

Ver. 4. And David ſent meſſengers and took her, &c.] The paſſion he had conceived for her proved too violent to admit of any check from reaſon or religion; and tho' he had been informed ſhe was the wife of another man, yet ſo inordinate were his deſires, that he immediately invited her to his palace. The fruit of their unlawful commerce was her ſudden pregnancy, ver. 5. and the danger ſhe was in of being put to death for it, according to the law of Moſes. The king, however, bethought himſelf of an expedient to prevent the latter, by ſending for her husband from the ſiege, ver. 6. under pretence indeed of informing himſelf in what manner it was conducted, but his real intention was, that Uriah ſhould paſs a night or two with his wife. David was, however, diſappointed in his ſcheme; for whether the husband of Bathſheba had any ſuſpicion of the injury he had ſuſtained, or whether indeed he thought it inconſiſtent with the bravery of a captain, to ſolace himſelf at home, while his general and fellow-ſoldiers were expoſed to the dangers and fatigues of a ſiege, he made this laſt his excuſe for not going home to his wife, ver. 11. and contented himſelf with lying at the gate of the palace, with the reſt of the king's guards, ver. 9.

David being thus diſappointed in his ſtratagem, reſolv'd to have recourſe to another expedient, which he hoped would prove more ſucceſsful. He accordingly cauſed Uriah to eat at his table, ver. 13. and plied him ſo well with wine, that he did not doubt but the gay humour, into which he had been wrought by the liquor, would induce him to go home to his wife. But Uriah, intoxicated as he was, paſſed that night alſo with the guards, ver. 13. Upon which the king, who by this time could not but ſuſpect, that he had ſome more private reaſon for abſenting himſelf from his houſe, reſolved to ſacrifice him to the ſafety of his faithleſs wife; and in order to compleat this moſt cruel and impious deſign, he diſpatched him with a letter to Joab, wherein he ordered that general to expoſe this brave officer to ſome imminent danger, and to leave him to the fury of the beſieged, ver. 15.

Ver. 16. And it came to paſs when Joab obſerved the city, that he aſſigned Uriah unto a place, where he knew that valiant men were.] Ordered him to attack a part of the city, which he knew would be valiantly defended.

Ver. 17. And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab.] They ſeem to have ſallied out of the city upon the Iſraelites, when they ſaw them preparing for an aſſault.

——— And there fell ſome of the people of the ſervants of David, and Uriah the Hittite died alſo.] This was a farther aggravation of David's ſin, that he not only expoſed an innocent and faithful ſervant to be ſlain, but other people alſo with him, who might have lived to be ſerviceable to their country.

Ver. 18. Then Joab ſent and told David all the things concerning the war.] In what manner the operations of it were managed, and what ill ſucceſs they had in one engagement.

Ver. 19. And charged the meſſenger, ſaying, When thou haſt made an end of telling the matters of war unto the king.] Eſpecially the repulſe the Iſraelites had received from the beſieged.

Ver. 20. And if ſo be that the king's wrath ariſe, and he ſay unto thee, Wherefore approached ye ſo nigh unto the city when ye did fight? &c.] All good kings are careful to preſerve their ſubjects; and therefore it might be ſuppoſed, poſed, that David would be angry when he heard of this loſs, till he reflected upon the reaſon why his ſoldiers were expoſed to ſo much danger.

Ver. 21. Who ſmote Abimelech the ſon of Jerubbeſheth? &c.] Theſe are ſtill the words the king might be ſuppoſed to ſay; How came Abimelech to loſe his life, was it not by venturing too near the wall?

——Then ſay thou, Thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo.] This, Joab knew, would ſoon pacify the king.

Ver. 23. And the meſſenger ſaid unto David, Surely the men prevailed againſt us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even at the entring of the gate.] He declares that the Ammonites made a ſally, and threw the Iſraelites into ſome diſorder, till theſe at laſt recovered their courage, rallied again, and repulſed the Ammonites to the very gates of the city.

Ver. 24. And the ſhooters ſhot from off the wall upon thy ſervants, and ſome of the king's ſervants be dead, and thy ſervant Uriah the Hittite is dead alſo.] The ſhooters, mentioned in this verſe, were either archers, or ſuch as managed the machines out of which arrows and ſtones were ſhot.

Ver. 25. Then David ſaid unto the meſſenger, Thus ſhalt thou ſay unto Joab, Let not this thing diſpleaſe thee, &c.] That is, be not diſheartned by this loſs. David himſelf ſhewed no ſign of diſpleaſure, expecting to hear the news he ſo much deſired of Uriah's death.

Ver. 26. And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, ſhe mourned for her husband.] Not with much ſincerity, nor for any conſiderable length of time; for then David could not have taken her ſoon enough into his houſe, to cover his adultery. The common time was ſeven days, 1 Sam xxxi. 7.

Ver. 27. And when the mourning was paſt, David ſent and fet her to his houſe, and ſhe became his wife, and bare him a ſon: But the thing that David had done, diſpleaſed the Lord.] This whole affair was evil in the eyes of the Lord, as the words are in the Hebrew. Not only his adultery, and the murder of Uriah; but alſo his eſpouſing Bathſheba. For according to the Hebrew doctors, it was utterly unlawful for any to eſpouſe a woman he had defiled during her marriage with another. This hath made ſome of the Jews very induſtrious to excuſe David from the crime of adultery. For, Laniado himſelf acknowledges, that if David had committed adultery with Bathſheba, ſhe had been perpetually prohibited, and unlawful to him. But tho' this ought not to have been done, yet when it was once accompliſhed, the marriage was held valid, and the children he afterward had by her were legitimate. See Buxtorf. de Sponſalibus, & Divortiis. ſect. 43.

CHAP. XII.

1 Nathans parable of the ewe-lamb, cauſeth David to be his own judge. 7 David, reproved by Nathan, confeſſeth his ſin, and is pardoned. 16 David mourneth and prayeth for the child, while it lived. 24 Solomon is born, and named Jedidiah. 26 David taketh Rabbah, and tortureth the people thereof.

AND the LORD ſent Nathan unto David: and he came unto him, and ſaid unto him, There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

2 The rich man had exceeding many flocks and herds:

3 But the poor man had nothing ſave one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and nouriſhed up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his own meat, and drank of his own cup, and lay in his boſom, and was unto him as a daughter.

4 And there came a traveller unto the rich man, and he ſpared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd to dreſs for the way-faring man that was come unto him, but took the poor mans lamb, and dreſſed it for the man that was come to him.

5 And Davids anger was greatly kindled againſt the man, and he ſaid to Nathan, As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing, ſhall ſurely die.

6 And he ſhall reſtore the lamb fourfold, becauſe he did this thing, and becauſe he had no pity.

7 ¶ And Nathan ſaid to David, Thou art the man. Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, I anointed thee king over Iſrael, and I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul:

8 And I gave thee thy maſters houſe, and thy maſters wives into thy boſom, and gave thee the houſe of Iſrael, and of Judah; and if that had been too little, I would moreover have given unto thee ſuch and ſuch things.

9 Wherefore haſt thou deſpiſed the commandment of the LORD, to do evil in his ſight? thou haſt killed Uriah the Hittite with the ſword, and haſt taken his wife to be thy wife, and haſt ſlain him with the ſword of the children of Ammon.

10 Now therefore the ſword ſhall never depart from thine houſe; becauſe thou haſt deſpiſed me, and haſt taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife.

11 Thus ſaith the LORD, Behold, I will raiſe up evil againſt thee out of thine own houſe, and I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbour, and he ſhall lie with thy wives in the ſight of this ſun.

12 For thou didſt it ſecretly: but I will do this thing before all Iſrael, and before the ſun.

13 And David ſaid unto Nathan, I have ſinned againſt the LORD. And Nathan ſaid unto David, The LORD alſo hath put away thy ſin; thou ſhalt not die.

14 Howbeit, becauſe by this deed thou haſt given great occaſion to the enemies of the LORD to blaſpheme, the child alſo that is born unto thee, ſhall ſurely die.

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his houſe: and the LORD ſtruck the child that Uriahs wife bare unto David, and it was very ſick.

16 David therefore beſought God for the child, and David faſted, and went in, and lay all night upon the earth.

17 And the elders of his houſe aroſe, and went to him, to raiſe him up from the earth: but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

18 And it came to paſs on the ſeventh day, that the child died: and the ſervants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they ſaid, Behold, while the child was yet alive, we ſpake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he then vex himſelf, if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David ſaw that his ſervants whiſpered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David ſaid unto his ſervants, Is the child dead? And they ſaid, He is dead.

20 Then David aroſe from the earth, and waſhed, and anointed himſelf, and changed his apparel, and came into the houſe of the LORD, and worſhipped: then he came to his own houſe, and when he required, they ſet bread before him, and he did eat.

21 Then ſaid his ſervants unto him, What thing is this that thou haſt done? thou didſt faſt and weep for the child while it was alive, but when the child was dead, thou didſt riſe and eat bread.

22 And he ſaid, While the child was yet alive, I faſted and wept: for I ſaid, Who can tell whether God will be gracious to me, that the child may live?

23 But now he is dead, wherefore ſhould I faſt? can I bring him back again? I ſhall go to him, but he ſhall not return to me.

24 ¶ And David comforted Bathſheba his wife, and went in unto her, and lay with her: and ſhe bare a ſon, and he called his name Solomon; and the LORD loved him.

25 And he ſent by the hand of Nathan the prophet; and he called his name Jedidiah, becauſe of the LORD.

26 ¶ And Joab fought againſt Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and took the royal city.

27 And Joab ſent meſſengers to David, and ſaid, I have fought againſt Rabbah, and have taken the city of waters.

28 Now therefore gather the reſt of the people together, and encamp againſt the city, and take it: leſt I take the city, and it be called after my name.

29 And David gathered all the people together, and went to Rabbah, and fought againſt it, and took it.

30 And he took their kings crown from off his head (the weight whereof was a talent of gold, with the precious ſtones) and it was ſet on Davids head: and he brought forth the ſpoil of the city in great abundance.

31 And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them paſs through the brick-kiln: and thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon. So David and all the people returned unto Jeruſalem.

Ver. 1. And the Lord ſent Nathan unto David, &c.] God being highly provoked with David for committing two ſuch heinous crimes as murder and adultery, made choice of the prophet Nathan, to go and denounce his ſevere judgments againſt him, at the time when that monarch, inſenſible of his guilt, was indulging himſelf in the criminal effects of his adultery. The prophet, who knew the generous and upright heart of David, in every caſe wherein this new and degrading paſſion was not concerned, accoſted him with a parable of a wealthy man, who had ſpared his own numerous flocks, and ſeized upon an only favourite lamb of a poor neighbour, to feaſt an hungry gueſt. The prophet never touches upon the murder, throughout his parable; and Abarbinel aſſigns the following reaſon for his ſilence in that particular. The rich man, ſaith he, plainly ſignifies David; and his flocks and herds, the wives and concubines of that prince. The poor man repreſents Uriah, who, as our author thinks, was a widower, and had ſeveral children alive by a former wife, when he married Bathſheba; whom he compares to a lamb which he bought, becauſe he eſpouſed her in a ſolemn manner; and cheriſhed her with a tender affection, and ſhe grew up with him, and the children he had by his former wife. This lamb being taken by the rich man from the poor, to gratify a wanton appetite, ſignifies David's taking Bathſheba to his bed. The reſemblance would have been more compleat, if the prophet had added, that the rich man killed his poor neighbour, from whom he took the lamb; but this circumſtance Abarbinel thinks is omitted in the parable, that David, by not readily apprehending the meaning of Nathan, might be induced unawares to pronounce a ſentence of condemnation upon himſelf. And then the prophet had a fair opportunity to ſhew him, that if the rich man who took away the poor man's lamb deſerved death, according to his own judgment, how much more did he deſerve it, who had not only taken another man's wife, but alſo cauſed her husband to be ſlain by the enemies of Iſrael.

The aggravating circumſtances, with which Nathan enforced his parable, kindled the wrath of David to ſuch a degree, that he pronounced ſentence of death againſt the perſon who had been guilty of ſuch an unnatural violence. This ſeems to be more than the fact deſerved, or than he was authorized to inflict for its puniſhment, Exod. xxii. 1. But it is obſervable, that David, now when he was moſt indulgent to himſelf and his own ſin, was moſt ſevere to others.

The words were no ſooner out of his mouth, than Nathan made him ſenſible, that he had pronounced ſentence againſt himſelf, by telling him with a prophetic boldneſs, that he was the guilty perſon, ver. 7. and much more criminal than the rich man in the parable, in that he had not only defiled the bed of a faithful ſervant, but had likewiſe murdered him by the ſword of an enemy, that he might take the adultereſs into his boſom. He then recapitulated to him all the aggravations of his double crime, particularly his ingratitude to his Divine Protector and Benefactor, and the occaſion he had given to his enemies to blaſpheme. This expreſſion of the prophet inclines us to think, that David had not been able ſo to conceal his crime, but that it had taken wind among the neighbouring nations, who could not forbear reflecting upon the God of Iſrael, for favouring a monarch who could be guilty of ſuch horrid crimes, as themſelves perhaps were ſtrangers to.

Nathan concluded with denouncing the effects of the Divine Reſentment againſt David: He aſſured him that Uriah's murder would prove an endleſs ſource of bloodſhed in his own poſterity, and that his adultery, how private ſoever, ſhould be expiated by the open defilement of his own wives and concubines, by thoſe of his own family, and in the face of the ſun.

This terrible ſentence brought David to ſuch a deep ſenſe of his guilt, that he could only ſay, amidſt the anguiſh that overwhelmed him, I have ſinned againſt the Lord, ver. 13. but the ſincere remorſe with which that ſin was then attended, obtained an immediate alleviation of the puniſhment. However, the unhappy ſon he had by Bathſheba, was doomed to death, ver. 14. and David tried in vain to obtain a reprieve for him, by prayers and tears, by faſting, ſackcloth, lying on the ground, and other marks of repentance. As for the other part of the ſentence which related to his wives, it was ſoon after fulfilled by his unnatural ſon Abſalom, as will appear by the ſequel.

This child being dead, according to the prediction of the prophet, David comforted Bathſheba for that loſs; ſoon after which ſhe again found herſelf pregnant, and ſhe called the ſon that ſhe then bore to him, Solomon, a name ſignificative of his future peaceful reign; to which Nathan added that of Jedidiah, or beloved of the Lord; and ſuch he proved, at leaſt, during the former part of his glorious and ſucceſsful reign.

Ver. 26. And Joab fought againſt Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and took the royal city.] That part of the city where the royal palace was, and which was ſituated on the edge of the water that flowed by the city, as the next verſe ſeems to interpret it.

Ver. 27. And Joab ſent meſſengers to David, and ſaid, I have fought againſt Rabbah, and have taken the city of waters.] That part of this city which lay upon the waters. The other part, which was the heart of the city being yet untaken. But as it was ſupplied with water from this part, of which Joab had got poſſeſſion, it could not hold out long, but would be compelled to ſurrender, becauſe Joab cut off their water from them. And thus ſome learned men tranſlate the laſt words of this verſe; by adding the particle mem before eth, he took from the city the waters.

Ver. 28. Now therefore gather the reſt of the people together, and encamp againſt the city, and take it, &c.] It appears from hence, that tho' Joab had many faults, yet he loved his prince, and endeavoured to raiſe his glory.

Ver. 29. And David gathered all the people together, and went to Rabbah, and fought againſt it, and took it.] The army being reinforced with ſuch great recruits, they did not merely block up the city to ſtarve it, and to force it to ſurrender; but took it by ſtorm, and permitted the ſoldiers to plunder and take the ſpoil of it, as Joſephus writes.

Ver. 30. And he took their king's crown from off his head (the weight whereof was a talent of gold, with the precious ſtones.] Or rather the price or value of it, as the Hebrew word frequently ſignifies; and it would be abſurd to underſtand it otherwiſe; for what man could bear ſuch a weight, tho' we ſhould even underſtand it of the common talent of 60 pounds, as Kimchi doth? Some Jews and others fancy, that it was only hung over the monarch's head like the top of a canopy; but this is contrary to the plain meaning of the original, which did not want words to have expreſſed that circumſtance, had it been fact.

Ver. 31. And he brought forth the people that were therein, and put them under ſaws, and under harrows of iron, and under axes of iron, and made them paſs through the brick-kiln.] Some of the inhabitants he cauſed to be ſawn in ſunder: Over others, horſes drew harrows with great iron teeth: Others were drawn over ſharp ſickles, or pointed ſtones, which perhaps are meant by brick-kilns. For, according to ſome interpreters, he cauſed them to be dragged through the place where bricks were made, and there grated their fleſh upon the ragged pieces of broken bricks. Tho' ſome will have the word malken to ſignify the place where the Ammonites offered their ſacrifices to their god Moloch, or Malcom, as he is frequently called; and made the people there to paſs through the fire. The Vulgate accordingly tranſlates it, fornacem Moloch, the furnace of Moloch. This dreadful puniſhment was to terrify other countries from violating the right of nations, by abuſing public ambaſſadors. Tho' many have thought it too ſevere, and looked upon it as an argument, that David did this in the ſtate of his impenitence; when the mild and gentle Spirit of God was departed from him, and he became cruel and furious, as well as luſtful.

———And thus did he unto all the cities of the children of Ammon.] This will not let us think, that this ſeverity was exerciſed only on thoſe who adviſed the ſhameful treatment of David's ambaſſadors; for he treated all the cities in the country with the ſame rigour.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Amnon loving Tamar, by Jonadabs counſel feigning himſelf ſick, raviſheth her. 15 He hateth her, and ſhamefully turneth her away. 19 Abſalom entertaineth her, and concealeth his purpoſe. 23 At a ſheep-ſhearing, among all the kings ſons, he killeth Amnon. 30 David grieving at the news, is comforted by Jonadab. 37 Abſalom fleeth to Talmai at Geſhur.

AND it came to paſs after this, that Abſalom the ſon of David had a fair ſiſter, whoſe name was Tamar, and Amnon the ſon of David loved her.

2 And Amnon was ſo vexed, that he fell ſick for his ſiſter Tamar; for ſhe was a virgin: and Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her.

3 But Amnon had a friend, whoſe name was Jonadab, the ſon of Shimeah, Davids brother: and Jonadab was a very ſubtil man.

4 And he ſaid unto him, Why art thou, being the kings ſon, lean from day to day? will thou not tell me? And Amnon ſaid unto him, I love Tamar my brother Abſaloms ſiſter.

5 And Jonadab ſaid unto him, Lay thee down on thy bed, and make thy ſelf ſick: and when thy father cometh to ſee thee, ſay unto him, I pray thee, let my ſiſter Tamar come, and give me meat, and dreſs the meat in my ſight, that I may ſee it, and eat it at her hand.

6 ¶ So Amnon lay down, and made himſelf ſick: and when the king was come to ſee him, Amnon ſaid unto the king, I pray thee, let Tamar my ſiſter come and make me a couple of cakes in my ſight, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David ſent home to Tamar, ſaying, Go now to thy brother Amnons houſe, and dreſs him meat.

8 So Tamar went to her brother Amnons houſe (and he was laid down) and ſhe took flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his ſight, and did bake the cakes.

9 And ſhe took a pan, and poured them out before him, but he refuſed to eat. And Amnon ſaid, Have out all men from me: and they went out every man from him.

10 And

10 And Amnon ſaid unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which ſhe had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when ſhe had brought them unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and ſaid unto her, Come lie with me, my ſiſter.

12 And ſhe anſwered him, Nay, my brother, do not force me: for no ſuch thing ought to be done in Iſrael; do not thou this folly.

13 And I, whither ſhall I cauſe my ſhame to go? and as for thee, thou ſhalt be as one of the fools in Iſrael: now therefore, I pray thee, ſpeak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

14 Howbeit, he would not hearken unto her voice: but being ſtronger than ſhe, forced her, and lay with her.

15 ¶ Then Amnon hated her exceedingly, ſo that the hatred wherewith he hated her, was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her: and Amnon ſaid unto her, Ariſe, be gone.

16 And ſhe ſaid unto him, There is no cauſe; this evil in ſending me away is greater than the other that thou didſt unto me: but he would not hearken unto her.

17 Then he called his ſervant that miniſtred unto him, and ſaid, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

18 And ſhe had a garment of divers colours upon her: for with ſuch robes were the kings daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his ſervant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

19 ¶ And Tamar put aſhes on her head, and rent her garment of divers colours that was on her, and laid her hand on her head, and went on crying.

20 And Abſalom her brother ſaid unto her, Hath Amnon thy brother been with thee? but hold now thy peace, my ſiſter: he is thy brother, regard not this thing. So Tamar remained deſolate in her brother Abſaloms houſe.

21 ¶ But when king David heard of all theſe things, he was very wroth.

22 And Abſalom ſpake unto his brother Amnon neither good nor bad: for Abſalom hated Amnon, becauſe he had forced his ſiſter Tamar.

23 ¶ And it came to paſs after two full years, that Abſalom had ſheep-ſhearers in Baal-hazor, which is beſide Ephraim: and Abſalom invited all the kings ſons.

24 And Abſalom came to the king, and ſaid, Behold now, thy ſervant hath ſheep-ſhearers, let the king, I beſeech thee, and his ſervants, go with thy ſervant.

25 And the king ſaid to Abſalom, Nay, my ſon, let us not all now go, leſt we be chargeable unto thee. And he preſſed him: howbeit he would not go, but bleſſed him.

26 Then ſaid Abſalom, If not, I pray thee, let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king ſaid unto him, Why ſhould he go with thee?

27 But Abſalom preſſed him, that he let Amnon and all the kings ſons go with him.

28 ¶ Now Abſalom had commanded his ſervants, ſaying, Mark ye now when Amnons heart is merry with wine, and when I ſay unto you, Smite Amnon, then kill him, fear not: have not I commanded you? be couragious, and be valiant.

29 And the ſervants of Abſalom did unto Amnon, as Abſalom had commanded: then all the kings ſons aroſe, and every man gat him up upon his mule, and fled.

30 ¶ And it came to paſs while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, ſaying, Abſalom hath ſlain all the kings ſons, and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king aroſe, and tare his garments, and lay on the earth; and all his ſervants ſtood by with their clothes rent.

32 And Jonadab, the ſon of Shimeah Davids brother, anſwered and ſaid, Let not my lord ſuppoſe that they have ſlain all the young men the kings ſons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the appointment of Abſalom this hath been determined, from the day that he forced his ſiſter Tamar.

33 Now therefore let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the kings ſons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But Abſalom fled. And the young man that kept the watch, lift up his eyes, and looked, and behold, there came much people by the way of the hill-ſide behind him.

35 And

35 And Jonadab ſaid unto the king, Behold, the kings ſons come: as thy ſervant ſaid, ſo it is.

36 And it came to paſs aſſoon as he had made an end of ſpeaking, that behold, the kings ſons came, and lift up their voice and wept: and the king alſo and all his ſervants wept very ſore.

37 ¶ But Abſalom fled, and went to Talmai the ſon of Ammihud the king of Geſhur: and David mourned for his ſon every day.

38 So Abſalom fled, and went to Geſhur, and was there three years.

39 And the ſoul of king David longed to go forth unto Abſalom: for he was comforted concerning Amnon, ſeeing he was dead.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after this, that Abſalom the ſon of David had a fair ſiſter, whoſe name was Tamar, and Amnon the ſon of David loved her.] Now opens a diſmal ſcene of the calamities which Nathan foretold David ſhould befall his houſe, chap xii. 10. Amnon his eldeſt ſon was ſcarcely eighteen years of age, when he laid the foundation of all the domeſtic troubles of his too indulgent father, by an unnatural inceſt with one of his own ſiſters. David had two children by Maacah, the princeſs of Geſhur; Abſalom and Tamar, the beauty of which latter became the unhappy cauſe of this unlawful paſſion. Amnon was obſerved to pine away ſecretly, being aſhamed to diſcover the cauſe of his trouble, when a near relation, Jonadab, the ſon of Shimeah, David's brother, having drawn from him the fatal ſecret, not only encouraged him, but furniſhed him with means to perpetrate the deed. According to his helliſh advice, Amnon, pretending that his diſeaſe had now confined him to his bed, obtained an order from the king his father, that Tamar ſhould come to him, and make him ſome kind of confectionary meat, to pleaſe his decayed appetite; and this the innocent princeſs readily complied with. But ſhe was hardly enter'd with it into his bed-chamber, before he, having previouſly ſent all his attendants far enough, laid hold on her, and, in ſpite of all her prayers and remonſtrances, raviſhed her. His inordinate deſires having thus obtained their gratification, he conceived ſuch a diſguſt againſt her, that not being able to bear her preſence any longer, and finding a juſt and modeſt reluctancy in her to withdraw in that deplorable condition, his barbarity roſe to ſuch a height, that he violently cauſed her to be turned out of his houſe by ſome of his ſervants. Her griet and confuſion were now become too great to ſuffer her to think how to avoid expoſing herſelf; ſo that forgetting every thing but her preſent misfortune, ſhe only ſought how to expreſs her ſenſe of it in the moſt lively manner, namely, by tearing her virgin robes, ſcattering duſt on her head, and filling the air with her cries. In this manner ſhe went to the houſe of Abſalom, who being her brother both by father and mother, was the propereſt perſon to procure her a redreſs, if any was to be obtained. That prince, who was naturally haughty and revengeful, could not but feel the deepeſt reſentment againſt ſo barbarous a violence as his ſiſter had ſuſtained; however, as the revenge he meditated againſt the raviſher was of too deep a nature to be preſently executed, he contented himſelf with deſiring his diſconſolate ſiſter to alleviate, or at leaſt to conceal, her grief, and to paſs the remainder of her days in ſolitude at his houſe; whilſt he, young as he was, concealed his reſentment ſo well, that Amnon had not the leaſt ſuſpicion of it. When the news of this infamous action came to David's ears, he was exceedingly offended; but that was all: Amnon was his eldeſt ſon, and he could not prevail upon himſelf to inflict any other puniſhment upon him, than that of his diſpleaſure.

This remiſsneſs did but add fewel to Abſalom's hatred; tho' he did not find a proper opportunity for the accompliſhment of his deſign, till two years were elapſed; at which period Amnon's crime might be ſuppoſed to be forgotten. The better to conceal his revenge, he invited his father, and all his brothers, to a ſheep-ſhearing feaſt, which he was to make at Baal-hazor beſide Ephraim. He eaſily excuſed the king, who declined going, from a principle of œconomy; becauſe Abſalom had only invited him out of formality, and to avoid ſuſpicion; but he inſiſted, in particular, upon his brother Amnon's favouring him with his preſence, among the reſt of his brethren, and eaſily obtained the king's conſent. When they were come to the place, he received them with an air which ſhewed nothing leſs than his murdering intention; but aſſoon as he obſerved, that wine had raiſed their mirth to the deſired pitch, he gave a ſignal to a number of his ſervants, whom he had appointed for the deed, and who immediately fell upon Amnon, and ſtabbed him to death; whilſt the reſt of the king's ſons, expecting, perhaps, their turns would be next, made all poſſible haſte to get to their mules, and rode away to Jeruſalem. But before they could reach it, word had been brought to the king, that Abſalom had cauſed all his brethren to be aſſaſſinated. It is not difficult to imagine in what manner David received the dreadful news; he rent his cloaths, caſt himſelf down upon the ground, and abandoned himſelf to the moſt violent expreſſions of grief. The ſervants who were about him, endeavoured to bear a part in this tragic ſcene, and ſtood round him with their cloaths rent. Jonadab only, the infamous inſtrument of Amnon's inceſt, rightly gueſſed that he alone had proved the victim of Abſalom's revenge. He acquainted the king with his thoughts, which were ſoon after confirmed by the arrival of the reſt of the young princes, who, with tears in their eyes, declared all that had happened. It was a melancholy meeting in general; the king mourned for ſome time the loſs of his eldeſt ſon, whilſt his murderer went and ſhelter'd himſelf under the protection of his grandfather, the king of Geſhur, with whom he continued three years.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Joab, ſuborning a widow of Tekoah, by a parable to incline the kings heart to fetch home Abſalom, bringeth him to Jeruſalem. 25 Abſaloms beauty, hair, and children. 28 After two years, Abſalom by Joab is brought into the kings preſence.

NOW Joab the ſon of Zeruiah perceived that the kings heart was toward Abſalom.

2 And Joab ſent to Tekoah, and fetcht thence a wiſe woman, and ſaid unto her, I pray thee feign thy ſelf to be a mourner, and put on now mourning apparel, and anoint not thy ſelf with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead:

3 And come to the king, and ſpeak on this manner unto him: ſo Joab put the words in her mouth.

4 ¶ And when the woman of Tekoah ſpake to the king, ſhe fell on her face to the ground, and did obeiſance, and ſaid, Help, O king.

5 And the king ſaid unto her, What aileth thee? And ſhe anſwered, I am indeed a widow woman, and mine husband is dead.

6 And

6 And thy handmaid had two ſons, and they two ſtrove together in the field, and there was none to part them, but the one ſmote the other, and ſlew him.

7 And behold, the whole family is riſen againſt thine handmaid, and they ſaid, Deliver him that ſmote his brother, that we may kill him, for the life of his brother whom he ſlew, and we will deſtroy the heir alſo: and ſo they ſhall quench my coal which is left, and ſhall not leave to my husband neither name nor remainder upon the earth.

8 And the king ſaid unto the woman, Go to thine houſe, and I will give charge concerning thee.

9 And the woman of Tekoah ſaid unto the king, My lord, O king, the iniquity be on me, and on my fathers houſe: and the king and his throne be guiltleſs.

10 And the king ſaid, Whoſoever ſaith ought unto thee bring him to me, and he ſhall not touch thee any more.

11 Then ſaid ſhe, I pray thee, let the king remember the LORD thy God, that thou wouldſt not ſuffer the revengers of blood to deſtroy any more, leſt they deſtroy my ſon. And he ſaid, As the LORD liveth, there ſhall not one hair of thy ſon fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman ſaid, Let thine handmaid, I pray thee, ſpeak one word unto my lord the king. And he ſaid, Say on.

13 And the woman ſaid, Wherefore then haſt thou thought ſuch a thing againſt the people of God? for the king doth ſpeak this thing as one which is faulty, in that the king doth not fetch home again his baniſhed.

14 For we muſt needs die, and are as water ſpilt on the ground, which cannot be gathered up again: neither doth God reſpect any perſon, yet doth he deviſe means, that his baniſhed be not expelled from him.

15 Now therefore that I am come to ſpeak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is becauſe the people have made me afraid: and thy handmaid ſaid, I will now ſpeak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the requeſt of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would deſtroy me and my ſon together out of the inheritance of God:

17 Then thine handmaid ſaid, The word of my lord the king ſhall now be comfortable: for as an angel of God, ſo is my lord the king to diſcern good and bad: therefore the LORD thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king anſwered and ſaid unto the woman, Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I ſhall ask thee. And the woman ſaid, Let my lord the king now ſpeak.

19 And the king ſaid, Is not the hand of Joab with thee in all this? And the woman anſwered and ſaid, As thy ſoul liveth, my lord the king, none can turn to the right hand, or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath ſpoken: for thy ſervant Joab he bade me, and he put all theſe words in the mouth of thine handmaid:

20 To fetch about this form of ſpeech hath thy ſervant Joab done this thing: and my lord is wiſe, according to the wiſdom of an angel of God, to know all things that are in the earth.

21 ¶ And the king ſaid unto Joab, Behold now, I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Abſalom again.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himſelf, and thanked the king: and Joab ſaid, To-day thy ſervant knoweth that I have found grace in thy ſight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the requeſt of his ſervant.

23 So Joab aroſe and went to Geſhur, and brought Abſalom to Jeruſalem.

24 And the king ſaid, Let him turn to his own houſe, and let him not ſee my face. So Abſalom returned to his own houſe, and ſaw not the kings face.

25 ¶ But in all Iſrael there was none to be ſo much praiſed as Abſalom, for his beauty: from the ſole of his foot, even to the crown of his head, there was no blemiſh in him.

26 And when he polled his head (for it was at every years end that he polled it: becauſe the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it) he weighed the hair of his head at two hundred ſhekels after the kings weight.

27 And unto Abſalom there were born three ſons and one daughter, whoſe name was Tamar: ſhe was a woman of a fair countenance.

28 ¶ So Abſalom dwelt two full years in Jeruſalem, and ſaw not the kings face.

29 Therefore Abſalom ſent for Joab, to have ſent him to the king, but he would not come to him: and when he ſent again the ſecond time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he ſaid unto his ſervants, See, Joabs field is near mine, and he hath barley there; go and ſet it on fire: and Abſaloms ſervants ſet the field on fire.

31 Then Joab aroſe and came to Abſalom unto his houſe, and ſaid unto him, Wherefore have thy ſervants ſet my field on fire?

32 And Abſalom anſwered Joab, Behold, I ſent unto thee, ſaying, Come hither, that I may ſend thee to the king, to ſay, Wherefore am I come from Geſhur? it had been good for me to have been there ſtill: now therefore let me ſee the kings face: and if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Abſalom, he came to the king, and bowed himſelf on his face to the ground before the king: and the king kiſſed Abſalom.

Ver. 1. Now Joab the ſon of Zeruiah perceived that the king's heart was toward Abſalom.] Joab, at the expiration of the three years, obſerving that the king expreſſed leſs grief for his dead ſon, than uneaſineſs for his abſent one, reaſonably concluded, that if he could work upon him to recall him, by any ſtratagem that would ſave his honour, it would be an acceptable ſervice to them both. To compaſs this, he inſtructed an artful woman, whom he had ſent for from Tekoah, a place not far from Jeruſalem, to addreſs herſelf to the king, under the perſonage of a diſtreſſed widow, juſt on the brink of being bereaved of the only ſon ſhe had left, who was in danger of being put to death for having kill'd his brother in a fray; by which there would be a final end of her husband's name and family. The ſtory bore indeed no parallel with that of Abſalom, and perhaps the politic Joab had contrived it ſo, to prevent the king's ſuſpecting it to be any premeditated deſign. She, however, told it with ſuch pathetic expreſſions of grief, that David, moved with compaſſion, gave her his royal word, that her ſurviving ſon ſhould be ſhelter'd from all future proſecution. But he had ſcarce bound it with an oath, when, according to her inſtructions, ſhe took the liberty, tho' in the humbleſt terms, to repreſent to him the wrong he did himſelf, by ſuffering his ſon to continue ſo long in baniſhment, ſeeing that could by no means recall the dead, whoſe life once gone was like water ſpilt upon the ground, which could not be gathered up again. The king, who by this time perceived the woman's drift, immediately concluded that Joab was at the bottom of it. He accordingly taxed the woman with it, and ſhe, in the modeſteſt terms, acknowledged it, adding, that the king was as an angel of God, from whom it was impoſſible to conceal any thing. Joab, who was preſent all the while, took this opportunity of falling proſtrate before the king; ſeemingly to beg pardon for his ſtratagem, but in reality to improve David's promiſe in favour of Abſalom; and the king being as willing to grant as the other was to ask, immediately ordered Joab to fetch the prince from his baniſhment, but with this condition, that he ſhould not approach the king's perſon, but retire to his own houſe; which was complied with accordingly, for he did not ſee the king for the ſpace of two years after his return.

The Sacred Hiſtorian here takes notice of Abſalom's exceſſive and enſnaring beauty, ver. 25. which captivated the hearts of people to him, in ſuch a manner as inſpired him with the firſt ſentiments of his unnatural rebellion.

One circumſtance is mentioned, with relation to the yearly polling of his hair, ver. 26. which, taken in a literal ſenſe, will appear incredible, it being ſaid to have amounted to 200 ſhekels after the king's weight, that is, at leaſt, to three pounds and two ounces; but to double that weight, according to ſome, who make the king's ſhekel to have been equal to that of the ſanctuary, that is, to half an ounce averdupois, ſuch a monſtrous quantity of hair, were any head able to bear the weight of it, would rather diſfigure than be an ornament to it. We think it therefore more probable, that the word ſhakal is here to be underſtood of the value, and not of the weight of Abſalom's hair; that is, it was worth 200 ſhekels, whether half or quarters of ounces of ſilver. Not that we will ſuppoſe that Abſalom ſold it, but that, whether he gave it to his ſervants as a perquiſite, or to ſome favourite women, it was reckon'd worth that ſum. Some Jewiſh doctors inform us, that the hair of Abſalom, being exceeding long and fair, was in great requeſt among the women of rank in Jeruſalem, who adorned their heads with it.

The Sacred Text adds, that unto Abſalom were born three ſons and one daughter, whoſe name was Tamar, ver. 27. But it is ſaid, chap. xviii. 18. that he reared up a pillar in the king's dale, to perpetuate his name, becauſe he had no male iſſue. In anſwer to which ſeeming difficulty, we may ſuppoſe that his ſons died in that ſhort interval, tho' the Sacred Hiſtorian has not mentioned their deaths.

Abſalom being at length tired with living ſo long in diſgrace, and having twice ſent in vain for Joab to come to him, he found no other way of bringing him, but by cauſing ſome of his adjacent corn to be ſet on fire, ver. 29, 30. Joab ſoon came to him, at the news of this unexpected treatment; and after ſome paſſionate expoſtulations on both ſides, it was agreed that the king ſhould be applied to in favour of his ſon, which was ſoon after ſucceſsfully accompliſhed by Joab.

CHAP. XV.

1 Abſalom, by fair ſpeeches and courteſies, ſtealeth the hearts of Iſrael. 7 Under pretence of a vow he obtaineth leave to go to Hebron. 10 He maketh there a great conſpiracy. 13 David upon the news fleeth from Jeruſalem. 19 Ittai would not leave him. 24 Zadok and Abiathar are ſent back with the ark. 30 David and his company go up to mount Olivet weeping. 31 He curſeth Ahithophels counſel. 32 Huſhai is ſent back with inſtructions.

AND it came to paſs after this, that Abſalom prepared him chariots, and horſes, and fifty men to run before him.

2 And Abſalom roſe up early, and ſtood beſide the way of the gate: and it was ſo, that when any man that had a controverſy came to the king for judgment, then Abſalom called unto him, and ſaid, Of what city art thou? And he ſaid, Thy ſervant is of one of the tribes of Iſrael.

3 And Abſalom ſaid unto him, See, thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee.

4 Abſa-

4 Abſalom ſaid moreover, Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any ſuit or cauſe, might come unto me, and I would do him juſtice.

5 And it was ſo, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeiſance, he put forth his hand, and took him and kiſſed him.

6 And on this manner did Abſalom to all Iſrael that came to the king for judgment: ſo Abſalom ſtole the hearts of the men of Iſrael.

7 ¶ And it came to paſs after forty years, that Abſalom ſaid unto the king, I pray thee let me go and pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the LORD, in Hebron.

8 For thy ſervant vowed a vow while I abode at Geſhur in Syria, ſaying, If the LORD ſhall bring me again indeed to Jeruſalem, then I will ſerve the LORD.

9 And the king ſaid unto him, Go in peace. So he aroſe, and went to Hebron.

10 ¶ But Abſalom ſent ſpies throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, ſaying, Aſſoon as ye hear the ſound of the trumpet, then ye ſhall ſay, Abſalom reigneth in Hebron.

11 And with Abſalom went two hundred men out of Jeruſalem, that were called, and they went in their ſimplicity, and they knew not any thing.

12 And Abſalom ſent for Ahithophel, the Gilonite, Davids counſeller, from his city, even from Giloh, while he offered ſacrifices: and the conſpiracy was ſtrong; for the people increaſed continually with Abſalom.

13 ¶ And there came a meſſenger to David, ſaying, The hearts of the men of Iſrael are after Abſalom.

14 And David ſaid unto all his ſervants, that were with him at Jeruſalem, Ariſe, and let us flee: for we ſhall not elſe eſcape from Abſalom: make ſpeed to depart, leſt he overtake us ſuddenly, and bring evil upon us, and ſmite the city with the edge of the ſword.

15 And the kings ſervants ſaid unto the king, Behold, thy ſervants are ready to do whatſoever my lord the king ſhall appoint.

16 And the king went forth, and all his houſhold after him: and the king left ten women, which were concubines, to keep the houſe.

17 And the king went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his ſervants paſſed on beſide him; and all the Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the Gittites, ſix hundred men which came after him from Gath, paſſed on before the king.

19 ¶ Then ſaid the king to Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goeſt thou alſo with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a ſtranger, and alſo art an exile.

20 Whereas thou cameſt but yeſterday, ſhould I this day make thee go up and down with us? ſeeing I go whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai anſwered the king, and ſaid, As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, ſurely in what place my lord the king ſhall be, whether in death or life, even there alſo will thy ſervant be.

22 And David ſaid to Ittai, Go, and paſs over. And Ittai the Gittite paſſed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people paſſed over: the king alſo himſelf paſſed over the brook Kidron, and all the people paſſed over toward the way of the wilderneſs.

24 ¶ And lo, Zadok alſo, and all the Levites were with him, bearing the ark of the covenant of God, and they ſet down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up, until all the people had done paſſing out of the city.

25 And the king ſaid unto Zadok, Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I ſhall find favour in the eyes of the LORD, he will bring me again, and ſhew me both it, and his habitation.

26 But if he thus ſay, I have no delight in thee: behold, here am I, let him do to me as ſeemeth good unto him.

27 The king ſaid alſo unto Zadok the prieſt, Art not thou a ſeer? return into the city in peace, and your two ſons with you, Ahimaaz thy ſon, and Jonathan the ſon of Abiathar.

28 See, I will tarry in the plain of the wilderneſs, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jeruſalem; and they tarried there.

30 ¶ And

30 ¶ And David went up by the aſcent of mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went bare foot: and all the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up.

31 ¶ And one told David, ſaying, Ahithophel is among the conſpirators with Abſalom. And David ſaid, O LORD, I pray thee, turn the counſel of Ahithophel into fooliſhneſs.

32 ¶ And it came to paſs, that when David was come to the top of the mount, where he worſhipped God, behold, Huſhai the Archite came to meet him, with his coat rent, and earth upon his head:

33 Unto whom David ſaid, If thou paſſeſt on with me, then thou ſhalt be a burden unto me.

34 But if thou return to the city, and ſay unto Abſalom, I will be thy ſervant, O king; as I have been thy fathers ſervant hitherto, ſo will I now alſo be thy ſervant: then mayeſt thou for me defeat the counſel of Ahithophel.

35 And haſt thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts? therefore it ſhall be, that what thing ſoever thou ſhalt hear out of the kings houſe, thou ſhalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the prieſts.

36 Behold, they have there with them their two ſons, Ahimaaz Zadoks ſon, and Jonathan Abiathars ſon: and by them ye ſhall ſend unto me every thing that ye can hear.

37 So Huſhai Davids friend came into the city, and Abſalom came into Jeruſalem.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after this, that Abſalom prepared him chariots, and horſes, &c.] The reconciliation between David and Abſalom could not but convince the latter of his father's weak fondneſs for him; but that ungrateful ſon ſought only how to make the moſt unnatural advantage of it. He immediately procured a ſumptuous equipage of chariots, horſes, and running footmen, to attract the eyes of the people; and by an affected popularity, and ſeeming compaſſion for thoſe who came to the king for juſtice, and the difficulty of obtaining it from him, it was not long before he gained their hearts, and perſuaded them, that they would be much happier under his government. This artful practice he continued for ſome years; mention is made of forty, in the Sacred Text, ver. 7. but the learned Uſher has ſhewed, that they can only be computed from the firſt unction of David by Samuel, and not from his reconciliation to Abſalom; for this rebellion happened about four years after it. That great prelate likewiſe concludes, that it was before, or about Whitſuntide, by the new fruits and parched corn, which Barzillai brought to David in his flight, chap. xvii. 28.

We may likewiſe obſerve here, that Abſalom is the firſt who introduced the uſe of horſes in Iſrael; for till then, the kings uſed to ride on mules, and the greateſt nobles upon aſſes, as we have ſeen in the hiſtory of the Judges.

Abſalom finding himſelf ſtrong enough to break out into an open rebellion, and being perhaps afraid, leſt his artifices ſhould at length give the king ſome ſuſpicion of his perfidious deſign, he obtained leave of his too indulgent father to go and perform a pretended vow in Hebron, ver. 7. where he had appointed the chief of his party to meet him; whilſt others, who were diſperſed through the tribes, were ordered to proclaim him king, as ſoon as they ſhould hear the ſignal given by the ſound of the trumpet. He likewiſe took, among others, two hundred men from Jeruſalem, who being altogether ignorant of his deſign, ſerved only to conceal it the more, ver. 11. At his coming to Hebron, he ſent for Ahithophel from Giloh, his native place; and the defection of that great politician, who had been one of David's chief counſellors, contributed not a little to increaſe the number of conſpirators. We have already taken notice of the ſuppoſed reaſon of Ahithophels defection, namely, his near relation to Bathſheba, and his reſentment for the injury offered her by David, which Ahithophel did not think ſufficiently recompenſed by David's marrying her.

David was at Jeruſalem, when intelligence was brought him of his ſon's rebellion, and being afraid of a ſurprize, and of being the cauſe, perhaps, of the deſtruction of the inhabitants of that city by the ſword, he left his palace to the care of ten of his concubines, and made what haſte he could out of the city. As ſoon as he came to the next convenient place, he made a halt, in order to take a melancholy view of the handful of men who followed him, and having obſerved the Cherethites and Pelethites to be of that number, and who were ſtrangers, as we have formerly intimated, he addreſſed himſelf to Ittai, ver. 19. who probably was their commander, and told him, he did not expect that they, who were ſo lately entered into his ſervice, ſhould ſhare in his adverſe fortune, and therefore adviſed him to return home with his men, ſince it was not then in his power to reward their fidelity. But that brave officer anſwered him with an oath, that he would never forſake him, whatever might be the ſucceſs of his affairs, as long as he was able to draw a ſword in his defence. The king, who could not but admire ſo generous and faithful a zeal in a ſtranger, deſired him to paſs before him over the brook Kidron, whilſt the reſt of his followers, and the people who came to ſee this melancholy ſight, burſt into tears, when they beheld the diſtreſs to which their monarch was reduced by his unnatural ſon, ver. 23.

Among thoſe who followed the king, were the high prieſts Zadok and Abiathar, at the head of a number of Levites, who had brought the ark of God with them. David, however, did not think fit that they ſhould accompany him, but commanded them to bear the ark to Jeruſalem, from whence they might ſend him intelligence of all that paſſed there, by their two ſons Ahimaaz and Jonathan, and aſſiſt him with their counſel, as they were ſeers, that is, as they had the gift of prophecy; whilſt he went and concealed himſelf in ſome of the plains of the wilderneſs, with a fixed determination to ſubmit to whatever God ſhould decree concerning him.

As ſoon as the prieſts were departed, David received the melancholy news, that Ahithophel was gone over to Abſalom; upon which he earneſtly implored the Divine Majeſty to confound whatever counſel that old ſtateſman ſhould give to the conſpirators. David and his ſmall troop ſoon after aſcended mount Olivet, accompany'd by his wives and children, and ſome people who followed him from Jeruſalem. The march was mournful beyond expreſſion; the king, bathed in tears, went up with his head covered, and his feet bare, whilſt his ſorrowful retinue expreſſed their deep concern for him, by the livelieſt expreſſions of real grief. When they came to the top of the mount, and had offered up their prayers to God, Providence ſent David an old friend, named Huſhai, who came with his cloaths rent, and aſhes upon his head, reſolved to ſhare in his maſter's misfortunes. David, tho' ſatisfied of his fidelity, did not think fit to take him into his retinue, but deſired him to join himſelf to that of his rebellious ſon, where he might render him much greater ſervice, by thwarting the counſels of Ahithophel, and by informing him, by means of the two high prieſts, of every particular that ſhould be reſolved upon among the rebels. Huſhai readily accepted the office, and acquitted himſelf of it with ſuch faithful zeal, that he proved one main inſtrument of their overthrow, as will be evident by the event.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Ziba, by preſents and falſe ſuggeſtions, obtaineth his maſters inheritance. 5 At Bahurim Shimei curſeth David. 9 David with patience abſtaineth, and reſtraineth others from revenge. 15 Huſhai inſinuateth himſelf into Abſaloms counſel. 20 Ahithophels counſel.

AND when David was a little paſt the top of the hill, behold, Ziba, the ſervant of Mephiboſheth, met him with a couple of aſſes ſaddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and an hundred bunches of raiſins, and an hundred of ſummer-fruits, and a bottle of wine.

2 And the king ſaid unto Ziba, What meaneſt thou by theſe? And Ziba ſaid, The aſſes be for the kings houſhold to ride on, and the bread and ſummer-fruit for the young men to eat, and the wine, that ſuch as be faint in the wilderneſs may drink.

3 And the king ſaid, And where is thy maſters ſon? And Ziba ſaid unto the king, Behold, he abideth at Jeruſalem: for he ſaid, To-day ſhall the houſe of Iſrael reſtore me the kingdom of my father.

4 Then ſaid the king to Ziba, Behold, thine are all that pertained unto Mephiboſheth. And Ziba ſaid, I humbly beſeech thee that I may find grace in thy ſight, my lord, O king.

5 ¶ And when king David came to Bahurim, behold, thence came out a man of the family of the houſe of Saul, whoſe name was Shimei the ſon of Gera: he came forth, and curſed ſtill as he came.

6 And he caſt ſtones at David, and at all the ſervants of king David: and all the people, and all the mighty men were on his right hand, and on his left.

7 And thus ſaid Shimei when he curſed, Come out, come out, thou bloody man, and thou man of Belial:

8 The LORD hath returned upon thee all the blood of the houſe of Saul, in whoſe ſtead thou haſt reigned, and the LORD hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Abſalom thy ſon: and behold, thou art taken in thy miſchief, becauſe thou art a bloody man.

9 ¶ Then ſaid Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah unto the king, Why ſhould this dead dog curſe my lord the king? let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head.

10 And the king ſaid, What have I to do with you, ye ſons of Zeruiah? ſo let him curſe, becauſe the LORD hath ſaid unto him, Curſe David. Who ſhall then ſay, Wherefore haſt thou done ſo?

11 And David ſaid to Abiſhai, and to all his ſervants, Behold, my ſon which came forth of my bowels, ſeeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? let him alone, and let him curſe: for the LORD hath bidden him.

12 It may be that the LORD will look on mine affliction, and that the LORD will requite me good for his curſing this day.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hills ſide over-againſt him, and curſed as he went, and threw ſtones at him, and caſt duſt.

14 And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreſhed themſelves there.

15 ¶ And Abſalom and all the people the men of Iſrael came to Jeruſalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to paſs when Huſhai the Archite, Davids friend, was come unto Abſalom, that Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, God ſave the king, God ſave the king.

17 And Abſalom ſaid to Huſhai, Is this thy kindneſs to thy friend? why wenteſt thou not with thy friend?

18 And Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, Nay, but whom the LORD, and this people, and all the men of Iſrael chooſe, his will I be, and with him will I abide.

19 And again, whom ſhould I ſerve? ſhould I not ſerve in the preſence of his ſon? as I have ſerved in thy fathers preſence, ſo will I be in thy preſence.

20 ¶ Then ſaid Abſalom to Ahithophel, Give counſel among you what we ſhall do.

21 And Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, Go in unto thy fathers concubines, which he hath left to keep the houſe, and all Iſrael ſhall hear that thou art abhorred of thy father, then ſhall the hands of all that are with thee be ſtrong.

22 So they ſpread Abſalom a tent upon the top of the houſe, and Abſalom went in unto his fathers concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael.

23 And the counſel of Ahithophel which he counſelled in thoſe days, was as if a man had enquired at the oracle of God: ſo was all the counſel of Ahithophel, both with David and with Abſalom.

Ver. 1. And when David was a little paſt the top of the hill, behold, Ziba the ſervant of Mephibosheth met him with a couple of aſſes ſaddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, &c.] While the ſorrowful monarch was on his march, Ziba, the treacherous ſervant of Mephibosheth, brought him ſome neceſſary refreſhments; and being asked where his maſter was, replied, that he was then at Jeruſalem, where he expected to be ſhortly reſtored to the throne of Iſrael, ver. 3. An accident, that immediately followed this falſe report, helped to convince David of the ingratitude with which Ziba had charged Mephibosheth. He was ſcarce advanced as far as Bahurim, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, when he was met by one of Saul's family, named Shimei, who had the boldneſs to throw vollies of ſtones at him, accompanied with the bittereſt curſes and imprecations, for being the author of Saul's misfortunes; notwithſtanding David was, at that time, ſurrounded by his guards, and all his friends. This unexpected indignity ſo enraged Abiſhai, one of his captains, that he deſired David's permiſſion to go and cut off the head of that inſolent wretch; but the king denied his requeſt with ſome warmth, and reſtrained the reſentment that this inſult had kindled in his people, by reminding them of his own more unnatural ſon, who ſought a tender father's life, whilſt Shimei expreſſed no more than a natural concern for the houſe of Saul. To which he added, that as this man was then authorized by God to curſe him, he choſe to refer himſelf to the compaſſion of that gracious Being, who perhaps would requite him for all the execrations that had been uttered againſt him that day. However, the thoughts of his having a double enemy now to contend with, and that Mephibosheth had excited a new revolt againſt him, touched him ſo to the quick, that he gave all his lands away to his perfidious ſervant Ziba, which was the very recompence that wretch was deſirous to obtain by his falſe accuſation.

By this time, Abſalom and Ahithophel were come to Jeruſalem, that city not daring to make any reſiſtance againſt that hitherto ſucceſsful prince; and here it was that Huſhai came to congratulate and offer his ſervices to him. Abſalom, who knew he had been a faithful friend to his father, expreſſed ſome ſurprize at firſt, at this unexpected change; but was anſwered by that politic perſon, that he thought it high time to abandon the father's intereſt, when Providence had ſo openly declared for the ſon, who was likewiſe invited to the crown by the univerſal acclamations of the people; ſo that he had no more to do, but to ſerve him with the ſame fidelity he had formerly teſtified for his father. Such a ſoothing ſpeech could not but pleaſe the proud young prince, who admitted him into the number of his counſellors, without the leaſt ſuſpicion; and repoſed ſuch confidence in him, that he ſoon after preferred his advice to that of Ahithophel, and thereby loſt the faireſt opportunity of ſecuring the victory, and his father's crown, to himſelf.

As ſoon as they were well ſettled in the palace, a council was called, in which Ahithophel adviſed the prince to rear up a pavilion on the top of the houſe, and go and lie with his father's concubines in the face of the ſun. This, as has been formerly obſerved, being eſteemed the greateſt indignity that could be offered to a crowned head, that helliſh politician told him was the moſt effectual means to make his men fight deſperately for him, becauſe they would then look upon the breach between him and his father as irreconcileable. It could not be expected that Abſalom, who had already been guilty of fratricide, and likewiſe of rebellion againſt his own father, ſhould ſcruple to add adultery and inceſt to his other crimes; he readily complied, therefore, with the advice of Ahithophel, and thereby fulfilled one part of Nathan's prophecy againſt his adulterous father, chap. xii.

With reſpect to Ahithophel, the Sacred Hiſtorian declares, that the counſel which he counſelled in thoſe days, was as if a man had enquired at the oracle of God, &c. ver. 23. that is, it was ſo judicious and ſure, that it was commonly followed without any diffidence of the ſucceſs. Such was the counſel he now gave; for there could be no greater danger to him and all Iſrael, than for Abſalom to repent, and ſubmit to his father; for which reaſon he endeavoured to render them irreconcileable, by adviſing Abſalom to offer the higheſt injury to his father. He made the breach therefore thus wide, that it might never be healed; for if it had, David might have called him and others, in due time, to an account for their treaſon.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Ahithophels counſel is overthrown by Huſhais, according to Gods appointment. 15 Secret intelligence is ſent unto David. 23 Ahithophel hangeth himſelf. 25 Amaſa is made captain. 27 David at Mahanaim is furniſhed with proviſion.

MOreover, Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, Let me now chooſe out twelve thouſand men, and I will ariſe and purſue after David this night.

2 And I will come upon him, while he is weary and weak-handed, and will make him afraid: and all the people that are with him ſhall flee, and I will ſmite the king only.

3 And I will bring back all the people unto thee: the man whom thou ſeekeſt, is as if all returned: ſo all the people ſhall be in peace.

4 And the ſaying pleaſed Abſalom well, and all the elders of Iſrael.

5 Then ſaid Abſalom, Call now Huſhai the Archite alſo, and let us hear likewiſe what he ſaith.

6 And when Huſhai was come to Abſalom, Abſalom ſpake unto him, ſaying, Ahithophel hath ſpoken after this manner: ſhall we do after his ſaying? if not; ſpeak thou.

7 And Huſhai ſaid unto Abſalom, The counſel that Ahithophel hath given, is not good at this time.

8 For (ſaid Huſhai) thou knoweſt thy father and his men, that they be mighty men, and they be chafed in their minds, as a bear robbed of her whelps in the field: and thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

9 Behold, he is hid now in ſome pit, or in ſome other place: and it will come to paſs, when ſome of them be overthrown at the firſt, that whoſoever heareth it, will ſay, There is a ſlaughter among the people that follow Abſalom.

10 And he alſo that is valiant, whoſe heart is as the heart of a lion, ſhall utterly melt: for all Iſrael knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

11 Therefore I counſel, that all Iſrael be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, as the ſand that is by the the ſea for multitude, and that thou go to battle in thine own perſon.

12 So ſhall we come upon him in ſome place where he ſhall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him, and of all the men that are with him, there ſhall not be left ſo much as one.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then ſhall all Iſrael bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, until there be not one ſmall ſtone found there.

14 And Abſalom and all the men of Iſrael ſaid, The counſel of Huſhai the Archite is better than the counſel of Ahithophel: for the LORD had appointed to defeat the good counſel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the LORD might bring evil upon Abſalom.

15 ¶ Then ſaid Huſhai unto Zadok and to Abiathar the prieſts, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counſel Abſalom and the elders of Iſrael; and thus and thus have I counſelled.

16 Now therefore ſend quickly, and tell David, ſaying, Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderneſs, but ſpeedily paſs over; leſt the king be ſwallowed up, and all the people that are with him.

17 Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz ſtayed by En-rogel, (for they might not be ſeen to come into the city) and a wench went and told them: and they went and told king David.

18 Nevertheleſs, a lad ſaw them, and told Abſalom: but they went both of them away quickly, and came to a mans houſe in Bahurim, which had a well in his court, whither they went down.

19 And the woman took and ſpread a covering over the wells mouth, and ſpread ground corn thereon; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Abſaloms ſervants came to the woman to the houſe, they ſaid, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan? And the woman ſaid unto them, They be gone over the brook of water. And when they had ſought and could not find them, they returned to Jeruſalem.

21 And it came to paſs after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and ſaid unto David, Ariſe, and paſs quickly over the water: for thus hath Ahithophel counſelled againſt you.

22 Then David aroſe, and all the people that were with him, and they paſſed over Jordan: by the morning light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

23 ¶ And when Ahithophel ſaw that his counſel was not followed, he ſaddled his aſs, and aroſe, and gat him home to his houſe, to his city, and put his houſhold in order, and hanged himſelf, and died, and was buried in the ſepulchre of his father.

24 Then David came to Mahanaim: and Abſalom paſſed over Jordan, he, and all the men of Iſrael with him.

25 ¶ And Abſalom made Amaſa captain of the hoſt inſtead of Joab: which Amaſa was a mans ſon, whoſe name was Ithra, an Iſraelite, that went in to Abigail the daughter of Nahaſh, ſiſter to Zeruiah, Joabs mother.

26 So Iſrael and Abſalom pitched in the land of Gilead.

27 ¶ And it came to paſs when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi the ſon of Nahaſh of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and Machir the ſon of Ammiel of Lo-debar, and Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim, 28 Brought beds, and baſons, and earthen veſſels, and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulſe.

29 And honey, and butter, and ſheep, and cheeſe of kine, for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat: for they ſaid, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirſty in the wilderneſs.

Ver. 1. Moreover, Ahithophel ſaid unto Abſalom, Let me now chooſe out twelve thouſand men, and I will ariſe and purſue after David this night.] The next thing which Ahithophel adviſed the rebellious prince was, that he might be ſent at the head of twelve thouſand choſen men, to fall upon David's little army, whilſt they were ſtill weary with their flight, aſſuring him, that as ſoon as the king was taken off, which himſelf engaged to do, all the people would gladly come over to him as one man; by which means the war would be brought to a ſpeedy period. This counſel was approved both by Abſalom, and all the elders of Iſrael; but as it was given in the abſence of Huſhai, the prince reſolved to have his advice upon it, and Huſhai being informed of it, and wiſely foreſeeing, that if it were followed, David muſt be inevitably loſt, omitted nothing to diſſuade Abſalom from putting it in execution. He told the council, that David and his officers were men of too great valour and experience to be eaſily ſurpriſed; and were likewiſe at that time ſo extreamly provoked and exaſperated, that it would be dangerous to fall upon them with ſo ſmall an army as Ahithophel propoſed. For ſuch deſperate perſons would ſell their lives at a dear rate. That David, in particular, was a man of war, and would not lodge with the people; ſo that when all was done, it was probable, Ahithophel would not know where to find him. For great captains having diſpoſed their forces to the beſt advantage, and ſet their guards, frequently retire from the camp, and lodge in ſome ſecret place. Huſhai added, that that if ſome of Abſalom's forces ſhould happen to be overthrown, the news would preſently be ſpread through the whole army, whoſe fear would make him think the ſlaughter greater than it really was. For all Iſrael knew that David and his troops were men of uncommon valour, and would purſue any advantage with the greateſt courage and reſolution. He therefore counſelled Abſalom to aſſemble all the military men throughout the country, and repreſents them to be as numerous as the ſands on the ſea-ſhore; but his chief aim, by this advice, was to gain time for David to raiſe an army by the help of his friends, for all Iſrael could not preſently be gathered together, and put into order of battle. He likewiſe adviſed Abſalom to go to battle in his own perſon, for that would encourage the people to fight valiantly, and he compares the multitude of ſoldiers, that might be raiſed for that ſervice, to the drops of dews, which cover the face of the whole earth; ſo that if David ſhould happen to be in the field, it would be impoſſible for him to eſcape; for the army of Abſalom would then be ſo large as to ſpread itſelf over all the country, and then could not fail to drive David and his men out of their places of concealment. This counſel was very plauſible to one who relied upon the greatneſs of an hoſt, and Huſhai was alſo ſo artful as to ſpeak as if he would accompany Abſalom in this expedition; and he concludes, with telling him, that if David ſhould be got into a city, then ſhould all Iſrael bring ropes to that city, and we will draw it into the river, continues he, until there be not one ſmall ſtone found there, ver. 13. Huſhai hereby repreſents an additional advantage that would redound from ſuch a multitude; namely, that if David ſhould quit the field, and retire into the ſtrongeſt of their cities, encompaſſed with high walls, and a deep ditch, they yet ſhould be numerous enough to begirt it round, and by ropes wound about the walls draw them down, and all the houſes of the city, into the ditch that ſurrounded it. We indeed, do not read of any ſuch operation practiſed in war; and therefore ſome by chabalim, which we tranſlate ropes, underſtand troops, or bands of men, who, by machines drawn with ropes, could batter down walls and houſes: Or rather, this is an hyperbolical boaſt that the forces of Abſalom would be ſo numerous as to accompliſh an action like this, if the city could not be reduced by any other method.

The policy of Huſhai proved ſucceſsful, and his advice was preferred to that of Ahithophel. This event was accompliſhed by a ſignal interpoſition of Providence, for the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, that the Lord had appointed to defeat the good counſel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the Lord might bring evil upon Abſalom, ver. 14. Such is the wonderful over-ruling Providence of God, in more caſes than we are aware of; for, as St. Hilary ſpeaks, concerning the rage of heretics, Si quantum audet impietas, tantum conſuleret prudentia, difficile eſſet veritatis cauſam agere. If wickedneſs were as wiſe in council, as it is bold and daring in attempts, it would be difficult to maintain a good cauſe.

Ver. 15. Then ſaid Huſhai unto Zadok and to Abiathar the prieſts, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counſel Abſalom, &c.] Huſhai acted the part of a true friend to David, but not of a truſty ſervant to Abſalom, whoſe counſels he betrayed.

Ver. 16. Now therefore ſend quickly, and tell David, ſaying, Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderneſs, &c.] Leſt Abſalom ſhould change his reſolution, and incline again to the counſel of Ahithophel; who being a man of great authority, might perſuade him, his advice was moſt for his intereſt.

Ver. 17. Now Jonathan and Ahimaaz ſtayed by Enrogel.] This was a place near Jeruſalem; and the Targum tranſlates it, the fullers well; becauſe, as Kimchi obſerves, the fullers there trod their cloth with their feet; for he derives rogel from the word regel, which ſignifies a foot.

— (For they might not be ſeen to come into the city.)] Their fathers charged them to ſtay in this place, becauſe it would have been difficult to ſend them out of the city, without being diſcovered.

——— And a wench went and told them.] Pretending, perhaps, to go thither, in order to waſh ſome cloaths.

——— And they went and told king David.] After a little ſtop in their way, as it here follows.

Ver. 18. Nevertheleſs, a lad ſaw them, and told Abſalom.] Some of whoſe troopers, who were ſcouting thereabouts, (as Joſephus underſtands it) diſcovered them before they had gone two furlongs.

——But they went both of them away quickly, and came to a man's houſe in Bahurim.] They ſuſpected they were diſcovered, and therefore ſtruck out of the public road, as Joſephus explains it, and made haſte to this town, and perhaps to that man's houſe where David refreſhed himſelf, chap. xvi. 5, 14.

——Which had a well in his court, whither they went down.] For at that time of the year the wells in many places were dry, or had but little water in them. And it would not be eaſily ſuſpected that they would ſtay in an open court.

Ver. 19. And the woman took and ſpread a covering over the well's mouth, and ſpread ground corn thereon.] Corn newly threſhed out, and which ſhe pretended to dry in the ſun.

——And the thing was not known.] By theſe means the meſſengers lay undiſcovered.

Ver. 20. And when Abſalom's ſervants came to the woman to the houſe, they ſaid, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan?] They were far from being obſcure perſons, as they were the ſons of the moſt eminent among the prieſts; or perhaps the ſervants of Abſalom deſcribed them to the woman, ſo that ſhe could but know whether two ſuch perſons came thither, or had paſſed that way.

———And the woman ſaid unto them, They be gone over the brook of water.] Which probably flowed from the fountain of En-rogel. It ſeems to have been a common opinion in thoſe days, that the uttering untruths of this nature, for the preſervation of innocent perſons, was not criminal.

———And when they had ſought, and could not find them, they returned to Jeruſalem.] For the woman told them, as Joſephus declares, that they made no ſtay at her houſe, but after they had asked for a little drink, made haſte away.

Ver. 21. And it came to paſs, after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and ſaid unto David, Ariſe, and paſs quickly over the water: For thus hath Ahithophel counſelled againſt you.] And they did not know, but he, by his great wiſdom, might over-rule the counſel of Huſhai, and perſwade Abſalom, to hearken to his; and then David would be in extreme danger.

Ver. 22. Then David aroſe, and all the people that were with him, and they paſſed over Jordan: by the morning-light there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.] By this it appears, that they paſſed over in the night, either at the fords, or in boats: And that not one of them miſcarried in the paſſage, nor deſerted from David.

Ver. 23. And when Ahithophel ſaw that his counſel was not followed, he ſaddled his aſs, and aroſe, and gat him home to his houſe, to his city, and put his houſhold in order, and hanged himſelf.] Being confident that David would get the better of Abſalom, and that then he ſhould be put to death for his treaſon; which made him chooſe to be his own executioner. So it is commonly underſtood; tho' ſome of the Jews will have it, that he died of grief, being choaked with a quinſey. For they think it improbable, that ſo wiſe a man as he would hang himſelf: But being violently agitated by vexation, anguiſh, and reſentment (ariſing not merely from his pride, which enraged him, to ſee any man's counſel preferred to his; but from the foreſight of danger, if David prevailed) theſe paſſions brought upon him ſo violent a diſtemper, that he was ſtrangled by it.

——— And died, and was buried in the ſepulchre of his father.] Where, perhaps, he would not have had the honour to be interred, if he had been executed by David.

Ver. 24. Then David came to Mahanaim.] A place in the tribe of Gad.

———And Abſalom paſſed over Jordan, he, and all the men of Iſrael with him.] Aſſoon as he had aſſembled them together, which required ſome time: During which David had an opportunity to ſtrengthen himſelf, by gathering an army alſo.

Ver. 25. And Abſalom made Amaſa captain of the hoſt inſtead of Joab: which Amaſa was a man's ſon, whoſe name was Ithra an Iſraelite.] He was an Iſraelite by religion, tho' by birth an Iſhmaelite; ſee 1 Chron. ii. 17. Abarbinel, on the contrary, thinks that he was an Iſraelite by birth, but had lived long in the land of the Iſhmaelites. And by the ſon of a man he underſtands, an illuſtrious perſon.

——That went in to Abigail the daughter of Nahaſh.] That is, he married one of the daughters of Jeſſe, who is here called Nahaſh. For, as Kimchi obſerves, many perſons had two names; and this ſignifies a ſerpent: From whence it is, that when Iſaiah ſaith, chap. xiv. 29. "Out "of the ſerpent's root ſhall come forth a cockatrice, or "baſilisk." The Chaldee paraphraſe expounds it, "Out "of the root of Jeſſe ſhall come forth the Meſſiah," who was typified by the brazen ſerpent in the wilderneſs.

——Siſter to Zeruiah, Joab's mother.] So Amaſa was couſin-german to Joab; and David was uncle to them both. Abſalom, one would think, ſhould not have truſted, in ſuch an office, ſo near a relation of David; but he himſelf was much nearer, and he took Amaſa to be as ambitious as himſelf.

Ver. 26. So Iſrael and Abſalom pitched in the land of Gilead.] Waiting for a favourable opportunity to attack David.

Ver. 27. And it came to paſs when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi the ſon of Nahaſh of Rabbah of the children of Ammon.] It was a comfort to David to ſee himſelf honoured in his diſtreſs, by one of a ſtrange country; the inhabitants of which he had render'd his enemies, by the terrible execution he had made among them, chap. xii. 26, &c. But it is thought, that this Shobi, is the brother of Hanun, abhorring the baſe affront which had been offered to David, was preſerved by him, and made king of the country in the room of Hanun. And that he now ſhewed his gratitude for ſo great a kindneſs, by coming to the relief of David, and perhaps to his aſſiſtance in his extreme neceſſity.

——And Machir the ſon of Ammiel of Lo-debar.] This perſon bred up Mephiboſheth the ſon of Jonathan, till David ſent for him, chap. ix. 5.

——And Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim.] Who was a very wealthy perſon, chap. xix. 32. and his goodneſs and humanity were altogether as conſiderable; for he maintained David, while he continued in thoſe parts.

Ver. 28. Brought beds, and baſons, and earthen veſſels.] All manner of houſhold ſtuff, which David and his men now wanted.

——And wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulſe.] All ſorts of proviſion, which were neceſſary for the ſuſtenance both of man and beaſt; and they brought theſe ſupplies in a voluntary manner, which was a noble indication of their affectionate loyalty to their lawful ſovereign.

The word kali is twice repeated among theſe proviſions, and is firſt joined with wheat, barley, and flour; and properly ſignifies, toſtas fruges, parched corn, as it is well rendered by our tranſlators. And in the latter part of the verſe, after beans and lentiles, it muſt ſignify, as Bochart obſerves, toſtum aut frictum aliquod legumen, viz. frictum cicer, ſome parched or fried ſpecies of pulſe, namely, vetches, which grew plentifully in Judæa, and were common among both Greeks and Romans in their food; and they are called kali, by the Arabians, to this day. Grain and pulſe conſtituted the chief part of the proviſions in thoſe days, and were the common food of the ancient Egyptians. The Romans likewiſe, in their beſt times, when they moſt of all applied themſelves to agriculture, ſcarcely lived upon any thing elſe; whence came the illuſtrious names of Fabius, Piſo, Cicero, and Lentulus.

Ver. 29. And honey.] Milk and honey, in thoſe times, were reckoned the greateſt delicacies, and were the food of kings and great perſons.

——And butter, and ſheep, and cheeſe of kine for David, and for the people that were with him, to eat.] The making of butter was early known in thoſe countries, and ſo was cheeſe. For though the words ſaphoth lachar be variouſly interpreted, yet the Chaldee and Syriac, as well as the Hebrews, underſtand by ſaphoth, cheeſe made of cows milk; from the Hebrew and Chaldee word ſaphar, which ſignifies to ſtrain; cheeſe being made by preſſing the whey out of the curds.

Here is no mention of any fleſh meat but ſheep, which were very numerous in thoſe countries, and ſo was fiſh, but we never read of its being eaten, till the latter times. For it is ſuppoſed, that the ancients deſpiſed it, as too light and delicate for ſtrong ſtomachs. And it is obſervable, that neither Homer, nor any Grecian writer of the heroic times, ever mention it.

——For they ſaid, The people is hungry, and weary, and thirſty in the wilderneſs.] Where proviſions were extremely ſcarce, and therefore David and his men needed refreſhment, when they were come out of it. This conſideration induced theſe good people to bring them beds to reſt themſelves in after their journey; and all theſe agreeable proviſions, which this rich country afforded, to ſatisfy their hunger; and it is very probable, that wine was not wanting, to enliven and enoble their entertainment.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 David viewing the armies in their march, giveth them charge of Abſalom. 6 The Iſraelites are ſore ſmitten in the wood of Ephraim. 9 Abſalom hanging in an oak, is ſlain by Joab, and caſt into a pit. 18 Abſaloms place. 19 Ahimaaz and Cuſhi bring tidings to David. 33 David mourneth for Abſalom.

AND David numbred the people that were with him, and ſet captains of thouſands, and captains of hundreds over them.

2 And David ſent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab, and a third part under the hand of Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah Joabs brother, and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite: and the king ſaid unto the people, I will ſurely go forth with you myſelf alſo.

3 But the people anſwered, Thou ſhalt not go forth: for if we flee away, they will not care for us; neither if half of us die, will they care for us: but now thou art worth ten thouſand of us: therefore now it is better that thou ſuccour us out of the city.

4 And the king ſaid unto them, What ſeemeth you beſt, I will do. And the king ſtood by the gate-ſide, and all the people came out by hundreds and by thouſands.

5 And the king commanded Joab, and Abiſhai, and Ittai, ſaying, Deal gently for my ſake with the young man, even with Abſalom. And all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Abſalom.

6 ¶ So the people went out into the field againſt Iſrael: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim;

7 Where the people of Iſrael were ſlain before the ſervants of David, and there was there a great ſlaughter that day of twenty thouſand men.

8 For the battle was there ſcattered over the face of all the country: and the wood devoured more people that day, than the ſword devoured.

9 ¶ And Abſalom met the ſervants of David; and Abſalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule that was under him went away.

10 And a certain man ſaw it, and told Joab, and ſaid, Behold, I ſaw Abſalom hanged in an oak.

11 And Joab ſaid unto the man that told him, And behold, thou ſaweſt him, and why didſt thou not ſmite him there to the ground, and I would have given thee ten ſhekels of ſilver, and a girdle?

12 And the man ſaid unto Joab, Though I ſhould receive a thouſand ſhekels of ſilver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand againſt the kings ſon: for in our hearing the king charged thee, and Abiſhai, and Ittai, ſaying, Beware that none touch the young man Abſalom.

13 Otherwiſe I ſhould have wrought falſhood againſt mine own life: for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyſelf wouldſt have ſet thyſelf againſt me.

14 Then ſaid Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and thruſt them through the heart of Abſalom, while he was yet alive in the midſt of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joabs armour, compaſſed about, and ſmote Abſalom, and ſlew him.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from purſuing after Iſrael: for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Abſalom, and caſt him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great heap of ſtones upon him: and all Iſrael fled every one to his tent.

18 ¶ Now Abſalom in his life-time had taken and reared up for himſelf a pillar, which is in the kings dale: for he ſaid, I have no ſon to keep my name in remembrance: and he called the pillar after his own name, and it is called unto this day, Abſaloms place.

19 ¶ Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not bear tidings this day, but thou ſhalt bear tidings another day: but this day thou ſhalt bear no tidings, becauſe the kings ſon is dead.

21 Then ſaid Joab to Cuſhi, Go tell the king what thou haſt ſeen. And Cuſhi bowed himſelf unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howſoever, let me, I pray thee, alſo run after Cuſhi. And Joab ſaid, Wherefore wilt thou run, my ſon, ſeeing that thou haſt no tidings ready?

23 But howſoever (ſaid he) let me run. And he ſaid unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cuſhi.

24 And David ſat between the two gates: and the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lift up his eyes, and looked, and behold, a man running alone.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king ſaid, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26 And the watchman ſaw another man running, and the watchman called unto the porter, and ſaid, Behold, another man running alone. And the king ſaid, He alſo bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman ſaid, Methinketh the running of the foremoſt is like the running of Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok. And the king ſaid, He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

28 And Ahimaaz called, and ſaid unto the king, All is well. And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and ſaid, Bleſſed be the LORD thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lift up their hand againſt my lord the king.

29 And the king ſaid, Is the young man Abſalom ſafe? And Ahimaaz anſwered, When Joab ſent the kings ſervant, and me thy ſervant, I ſaw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30 And the king ſaid unto him, Turn aſide, and ſtand here. And he turned aſide, and ſtood ſtill.

31 And behold, Cuſhi came, and Cuſhi ſaid, Tidings, my lord the king: for the LORD hath avenged thee this day of all them that roſe up againſt thee.

32 And the king ſaid unto Cuſhi, Is the young man Abſalom ſafe? And Cuſhi anſwered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that riſe againſt thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.

33 ¶ And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and and wept: and as he went, thus he ſaid, O my ſon Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon Abſalom: would God I had died for thee, O Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon.

Ver. 1. And David numbered the people that were with him, and ſet captains of thouſands, and captains of hundreds over them.] Formed them into regiments and companies, and ſet proper officers and commanders over them.

Ver. 2. And David ſent forth a third part of the people under the hand of Joab.] Who was the general of the whole hoſt; but David, now intending to command in chief, committed only a third part of the army to the conduct of Joab.

——— And a third part under the hand of Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under the hand of Ittai the Gittite.] Order and diſcipline are of more importance in a battle than great numbers; David, therefore, diſpoſed his little army into three bodies, and under as many eminent commanders, who were to ſuccour one another, as they ſhould ſee occaſion.

Ver. 3. But the people anſwered, Thou ſhalt not go forth, &c.] They did not think it adviſeable for the king to hazard his own perſon; for, as they reaſon'd well, if they ſhould be routed, and half of them ſlain, Abſalom would not think himſelf ſufficiently victorious, while David was alive. For the king might raiſe new forces, and give him battle again. And, as Joſephus adds, Abſalom's party might think the king had another army to guard his perſon.

Ver. 4. And the king ſaid unto them, What ſeemeth you beſt, I will do.] He ſubmitted to their opinion; for it was not a time now to oppoſe the ſenſe of his people.

Ver. 5. And the king commanded Joab, and Abiſhai, and Ittai, ſaying, Deal gently for my ſake with the young man, even with Abſalom.] He intreated, or rather required them to ſpare the life of Abſalom, if they ſhould happen to be victorious. He conſidered him alſo as a raſh young man, and therefore an object of his and their pity.

Ver. 6. So the people went out into the field againſt Iſrael: and the battle was in the wood of Ephraim.] Joſephus declares, that Joab drew up his men, ἐν τῷ πεδίῳ μεγάλῳ, in a large field, which had a wood behind it, called the wood of Ephraim, not becauſe it belonged to that tribe, for they had no poſſeſſions on this ſide Jordan, where the battle was fought: But the Gileadites gave it that name, in order to commemorate the great ſlaughter Jephthah made of the Ephraimites thereabout, Judges xii.

Ver. 7. Where the people of Iſrael was ſlain before the ſervants of David.] They who fought for Abſalom, being called the men of Iſrael, looks like an argument that David's army was principally collected out of his own tribe of Judah. But it will appear from ch. xix. 11. that this is not true; and therefore by Iſrael we are to underſtand the tribes on the other ſide Jordan, who purſued David into the land of Gilead, where he had got together a ſmall army.

——— And there was there a great ſlaughter that day of twenty thouſand men.] For the fight was obſtinate, as Joſephus thinks, both ſides having great reaſon to exert themſelves to the utmoſt.

Ver. 8. For the battle was there ſcattered over the face of all the country: and the wood devoured more people that day, than the ſword devoured.] Some think the wood is ſaid to devour them, becauſe they fell into pits, or fell upon ſtumps of trees, or preſſed one another to death, as they came into narrow places; or were killed by wild beaſts. But the moſt natural meaning is, that more were ſlain in flight through the wood, than in the battle. For they could not run away ſo faſt in the wood, as in the open field.

Ver. 9. And Abſalom met the ſervants of David.] In his flight through the wood he happened to meet ſome of David's ſoldiers, who would not kill him, nor ſo much as ſtop him; for they underſtood the command of David as a prohibition to meddle with the rebellious prince. But tho' they let him go, yet God met with him, and put an effectual ſtop to his flight.

——— And Abſalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule that was under him went away.] His neck was ſo wedged between the boughs, by the ſwift motion of the mule, that he was not able to diſengage himſelf. We cannot ſee any colour for their opinion, who imagine he hung by his hair, which being very long, was wrapped about the boughs of the tree; nor is it probable he was without a helmet, which covered his hair. Beſide, it is ſaid afterward, that Joab ſmote him while he was yet alive, in the midſt of the oak, ver. 14. which had been no wonder, if he had only hung by his hair, which would not have killed him; whereas when Joab came to him, he was only not quite dead, but very near it.

Ver. 10. And a certain man ſaw it, and told Joab, and ſaid, Behold, I ſaw Abſalom hanged in an oak.] But not dead.

Ver. 11. And Joab ſaid unto the man that told him, And behold, thou ſaweſt him, and why didſt thou not ſmite him there to the ground, and I would have given thee ten ſhekels of ſilver, and a girdle?] A military belt, which was much eſteemed, 1 Sam. xviii. 4.

Ver. 12. And the man ſaid unto Joab, Though I ſhould receive a thouſand ſhekels of ſilver in mine hand.] In ready money paid down before-hand.

——— Yet would I not put forth mine hand againſt the king's ſon: for in our hearing the king charged thee, &c.] It was a thing notoriouſly known not only to Joab, but to all the army.

——— Saying, Beware that none touch the young man Abſalom.] Do him no hurt; but leave me to puniſh him.

Ver. 13. Otherwiſe I ſhould have wrought falſhood againſt mine own life.] Either firſt, I ſhould have been guilty of falſe and perfidious dealing againſt the king's expreſs injunction, and that with the manifeſt hazard of my own life. Or, ſecondly, I ſhould not only have deceived my ſelf with falſe hopes, either of concealing my fact from the king, or obtaining a reward, or even a pardon from him or thee for it, but ſhould alſo have deſtroyed my ſelf thereby, and laid a plot againſt my own life.

——— For there is no matter hid from the king.] This, as well as all other tranſactions, would infallibly come to the king's ear.

——— And thou thy ſelf wouldſt have ſet thy ſelf againſt me.] He knew the diſpoſition of Joab ſo well, that he was ſure that general would have been as forward as any other perſon, both to inform the king of what he had acted, and to have him puniſh'd for diſobeying his ſovereign.

Ver. 14. Then ſaid Joab, I may not tarry thus with thee. And he took three darts in his hand.] From the Hebrew word ſhatim, which we tranſlate darts, the Latin word ſpatha is derived. This was a ſort of weapon among the ancient Gauls; it is called giſæ by the Chaldee, from whence comes the Latin geſum; which, according to Feſtus, was grave jaculum, an heavy dart, being made all of iron.

——— And thruſt them through the heart of Abſalom.] Not through that part which is ſtrictly called the heart, (for then Abſalom would have died immediately, and there would have been no occaſion for any of Joab's men to have fallen upon him, as we read they did, in the next verſe) but through the midſt of his body; which did not kill him outright, but left ſome remains of life in him.

Ver. 15. And ten young men that bare Joab's armour, compaſſed about, and ſmote Abſalom, and ſlew him.] Perhaps Joab thought himſelf not ſafe while Abſalom was alive; for he apprehended that ſome unquiet people, who were deeply engaged in this rebellion, would create new diſturbances, in order to place that prince on the throne. Joab therefore did not act as David commanded, but as he imagined he ſhould have commanded.

Ver. 16. And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from purſuing after Iſrael: for Joab held back the people.] This was a very commendable conduct in Joab; for he knew the people were drawn into this rebellion, and would return to their duty now they had none to head them.

Ver. 17. And they took Abſalom, and caſt him into a great pit in the wood.] They would not bring his body to be diſpoſed of by his father's order, leſt it ſhould too much move his paſſion.

——— And laid a very great heap of ſtones upon him.] Andricomius, in his Deſcription of the Holy Land, declares that this heap was remaining in his days; and that all travellers, as they paſſed by it, threw a ſtone to increaſe the heap, in deteſtation of his rebellion againſt his father.

Ver. 18. Now Abſalom in his life-time had taken and reared up for himſelf a piller, which is in the king's dale.] This dale is mentioned, Gen. xiv. 17. and was not far from Jeruſalem: There Abſalom thought to perpetuate his memory, by a very magnificent ſtructure, as Raſi, and other Jewiſh doctors imagine. And ſome who have been in the Holy Land, tell us of ſuch a noble fabric in the valley of Jehoſaphat; but this is a ſuppoſititious monument; for Joſephus, who is more to be credited than theſe later authors, declares expreſly, that it was only a pillar, Lib. 7. Antiq. cap. 9. and that it was two furlongs from Jeruſalem.

——— For he ſaid, I have no ſon to keep my name in remembrance.] We read, chap. xiv. 27. that he had three ſons and one daughter, but they were all dead before this pillar was erected.

Ver. 19. Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, &c.] By this it appears, that Ahimaaz did not return to Jeruſalem, after he carried intelligence to David, but continued with him, and engaged in this battle; for the prieſts bare arms as well as other men, and particularly performed the office of trumpeters to the army, 2 Chron. xiii. 12. And here it is obſervable, what ſtrict diſcipline was kept in thoſe days; that no man durſt ſtir to carry the news of what had been done, without the leave of the commander in chief.

Ver. 20. And Joab ſaid unto him, Thou ſhalt not bear tidings this day, but thou ſhalt bear tidings another day.] Some reward, no doubt, was wont to be given to thoſe who brought good tidings, eſpecially of a great victory. And this made Ahimaaz ſo deſirous to be the meſſenger.

——— But this day thou ſhalt bear no tidings, becauſe the king's ſon is dead.] This Joab knew would be unwelcome news to David, and procure no good to Ahimaaz.

Ver. 21. Then ſaid Joab to Cuſhi, Go tell the king what thou haſt ſeen.] 'Tis probable that Joab mention'd the particulars, which, as he did not intend to commit them to writing, he would have Cuſhi deliver by word of mouth, for he himſelf would not relate what he had done to Abſalom.

Ver. 22. Then ſaid Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok yet again to Joab, But howſoever, Let me, I pray thee, alſo run after Cuſhi.] It is not eaſy to determine what could make him ſo earneſt to carry tidings on this occaſion, unleſs it was hope of reward, and confidence that his own ſwiftneſs would make him the firſt meſſenger of good news; for Joſephus ſaith, he told Joab he would relate nothing to the king but the victory his army had acquired, and would be ſilent as to the death of Abſalom.

——— And Joab ſaid, Wherefore wilt thou run, my ſon, ſeeing that thou haſt no tidings ready?] Concerning the particulars of the fight, with which Joab had not time to acquaint him. His calling him ſon, ſignifies he had a great affection to him, and therefore had denied his firſt requeſt. For Joab knew the king better than Ahimaaz did; and was ſenſible that no perſon would be acceptable to him, who could not aſſure him Abſalom was ſafe. Ahimaaz, however, did not comprehend the kind intention of Joab, and therefore importuned him a third time for his permiſſion to be a meſſenger of the victory; which Joab at laſt granted.

Ver. 24. And David ſat between the two gates.] The gate was a large place, where public aſſemblies uſed to be held, and it had an inward and an outward door, between which David then ſat, in expectation of intelligence from his army.

——— And the watchman went up to the roof over the gate, unto the wall, and looked, and behold, a man running alone.] Over the gate was a watch-tower, from whence they might ſee round about, whether any were coming, and from what quarter.

Ver. 25. And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king ſaid, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth.] He took it for a ſign that he was a meſſenger ſent from Joab, and that he brought good news. For if his army had been routed, there would have been more than one ſeen running away.

Ver. 26. And the watchman ſaw another man running, ——— and the king ſaid, He alſo bringeth tidings.] He is charged with more intelligence than the former.

Ver. 27. And the watchman ſaid, Methinketh the running of the foremoſt is like the running of Ahimaaz.] Who was remarkable for his extraordinary ſpeed.

Ver. 28. And Ahimaaz called, and ſaid unto the king, All is well.] He was in haſte to let the king know the good ſucceſs of the battle, and therefore ſeems to have ſaid at a diſtance, Peace, which is the word in the Hebrew, ſignifying all happineſs and proſperity.

——— And he fell down to the earth upon his face before the king.] When he approached nearer to him.

——— And ſaid, Bleſſed be the Lord thy God, which hath delivered up the men that lift up their hand againſt my lord the king.] Like a truly religious man, he aſcribes the victory they had obtained, to the providential bleſſing of God on their arms.

Ver. 29. And the king ſaid, Is the young man Abſalom ſafe?] He would not expreſs his joy till he heard that Abſalom was preſerved.

——— And Ahimaaz anſwered, When Joab ſent the king's ſervant, and me thy ſervant, I ſaw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.] He diſſembled his knowledge of Abſalom's death; and perhaps in this ſaid true, that he did not know the particular manner of it.

Ver. 31. And behold, Cuſhi came, and Cuſhi ſaid, Tidings, my lord the king, &c.] He ſaid no more than Ahimaaz had done, thinking it would be unacceptable news to mention Abſalom's death.

Ver. 32. And the king ſaid unto Cuſhi, Is the young man Abſalom ſafe? And Cuſhi anſwered, The enemies of my lord the king, and all that riſe againſt thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.] This was a decent manner of ſpeech to give the king to underſtand that Abſalom was dead.

Ver. 33. And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he ſaid, O my ſon Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon Abſalom: would God I had died for thee, O Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon.] No words can be more expreſſive of the anguiſh David ſuſtained; and it is likely his wiſh, that he had died in Abſalom's ſtead, was the effect of immoderate love to him, and grief for his death, which made him vent himſelf in expreſſions that were not conſiderate. But Pellicanus (in which he follows St. Auſtin) thinks this was a deliberate wiſh, becauſe Abſalom died impenitent, whereas David, if he had died, would have entered upon a ſtate of ſalvation. The ſtupidity of the Jewiſh doctors is inconceivable, who fancy Abſalom would have cut his hair, by which he hung, with his ſword, had he not ſeen hell gaping for him, if he fell down; which made him chooſe to die in the oak: But his father, by his lamentation over him, crying ſeven times my ſon, delivered him from the ſeven gates of hell, and brought him into paradiſe.

CHAP. XIX.

1 Joab cauſeth the king to ceaſe his mourning. 9 The Iſraelites are earneſt to bring the king back. 11 David ſendeth to the prieſts to incite them of Judah. 18 Shimei is pardoned. 24 Mephibоſheth excuſed. 32 Barzillai diſmiſſed, Chimham his ſon is taken into the kings family. 41 The Iſraelites expoſtulate with Judah for bringing home the king without them.

AND it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Abſalom.

2 And

2 And the victory that day was turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard ſay that day, how the king was grieved for his ſon.

3 And the people gat them by ſtealth that day into the city, as people being aſhamed ſteal away when they flee in battle.

4 But the king covered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, O my ſon Abſalom, O Abſalom, my ſon, my ſon.

5 And Joab came into the houſe to the king, and ſaid, Thou haſt ſhamed this day the faces of all thy ſervants, which this day have ſaved thy life, and the lives of thy ſons, and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines:

6 In that thou loveſt thine enemies, and hateſt thy friends; for thou haſt declared this day, that thou regardeſt neither princes, nor ſervants: for this day I perceive, that if Abſalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleaſed thee well.

7 Now therefore ariſe, go forth, and ſpeak comfortably unto thy ſervants: for I ſwear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night; and that will be worſe unto thee than all the evil that befel thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king roſe, and ſat in the gate: and they told unto all the people, ſaying, Behold, the king doth ſit in the gate: and all the people came before the king: for Iſrael had fled every man to his tent.

9 ¶ And all the people were at ſtrife throughout all the tribes of Iſrael, ſaying, The king ſaved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand of the Philiſtines, and now he is fled out of the land for Abſalom.

10 And Abſalom whom we anointed over us, is dead in battle: now therefore why ſpeak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

11 ¶ And king David ſent to Zadok and to Abiathar the prieſts, ſaying, Speak unto the elders of Judah, ſaying, Why are ye the laſt to bring the king back to his houſe? (ſeeing the ſpeech of all Iſrael is come to the king, even to his houſe.)

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones and my fleſh: wherefore then are ye the laſt to bring back the king?

13 And ſay ye to Amaſa, Art thou not of my bone and of my fleſh? God do ſo to me and more alſo, if thou be not captain of the hoſt before me continually in the room of Joab.

14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, even as the heart of one man, ſo that they ſent this word unto the king, Return thou and all thy ſervants.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan: and Judah came to Gilgal, to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

16 ¶ And Shimei the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, haſted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David.

17 And there were a thouſand men of Benjamin with him, and Ziba the ſervant of the houſe of Saul, and his fifteen ſons, and his twenty ſervants with him, and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry-boat to carry over the kings houſhold, and to do what he thought good: and Shimei the ſon of Gera fell down before the king as he was come over Jordan;

19 And ſaid unto the king, Let not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou remember that which thy ſervant did perverſly the day that my lord the king went out of Jeruſalem, that the king ſhould take it to his heart.

20 For thy ſervant doth know that I have ſinned: therefore behold, I am come the firſt this day of all the houſe of Joſeph, to go down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah anſwered and ſaid, Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, becauſe he curſed the LORDS anointed?

22 And David ſaid, What have I to do with you, ye ſons of Zeruiah, that ye ſhould this day be adverſaries unto me? ſhall there any man be put to death this day in Iſrael? for do not I know, that I am this day king over Iſrael?

23 Therefore the king ſaid unto Shimei, Thou ſhalt not die: and the king ſware unto him.

24 ¶ And Mephiboſheth the ſon of Saul came down to meet the king, and had neither dreſſed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor waſhed his clothes, from the day the king departed, until the day he came again in peace.

25 And it came to paſs when he was come to Jeruſalem to meet the king, that the king ſaid unto him, Wherefore wenteſt not thou with me, Mephiboſheth?

26 And he anſwered, My lord, O king, my ſervant deceived me; for thy ſervant ſaid, I will ſaddle me an aſs, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king, becauſe thy ſervant is lame.

27 And he hath ſlandered thy ſervant unto my lord the king; but my lord the king is as an angel of God: do therefore what is good in thine eyes.

28 For all of my fathers houſe were but dead men before my lord the king: yet didſt thou ſet thy ſervant among them that did eat at thine own table: what right therefore have I yet to cry any more unto the king?

29 And the king ſaid unto him, Why ſpeakeſt thou any more of thy matters? I have ſaid, Thou and Ziba divide the land.

30 And Mephiboſheth ſaid unto the king, Yea, let him take all, foraſmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own houſe.

31 ¶ And Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even fourſcore years old, and he had provided the king of ſuſtenance while he lay at Mahanaim: for he was a very great man.

33 And the king ſaid unto Barzillai, Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me in Jeruſalem.

34 And Barzillai ſaid unto the king, How long have I to live, that I ſhould go up with the king unto Jeruſalem?

35 I am this day fourſcore years old: and can I diſcern between good and evil? can thy ſervant taſte what I eat or what I drink? can I hear any more the voice of ſinging-men and ſinging-women? wherefore then ſhould thy ſervant be yet a burden unto my lord the king?

36 Thy ſervant will go a little way over Jordan with the king: and why ſhould the king recompenſe it me with ſuch a reward?

37 Let thy ſervant, I pray thee, turn back again, that I may die in mine own city, and be buried by the grave of my father, and of my mother: but behold thy ſervant Chimham, let him go over with my lord the king, and do to him what ſhall ſeem good unto thee.

38 And the king anſwered, Chimham ſhall go over with me, and I will do to him that which ſhall ſeem good unto thee: and whatſoever thou ſhalt require of me, that will I do for thee.

39 And all the people went over Jordan: and when the king was come over, the king kiſſed Barzillai, and bleſſed him; and he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and Chimham went on with him: and all the people of Judah conducted the king, and alſo half the people of Iſrael.

41 ¶ And behold, all the men of Iſrael came to the king, and ſaid unto the king, Why have our brethren the men of Judah ſtolen thee away, and have brought the king and his houſhold, and all Davids men with him over Jordan?

42 And all the men of Judah anſwered the men of Iſrael, Becauſe the king is near of kin to us: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? have we eaten at all of the kings coſt? or hath he given us any gift?

43 And the men of Iſrael anſwered the men of Judah, and ſaid, We have ten parts in the king, and we have alſo more right in David than ye: why then did ye deſpiſe us, that our advice ſhould not be firſt had in bringing back our king? And the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Iſrael.

Ver. 1. And it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Abſalom.] The unſeaſonable ſorrow of the king damped the joy of the whole army to ſuch a degree, that they retired into the city, more like puſillanimous fugitives, than victorious ſoldiers. Joab, who was now come to the city himſelf, to give the king an account of the fight, eaſily foreſaw that his unpopular grief would occaſion a general defection; and as he was naturally bold and haughty, he made no difficulty to go up, and upbraid him with his ingratitude to his faithful friends, in ſuch arrogant terms, tho' covered with a ſhew of loyalty and concern, ver. 5, 6, 7. that the afflicted king was forced to ſuſpend, or at leaſt conceal his grief, and ſhew himſelf to the people with a ſeeming chearful countenance. As ſoon as they heard of his appearing publickly at the gate of the city, not only his own men, but even thoſe who had followed Abſalom, came in crowds, and were emulous who ſhould teſtify the greateſt affection to him. They remembred that he had often delivered them from the oppreſſion of their enemies: Abſalom was now dead, and David victorious; ſo that they had nothing now to do, but to regain his favour by a timely ſubmiſſion.

Ver. 11. And king David ſent to Zadok, and to Abiathar the prieſts, ſaying, Speak unto the elders of Judah, ſaying, Why are ye the laſt to bring the king back to his houſe?] That which made them ſo cold and remiſs was, probably, the ſenſe of their guilt in joining with Abſalom, who began his conſpiracy in Jeruſalem it ſelf, and brought it to maturity in Hebron, both cities of Judah. Their revolt therefore was the baſer, becauſe David was of their tribe, and had long ſhewn great kindneſs to them; the recollection of which made them afraid to bring him again to Jeruſalem.

Ver. 12. Ye are my brethren, ye are my bones, and my fleſh.] That is, he had much kindred among them.

——Wherefore then are ye the laſt to bring back the king?] David expreſſes the greater kindneſs to them, leſt they ſhould be ſo deſperate as to defend Jeruſalem againſt him.

Ver. 13. And ſay ye to Amaſa, Art thou not of my bone and of my fleſh?] Namely, his ſiſter's ſon, whom he orders Zadok and Abiathar particularly, to court; for being general of Abſalom's forces, he might through ſhame and fear be very loth to look his uncle in the face.

——God do ſo to me, and more alſo, if thou be not captain of the hoſt before me continually in the room of Joab.] It appears from hence, that David had conceived an averſion for Joab; and indeed, he had done enough to deſerve it, by his inſupportable inſolence to the king, his treacherous murder of Abner, but principally for having dared to kill Abſalom, contrary to his expreſs orders. Inſtead of which, he ought to have brought him alive to his father, and left it to him to puniſh his rebellion as he ſhould think fit. On the other hand, Amaſa was a conſiderable perſon, whom either the apprehenſion of the king's reſentment, or a deſire of preſerving his poſt of general, might eaſily induce to raiſe ſome new troubles in favour of the houſe of Saul. Upon theſe accounts, David thought it worth his while to bring him over to his intereſt, by a generous pardon, and by giving him the command of his army; which would, at the ſame time, effectually ſuppreſs the inſolence of Joab. But this laſt, who heſitated at no baſe action, to rid himſelf of a rival, ſoon after diſconcerted all the king's meaſures, by the murder of his new general.

Ver. 14. And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, even as the heart of one man.] Either this diſpoſition was wrought in them by Amaſa, or the affectionate expreſſions, delivered from David by Zadok and Abiathar, entirely overcame them.

——So that they ſent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy ſervants.] Aſſuring him they were ready to receive him, and return to their obedience.

Ver. 15. So the king returned, and came to Jordan.] Began to return back, and advanced as far as Jordan, which parted the country where he then was, from the land of Canaan.

——And Judah came to Gilgal, to go to meet the king, &c.] The elders of Judah came to wait upon him, in order to conduct him to his capital city. This was an indication of their great affection for him, for Gilgal was near Jordan, on the other ſide of the river, and conſequently at a conſiderable diſtance from Jeruſalem.

Ver. 16. And Shimei the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, haſted and came down with the men of Judah, to meet king David.] Among thoſe who came over Jordan to meet the king, Shimei was one of the firſt; he came at the head of a thouſand men of his own tribe, ver. 17. and falling proſtrate at the feet of David, acknowledged his crime, and begged it might be forgiven, in conſideration of his being foremoſt of all the tribes to congratulate him upon his late victory, ver. 19, 20. Abiſhai, one of David's generals, and the brother of Joab, ſeemed to think this a poor atonement for the late indignity with which Shimei had treated his prince, and was therefore urgent to have him made an example to all Iſrael, ver. 21. But the king, willing to ſignalize his reſtoration, by an unparallell'd act of clemency, did not only reprove the untimely zeal of Abiſhai, but generouſly confirmed his pardon of Shimei with an oath.

Ver. 24. And Mephibоſheth, the ſon of Saul, came down to meet the king, and had neither dreſſed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor waſhed his clothes, from the time the king departed, until the day he came again in peace.] Mephibоſheth came next, to expreſs his joy at the king's return, and to juſtify himſelf from the baſe aſperſions of his treacherous ſervant Ziba. As he had wholly neglected himſelf, as was uſual in a time of extraordinary ſorrow, David might reaſonably conſider it as an inſtance of his gratitude and fidelity to him, and conſequently as a proof of Ziba's perfidy to his maſter; and indeed, the king ſeemed to be outwardly ſatisfied with the irreproachable conduct of Mephibоſheth; but whether he was not ſo in reality, or that he had no inclination to reverſe the grant he had made to Ziba, he ordered the lands to be divided between his maſter and him, ver. 29.

Ver. 31. And Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.] While the king was preparing to paſs over Jordan, his aged friend Barzillai came to accompany him over that river, and to take his final leave of him. David would fain have perſuaded him to have gone with him to Jeruſalem, that he might have an opportunity of rewarding his ſervices; but the good old man excuſed himſelf from taſting the pleaſures of a court, deſiring him that he would beſtow his favours on his ſon Chimham, who was ready to accompany him thither; and this requeſt was immediately granted by the king.

Ver. 41. And behold, all the men of Iſrael came to the king, and ſaid unto the king, Why have our brethren the men of Judah ſtolen thee away, &c.] Hitherto there had appeared nothing but an univerſal emulation between the tribes, to wipe off the guilt of their late deſection, by the greateſt tokens of ſubmiſſion and zeal; but the partiality which David ſhewed for his own tribe, by inviting it to come foremoſt to receive him, raiſed ſuch jealouſy in the other ten, as ſeemed to threaten nothing leſs than a new revolt. The ten tribes on the one hand, thinking themſelves injured that Judah was preferred to them, in guarding the king home, complained in the bittereſt terms, that they had ſtolen him from them, with an intention to deprive the reſt of their intereſt in him. Judah, on the other ſide, alleged, that their near relation to the king intitled them to that preference; which, however, they had made no other advantage of, than that of being neareſt to his perſon, without receiving, or expecting any gratuity from him. To this the others anſwered, that David, as a king, being equally related to them all, their ſhare in him bore a ten-fold proportion to theirs, for which reaſon they ought to have been the firſt invited, and the neareſt to him.

CHAP. XX.

1 By occaſion of the quarrel, Sheba maketh a party in Iſrael. 3 Davids ten concubines are ſhut up in perpetual priſon. 4 Amaſa made captain over Judah, is ſlain by Joab. 14 Joab purſueth Sheba unto Abel. 16 A wiſe woman ſaveth the city by Shebas head. 23 Davids officers.

AND there happened to be there a man of Belial, whoſe name was Sheba the ſon of Bichri, a Benjamite, and he blew a trumpet, and ſaid, We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the ſon of Jeſſe: every man to his tents, O Iſrael.

2 So every man of Iſrael went up from after David, and followed Sheba the ſon of Bichri: but the men of Judah clave unto their king, from Jordan even to Jeruſalem.

3 ¶ And David came to his houſe at Jeruſalem, and the king took the ten women his concubines, whom he had left to keep the houſe, and put them in ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them: ſo they were ſhut up unto the day of their death, living in widowhood.

4 ¶ Then ſaid the king to Amaſa, Aſſemble me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here preſent.

5 So

5 So Amaſa went to aſſemble the men of Judah; but he tarried longer than the ſet time which he had appointed him.

6 And David ſaid to Abiſhai, Now ſhall Sheba the ſon of Bichri do us more harm than did Abſalom: take thou thy lords ſervants, and purſue after him, leſt he get him fenced cities, and eſcape us.

7 And there went out after him Joabs men, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jeruſalem, to purſue after Sheba the ſon of Bichri.

8 When they were at the great ſtone which is in Gibeon, Amaſa went before them: and Joabs garment that he had put on, was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a ſword faſtned upon his loins in the ſheath thereof, and as he went forth it fell out.

9 And Joab ſaid to Amaſa, Art thou in health, my brother? and Joab took Amaſa by the beard with the right hand to kiſs him.

10 But Amaſa took no heed to the ſword that was in Joabs hand: ſo he ſmote him therewith in the fifth rib, and ſhed out his bowels to the ground, and ſtruck him not again, and he died: ſo Joab and Abiſhai his brother purſued after Sheba the ſon of Bichri.

11 And one of Joabs men ſtood by him, and ſaid, He that favoureth Joab, and he that is for David, let him go after Joab.

12 And Amaſa wallowed in blood in the mids of the high-way: and when the man ſaw that all the people ſtood ſtill, he removed Amaſa out of the high-way into the field, and caſt a cloth upon him, when he ſaw that every one that came by him ſtood ſtill.

13 When he was removed out of the high-way, all the people went on after Joab, to purſue after Sheba the ſon of Bichri.

14 ¶ And he went through all the tribes of Iſrael unto Abel, and to Beth-maachah, and all the Berites: and they were gathered together, and went alſo after him.

15 And they came and beſieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they caſt up a bank againſt the city, and it ſtood in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab, battered the wall to throw it down.

16 ¶ Then cried a wiſe woman out of the city, Hear, hear; ſay, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may ſpeak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman ſaid, Art thou Joab? And he anſwered, I am he. Then ſhe ſaid unto him, Hear the words of thine handmaid. And he anſwered, I do hear.

18 Then ſhe ſpake ſaying, They were wont to ſpeak in old time, ſaying, They ſhall ſurely ask counſel at Abel: and ſo they ended the matter.

19 I am one of them that are peaceable, and faithful in Iſrael: thou ſeekeſt to deſtroy a city, and a mother in Iſrael: why wilt thou ſwallow up the inheritance of the LORD?

20 And Joab anſwered and ſaid, Far be it, far be it from me, that I ſhould ſwallow up or deſtroy.

21 The matter is not ſo: but a man of mount Ephraim (Sheba the ſon of Bichri by name) hath lift up his hand againſt the king, even againſt David: deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman ſaid unto Joab, Behold, his head ſhall be thrown to thee over the wall.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people in her wiſdom, and they cut off the head of Sheba the ſon of Bichri, and caſt it out to Joab: and he blew a trumpet, and they retired from the city, every man to his tent: and Joab returned to Jeruſalem unto the king.

23 ¶ Now Joab was over all the hoſt of Iſrael: and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites, and over the Pelethites:

24 And Adoram was over the tribute: and Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder:

25 And Sheva was ſcribe: and Zadok and Abiathar were the prieſts:

26 And Ira alſo the Jairite was a chief ruler about David.

Ver. 1. And there happened to be there a man of Belial, whoſe name was Sheba, the ſon of Bichri, a Benjamite, and he blew a trumpet, and ſaid, We have no part in David, &c.] The conteſt between the tribes grew ſo fierce at laſt, through the obſtinacy of the tribe of Judah, that Sheba, a factious fellow of the tribe of Benjamin, took that opportunity to blow the trumpet, and to gather all the malecontents to him, who immediately diſclaimed all farther intereſt in David, and bid open defiance to thoſe who adhered to him; upon which he ſaw himſelf at the head of all the ten tribes, that only of Judah, which had occaſioned this defection, following their king from Jordan to Jeruſalem.

Ver. 3. And David came to his houſe at Jeruſalem, and the king took the ten women his concubines, whom he had left left to keep the houſe, and put them in ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them: ſo they were ſhut up unto the day of their death, living in widowhood.] David treated them in this manner, Firſt, becauſe they had not vigorouſly oppoſed the inordinate deſires of Abſalom, as they ſhould have done, even with the hazard of their lives: Secondly, leſt the ſight of them ſhould renew the memory of Abſalom's impurity, and of their own and David's reproach, which it was fit to bury in perpetual oblivion: Thirdly, becauſe it might appear inceſtuous in David to have any conjugal commerce with thoſe who had been defiled by his own ſon. And laſtly, becauſe as David would not, ſo it was not now convenient that any other man ſhould have any matrimonial intercourſe with them.

Ver. 4. Then ſaid the king to Amaſa, Aſſemble me the men of Judah within three days, &c.] As ſoon as David was come to his metropolis, he ordered his new general to ſet out and aſſemble what forces he could out of Judah, and to come to him in three days, whilſt himſelf took that time to clear his palace of his polluted concubines. But Amaſa, who met with greater difficulty than he expected, having out-ſtayed his time, ver. 5. the king gave the command of his guards, and of thoſe few troops he had about him, to Abiſhai, the brother of Joab, and ordered him to purſue Sheba before he could get into any fenced city. It is evident by this, that Joab was then in high diſgrace; however, he accompanied Abiſhai, tho' not as a commander; and by that time they were come to the great ſtone of Gibeon, which, as Joſephus declares, was an hundred furlongs from Jeruſalem, Amaſa joined them with his troops. Here the treacherous Joab came forth, ſeemingly to welcome him; and taking hold of his beard with one hand, as if he had intended to kiſs him, ran his ſword through his bowels with the other, and laid him dead at his feet. For Joab had hung his ſword in ſuch a manner, that it might drop out of the ſheath when he pleaſed, and it fell out juſt as he went to ſalute and embrace Amaſa; who ſeeing him ſtoop to take it up, imagined it was only to put it into the ſheath again.

As ſoon as the dead body of Amaſa, which occaſioned a general ſtop of the army, was removed out of ſight, Joab marched with the forces directly to Abel Beth-maachah, into which he heard the rebel had retired with ſome troops, after he had rambled about from one city to another, to excite the people to take up arms againſt David, ver. 14.

Abel Beth-maachah is placed by Jerom, in the way from Eleutheropolis to Jeruſalem, and conſequently in the tribe of Judah; but ſuch a ſituation ſeems not agreeable to the circumſtances of this tranſaction; and it appears much more probable, that it was ſeated in the northern part of the land of Iſrael, in the tribe of Naphtali, for there we find a city of this name ſituated, and taken with ſeveral others, firſt by Benhadad, king of Syria, 1 Kings xv. 20. and afterward by the king of Aſſyria, 2 Kings xv. 29.

Joab had ſcarce began the ſiege of this city in form, when a prudent woman addreſſed herſelf to him from the top of the wall, in the following manner.

Ver. 18. They were wont to ſpeak in old time, ſaying, They ſhall ſurely ask counſel at Abel: and ſo they ended the matter.] According to this tranſlation of the words, ſhe praiſes the city of Abel Beth-maachah, as famous, time out of mind, for wiſdom, and for giving ſound advice: And now ſhe would have Joab believe it was not without perſons of great prudence, and fidelity alſo, who would not willingly offend their king. But there is another tranſlation in the margin of our Bibles, which we conceive to be more literal, by referring the word bariſhonah not to old time, but to the beginning of the ſiege. As if ſhe had ſaid, when the people ſaw thee lay ſiege to the city, they ſaid, Surely he will ask us if we will have peace; and then we ſhall ſoon come to an agreement, and make an end. Whereby ſhe ſecretly remembers Joab of a rule in the law, Deut. xx. 10. which commands the Iſraelites to offer peace to the cities of other nations, when they came to beſiege them; and therefore much more to a city of their own, as Abel was. To this purpoſe, R. Solomon Jarchi; and it agrees well with what follows, namely, that they were a peaceable people, and faithful to their prince; and therefore would not have refuſed to ſurrender, upon proper ſummons. Another writer thinks the words will bear the following ſenſe: "This was a "common ſaying in old time, if any one asked whether "Abel was a place of juſtice and judgment, or a den of "thieves? the anſwer was, They are an upright people. "And therefore ſhe asks Joab, why he went about to de-"ſtroy a city ſo famous for virtue?" Thus Mayerus, in his Annotations on Seder Olam, cap. 14.

Ver. 19. I am one of them that are peaceable and faithful in Iſrael.] She ſpeaks in the name of the whole city, which was naturally inclined to peace, and had been faithful to David, during the late revolt.

——— Thou ſeekeſt to deſtroy a city, and a mother in Iſrael.] A great city, which had many towns depending on it, and therefore called a mother.

———Why wilt thou ſwallow up the inheritance of the Lord?] Why wilt thou offer ſuch an injury to the public, by depopulating a part of the country which is God's peculiar?

Joab then replied, that he was far from having any intention to deſtroy that city, in the manner ſhe repreſented, and that he had only marched his troops thither in purſuit of a rebel, who had taken ſanctuary there; and he declared, that if the inhabitants would deliver up Sheba to him, he would immediately raiſe the ſiege. The woman then aſſured Joab, that the head of the traitor ſhould be thrown over the wall; which was accordingly done: for it ſeems that Sheba's party was not ſtrong in the city; or elſe the inhabitants, ſeeing it likely to be taken, were glad to accept of the conditions the woman had made for them. Joab then raiſed the ſiege, according to his promiſe, and returned to Jeruſalem.

Ver. 23. Now Joab was over all the hoſt of Iſrael.] David being reſtored to his kingdom, and eſtabliſhed in it, ſettled all the great officers who were to govern under him, and continued Joab in the chief command of the army; which was ſo much at his devotion, that the king found it would be dangerous to diſplace him.

——— And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites, and over the Pelethites.] As he was alſo before, chap. viii. 18. being a very valiant man, chap. xxiii. 20. whom Solomon made commander in chief of the whole army, after the death of Joab.

Ver. 24. And Adoram was over the tribute.] He was the treaſurer, or receiver of the king's revenue; which office was not ſettled before; becauſe, in the beginning of his reign, it is probable that David had no conſiderable revenue.

——And Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud was recorder.] See the annotation upon chap. viii. ver. 16.

Ver. 25. And Sheva was ſcribe: and Zadok and Abiathar were prieſts.] It is uncertain whether Sheva be the ſame with Seraiah, mentioned chap. viii. 17. Concerning the prieſts, ſee chap. viii. 17.

Ver. 26. And Ira alſo the Jairite.] He had his original in the country of Jair the Gileadite, on the other ſide Jordan, Numb. xxxii. 41. He is not mentioned before, but now was made a great officer.

—— Was a chief ruler about David.] The Hebrew word cohen, as has been often obſerved, ſignifies any miniſter, either ſacred or civil; a prieſt, or a prince. Inſtances of the laſt are numerous, and the Targum expounds it here, rab le David, a prince, or great man, about David. And ſo the prieſt of On, Gen. xli. 50. and the prieſt of Midian, Exod. ii. 16. ſignify the prince or ruler of On, and of Midian. And in Job xii. 19. our tranſlators, following the Chaldee, render it, God leadeth princes away ſpoiled.

CHAP. XXI.

1 The three years famine for the Gibeonites ceaſe, by hanging ſeven of Sauls ſons. 10 Rizpahs kindneſs unto the dead. 12 David burieth the bones of Saul and Jonathan in his fathers ſepulchre. 15 Four battles againſt the Philiſtines, wherein four valiants of David ſlay four giants.

THEN there was a famine in the days of David, three years, year after year; and David enquired of the LORD.

And the LORD anſwered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody houſe, becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites.

2 And the king called the Gibeonites, and ſaid unto them (now the Gibeonites were not of the children of Iſrael, but of the remnant of the Amorites, and the children of Iſrael had ſworn unto them: and Saul ſought to ſlay them, in his zeal to the children of Iſrael and Judah)

3 Wherefore David ſaid unto the Gibeonites, What ſhall I do for you? and wherewith ſhall I make the atonement, that ye may bleſs the inheritance of the LORD?

4 And the Gibeonites ſaid unto him, We will have no ſilver nor gold of Saul, nor of his houſe, neither for us ſhalt thou kill any man in Iſrael. And he ſaid, What you ſhall ſay, that will I do for you.

5 And they anſwered the king, The man that conſumed us, and that deviſed againſt us, that we ſhould be deſtroyed from remaining in any of the coaſts of Iſrael,

6 Let ſeven men of his ſons be delivered unto us, and we will hang them up unto the LORD in Gibeah of Saul, whom the LORD did chooſe. And the king ſaid, I will give them.

7 But the king ſpared Mephiboſheth the ſon of Jonathan the ſon of Saul, becauſe of the LORDs oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan the ſon of Saul.

8 But the king took the two ſons of Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom ſhe bare unto Saul, Armoni, and Mephiboſheth, and the five ſons of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom ſhe brought up for Adriel the ſon of Barzillai the Meholathite.

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill before the LORD: and they fell all ſeven together, and were put to death in the days of harveſt, in the firſt days, in the beginning of barley-harveſt.

10 ¶ And Rizpah the daughter of Aiah took ſackcloth, and ſpread it for her upon the rock, from the beginning of harveſt until water dropped upon them out of heaven, and ſuffered neither the birds of the air to reſt on them by day, nor the beaſts of the fields by night.

11 And it was told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah the concubine of Saul had done.

12 ¶ And David went and took the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan his ſon, from the men of Jabeſh-gilead, which had ſtolen them from the ſtreet of Beth-ſhan, where the Philiſtines had hanged them, when the Philiſtines had ſlain Saul in Gilboa.

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul, and the bones of Jonathan his ſon; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

14 And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his ſon, buried they in the country of Benjamin in Zelah, in the ſepulchre of Kiſh his father; and they performed all that the king commanded: and after that, God was intreated for the land.

15 ¶ Moreover, the Philiſtines had yet war again with Iſrael, and David went down, and his ſervants with him, and fought againſt the Philiſtines; and David waxed faint.

16 And Iſhbi-benob, which was of the ſons of the giant (the weight of whoſe ſpear weighed three hundred ſhekels of braſs in weight) he being girded with a new ſword, thought to have ſlain David.

17 But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah ſuccoured him, and ſmote the Philiſtine, and killed him. Then the men of David ſware unto him, ſaying, Thou ſhalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou quench not the light of Iſrael.

18 And it came to paſs after this, that there was again a battle with the Philiſtines at Gob: then Shibbechai the Huſhathite ſlew Saph, which was of the ſons of the giant.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philiſtines, where Elhanan the ſon of Jaare-oregim a Bethlemite ſlew the brother of Goliath the Gittite, the ſtaff of whoſe ſpear was like a weavers beam.

20 And there was yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of great ſtature, that had on every hand ſix fingers, and on every foot ſix toes, four and twenty in number; and he alſo was born to the giant.

21 And when he defied Iſrael, Jonathan the ſon of Shimea the brother of David ſlew him.

22 Theſe four were born to the giant in Gath, and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his ſervants.

Ver. 1. Then there was a famine in the days of David, three years, year after year; and David enquired of the Lord. And the Lord anſwered, It is for Saul, and for his bloody houſe, becauſe he ſlew the Gibeonites.] Two years after the expedition againſt Abel Beth-maachah, a famine began began in the land of Canaan, and continued for the ſpace of three years; at the expiration of which, David conſulted the Lord concerning the cauſe of this dreadful calamity, and the means of averting it: And he was anſwered, that it was for the murder of the Gibeonites, whom Saul and his bloody houſe had unjuſtly cauſed to be ſlain.

It is not eaſy to determine, when this ſlaughter of the Gibeonites was committed. The Jews, indeed, pretend that Saul took it into his head, in one of his phrenetic fits of zeal to cut them all off. [Vid. Munſt. in loc. ſub. not. a] but they give us no authority for it. The moſt received opinion is, that the Gibeonites were deſtroyed by Saul, when he ſlew all the prieſts and inhabitants of Nob, where, ſaith Abarbinel, the Gibeonites lived, and ſerved as hewers of wood and drawers of water to the prieſts, whom Saul then cut off, 1 Sam. xxii. 18, 19.

The ſame Abarbinel hereupon enquires, why God did not ſend this famine rather for the ſlaughter of the prieſts, than of the Gibeonites? The reply which he offers to this queſtion is, that the ſlaughter of the prieſts was puniſhed before, by the deſtruction of Saul and his ſons in the battle with the Philiſtines, 1 Sam. xxxi. and now he was puniſhed in the ſons of his concubines, and all Iſrael ſuffered with them by famine, becauſe they did not hinder Saul from murdering the Gibeonites, by reminding him of the oath which had formerly been made to them; nay, perhaps they approved of what he did, being glad to ſee the land rid of foreigners. But why this judgment was not executed before may ſeem ſtrange, till we conſider, that the counſels of God are profound; and he hath admirable reaſons, why he puniſhes ſinners not now, but hereafter; and he knows which of their children are deſerving of puniſhment, and ought to bear the iniquity of their fathers; and the longer he ſtays before he ſtrikes, the more evident it is, that he is not forgetful of what has been acted by evil men, tho' his anger be not preſently declared againſt them. Abarbinel likewiſe obſerves, that the Gibeonites being drawers of water, God put the Iſraelites in mind of their offence, by withholding rain from them; juſt as his refuſing to anſwer Saul by Urim, was a ſuitable puniſhment for his murdering the prieſts, who conſulted God by that Sacred Oracle.

Ver. 3. Wherefore David ſaid unto the Gibeonites, What ſhall I do for you? and wherewith ſhall I make the atonement, that ye may bleſs the inheritance of the Lord?] He asks them what ſatisfaction they deſired, for the wrong they had ſuſtained; which may ſeem ſtrange, unleſs we ſuppoſe with Joſephus, that God told David, when he conſulted his Divine Will, not only for what crime he ſent this puniſhment, but that he ſhould take δίκλω ὧ αὐτοὶ θέλουσιν, ſuch a revenge for it, as the Gibeonites ſhould require. Beſide, they had never made any complaint to David of the injury they had received: and this moderation of theirs might induce him to be the kinder to them, and give them leave to name the recompence that ſhould be made them.

The Gibeonites ſent him word, that they deſired neither gold, ſilver, nor any valuable conſideration; but only that ſeven males of Saul's family might be ſent to them, that they might hang them up unto the Lord, ver. 6. Some think it was the barbarous cuſtom of thoſe days, to hang men up, in order to appeaſe the anger of their gods, in time of famine. Geuſius fancies the Gibeonites had formerly practiſed this barbarity, and now propounded it to David, as a means to make the earth more fruitful; and he likewiſe imagines, this is the reaſon why it is obſerved, ver. 2. that the Gibeonites were not of the children of Iſrael, but of the remnant of the Amorites; that it might appear whence this horrid ſuperſtition proceeded, and of which ſome taint ſtill remained among them. The Vulgate here tranſlates it, ut crucifigamus eos, that we may crucify them, which miſled Serrarius and others into this error; namely, that crucifixion was anciently a puniſhment among the Jews; which Caſaubon, Selden, and other learned men, have ſhewn to be falſe.

The Gibeonites likewiſe deſired to perform this execution, in Gibeah of Saul, whom the Lord did chooſe, ver. 6. By this they intended to render the puniſhment the more remarkable and ſhameful; Gibeah being the city where Saul lived, both before, and after he was king. The words, whom the Lord did chooſe, are likewiſe added as an aggravation of the guilt of Saul, who was ſo highly favoured by God, and yet obeyed not his commands; but ſpared the Amalekites, whom God commanded him to deſtroy, and murdered the poor Gibeonites, whom he was bound by the oath of God to preſerve.

David loſt no time, but cauſed the male offspring of Saul to be ſought out of that unfortunate houſe; but gave expreſs orders, that Mephiboſheth ſhould be ſpared, out of friendſhip to his father Jonathan. The unhappy victims of the Gibeonites reſentment were, two ſons of one of Saul's concubines, named Rizpah, who had formerly been debauched by Abner, chap. iii. 7. and five ſons of Michal, Saul's daughter: not that Michal, who had been taken from David, and given to Phaltiel, and was afterward ſent to David again by Iſhboſheth; for it is obſerved that ſhe was barren, chap. vi. ver. 23. The Michal therefore, who is here mentioned, was either ſome other daughter of Saul, of that name, and who was married to Adriel of Meholah; or rather, as the Jews affirm, and with greater probability, Merab, Saul's eldeſt daughter, who had indeed been given to that very Adriel, 1 Sam. xviii. 19. So that it is ſuppoſed, that the name Michal is accidentally crept into the text, inſtead of Merab; tho' the Jews, unwilling to make that conceſſion, will have it, that Merab was the real mother of theſe five ſons, and Michal only by adoption.

Theſe unhappy victims were put to death by the Gibeonites, and then the famine was ſtayed. Whilſt their carcaſes were ſuffered to hang in the open air, which was almoſt a whole ſummer, Rizpah ſhewed ſo much concern for them, that ſhe kept them night and day from being devoured, either by fowls or wild beaſts; which pious deed ſtruck David with ſuch remorſe, that he cauſed them to be taken down, and buried with the remains of Saul and Jonathan in Zelah, the burying place of the houſe of Kiſh.

Ver. 15. Moreover the Philiſtines had yet war again with Iſrael.] That is, after all the wars before mentioned in this book with the Philiſtines, they again diſturbed the repoſe of David, in the latter end of his reign.

——— And David went down, and his ſervants with him, and fought againſt the Philiſtines; and David waxed faint.] Being in his declining years, or rather of a great age, and much worn out by various troubles and afflictions.

Ver. 16. And Iſhbi-benob, which was of the ſons of the giant.] That is, of Goliath, who by way of eminency is called the giant.

——— (The weight of whoſe ſpear weighed three hundred ſhekels of braſs in weight.)] To judge of him, by the weight of his ſpear, he was not of above half the ſtrength of Goliath, the head of whoſe ſpear weighed ſix hundred ſhekels, or twenty-two of our pounds Troy; whereas, the head of this man's ſpear weighed but three hundred ſhekels, or eleven of the ſame pounds.

——— He being girded with a new ſword.] The word ſword is not in the Hebrew, nor is there any thing remarkable in his having a new ſword; we therefore take the meaning to be, either that he was girded with a new kind of weapon, made on purpoſe for him to ſuit his ſtrength, which ſurpaſſed that of an ordinary man: Or, rather, that he was girded with a new belt; which had been beſtowed upon him as a reward of ſome great exploit performed by him; or as a token of ſome new honour or command conferr'd upon him in the army.

——— Thought to have ſlain David.] Being ſtronger than the king, and having him at an advantage, when, by ſome accident, he was ſeparated from his army, as Joſephus underſtands it.

Ver. 17. But Abiſhai the ſon of Zeruiah ſuccoured him, and ſmote the Philiſtine, and killed him.] The words in the original leave it doubtful, whether this Philiſtine champion was ſlain by Abiſhai, or by David; our tranſlation inclines to the former: But if David was not the perſon who killed him, it will be difficult to verify what is ſaid at the cloſe of this chapter, namely, that all theſe giants fell by the hand of David, and of his ſervants; for David ſlew none of them, unleſs it were this.

——— Then the men of David ſware unto him, ſaying, Thou ſhalt go no more out with us to battle.] They had adviſed adviſed this before, when they went to attack Abſalom, but now they peremptorily decreed it, and ſolemnly confirmed it with an oath.

——— That thou quench not the light of Iſrael.] Leſt thou be killed, and we thereby ſhould loſe the glory of having ſuch a king to reign over us. Good kings are called the light of their people, 1 Kings xi. 36. xv. 4. becauſe by their government, conduct, and courage, they render their people happy and illuſtrious.

Ver. 18. And it came to paſs after this, that there was again a battle with the Philiſtines at Gob.] This place being no where elſe mentioned, no certainty can be had as to its ſituation, but what may be inferred from the parallel place, 1 Chron. xx. 4. where this battle is ſaid to be fought at Gezer, ſo that either Gob and Gezer were the ſame place, or elſe (which ſeems more likely) were at a ſmall diſtance from each other; in conſequence of which, the battles fought between them, or near them, might be indifferently termed, battles at Gob, or Gezer; as the glorious battle gained by the late duke of Marlborough in Germany is promiſcuouſly ſtiled, Blenheim fight, or Hochtſted fight.

In this battle at Gob, Saph, another of Goliath's ſons, was ſlain by Shibbechai the Huſhathite, ver. 18. one of David's worthies, 1 Chron. xi. 29.

Another battle was fought at Gob alſo, ver. 19. and Goliath's brother, the ſtaff of whoſe ſpear was like a weaver's beam, fell by the valour of Elhanan the ſon of Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, who is ſimply called the ſon of Jair, 1 Chron. xx. 5. He is likewiſe reckoned among David's worthies, 1 Chron. xi. 26. where he is ſaid to be the ſon of Dodo, who, we ſuppoſe, was his grandfather.

From Gob, the war was transferred into the territory of Gath, ver. 20. and in the battle which was there fought, another of Goliath's ſons, who had ſix fingers upon each hand, and ſix toes upon each foot, did, in imitation of his father, challenge the whole army of Iſrael to ſend out one of their number to engage him in ſingle combat, but was laid low by the ſword of Jonathan the brother of David.

Ver. 22. Theſe four were born to the giant in Gath, and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his ſervants.] The firſt of them was ſlain by David, Abiſhai aſſiſting; the reſt by the great men who were about him.

CHAP. XXII.

1 A Pſalm of thankſgiving for God's powerful deliverance and manifold bleſſings.

AND David ſpake unto the LORD the words of this ſong, in the day that the LORD had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul.

2 And he ſaid, The LORD is my rock, and my fortreſs, and my deliverer.

3 The God of my rock, in him will I truſt: he is my ſhield, and the horn of my ſalvation, my high tower, and my refuge, my Saviour; thou ſaveſt me from violence.

4 I will call on the LORD, who is worthy to be praiſed: ſo ſhall I be ſaved from mine enemies.

5 When the waves of death compaſſed me: the floods of ungodly men made me afraid.

6 The ſorrows of hell compaſſed me about: the ſnares of death prevented me.

7 In my diſtreſs I called upon the LORD, and cried to my God, and he did hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears.

8 Then the earth ſhook and trembled: the foundations of heaven moved and ſhook becauſe he was wroth.

9 There went up a ſmoke out of his noſtrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: coals were kindled by it.

10 He bowed the heavens alſo and came down: and darkneſs was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon a cherub, and did fly: and he was ſeen upon the wings of the wind.

12 And he made darkneſs pavilions round about him, dark waters, and thick clouds of the ſkies.

13 Through the brightneſs before him were coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD thundred from heaven, and the moſt High uttered his voice.

15 And he ſent out arrows, and ſcattered them: lightning, and diſcomfited them.

16 And the channels of the ſea appeared, the foundations of the world were diſcovered, at the rebuking of the LORD, at the blaſt of the breath of his noſtrils.

17 He ſent from above, he took me: he drew me out of many waters.

18 He delivered me from my ſtrong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too ſtrong for me.

19 They prevented me in the day of my calamity: but the LORD was my ſtay.

20 He brought me forth alſo into a large place: he delivered me, becauſe he delighted in me.

21 The LORD rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs: according to the cleanneſs of my hands hath he recompenſed me.

22 For I have kept the ways of the LORD, and have not wickedly departed from my God.

23 For all his judgments were before me: and as for his ſtatutes, I did not depart from them.

24 I was alſo upright before him, and have kept myſelf from mine iniquity.

25 Therefore the LORD hath recompenſed me according to my righteouſneſs: according to my cleanneſs in his eye-ſight.

26 With the merciful thou wilt ſhew thyſelf merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt ſhew thyſelf upright.

27 With

27 With the pure thou wilt ſhew thyſelf pure: and with the froward thou wilt ſhew thyſelf unſavoury.

28 And the afflicted people thou wilt ſave: but thine eyes are upon the haughty, that thou mayſt bring them down.

29 For thou art my lamp, O LORD: and the LORD will lighten my darkneſs.

30 For by thee I have run through a troop: by my God have I leaped over a wall.

31 As for God, his way is perfect: the word of the LORD is tried: he is a buckler to all them that truſt in him.

32 For who is God, ſave the LORD? and who is a rock, ſave our God?

33 God is my ſtrength and power: and he maketh my way perfect.

34 He maketh my feet like hinds feet: and ſetteth me upon my high places.

35 He teacheth my hands to war: ſo that a bow of ſteel is broken by mine arms.

36 Thou haſt alſo given me the ſhield of thy ſalvation: and thy gentleneſs hath made me great.

37 Thou haſt enlarged my ſteps under me: ſo that my feet did not ſlip.

38 I have purſued mine enemies, and deſtroyed them: and turned not again until I had conſumed them.

39 And I have conſumed them, and wounded them, that they could not ariſe: yea, they are fallen under my feet.

40 For thou haſt girded me with ſtrength to battle: them that roſe up againſt me, haſt thou ſubdued under me.

41 Thou haſt alſo given me the necks of mine enemies, that I might deſtroy them that hate me.

42 They looked, but there was none to ſave: even unto the LORD, but he anſwered them not.

43 Then did I beat them as ſmall as the duſt of the earth, I did ſtamp them as the mire of the ſtreet, and did ſpread them abroad.

44 Thou alſo haſt delivered me from the ſtrivings of my people, thou haſt kept me to be head of the heathen: a people which I knew not, ſhall ſerve me.

45 Strangers ſhall ſubmit themſelves unto me: aſſoon as they hear, they ſhall be obedient unto me.

46 Strangers ſhall fade away, and they ſhall be afraid out of their cloſe places.

47 The LORD liveth, and bleſſed be my rock: and exalted be the God of the rock of my ſalvation.

48 It is God that avengeth me, and that bringeth down the people under me,

49 And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies: thou alſo haſt lifted me up on high above them that roſe up againſt me: thou haſt delivered me from the violent man.

50 Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O LORD, among the heathen, and I will ſing praiſes unto thy name.

51 He is the tower of ſalvation for his king: and ſheweth mercy to his anointed, unto David, and to his ſeed for evermore.

Ver. 1. And David ſpake unto the Lord the words of this ſong, in the day that the Lord had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies.] It is commonly thought, that David compoſed this Pſalm toward the cloſe of his days, after all the victories mentioned in the preceding chapter: But Abarbinel, who earneſtly contends that all things fell out in the order wherein they are related in this book, is of a quite different opinion here; and will have it, that David compoſed this ſong in his youth, in the midſt of all his ſtraits and difficulties; out of which, when God delivered him, he ſung this ſong of praiſe unto him. So that by the words, "in the day that the Lord "delivered him," he thinks is meant, that every time he received any deliverance from God, his uſual method was to acknowledge it thankfully, in the words of this ſong; which was compoſed at firſt for his own private uſe; but, in the end of his days, he thought fit to communicate it to others, and therefore inſerted it in the book of Pſalms, in order to its being uſeful to thoſe who might happen to be in the like ſtraits, and who ſhould be favoured with the like mercies. And there alſo he reviewed it, and made ſeveral alterations in it, which amount to ſeventy-four in number. And this he did, to render his meaning plainer, as Abarbinel thinks; and that the people might not miſtake it. And there is ſome ground for part of what he ſaith; for the xviiith Pſalm is directed to the chief muſician, which ſhews it was then intended for public uſe; whereas nothing is ſaid of that here, and therefore it is probable that it remained for ſome time a piece of private devotion.

——— And out of the hand of Saul.] That prince may be thought to be comprehended under the appellation of David's enemies: But theſe, as the ſame Abarbinel obſerves, were properly the people of other nations, who made war upon him. Now tho' Saul cruelly perſecuted David, yet it did not become David to call him his enemy; and therefore, to diſtinguiſh him from them, he adds, and out of the hand of Saul.

Ver. 2. And he ſaid, The Lord is my rock, and my fortreſs, and my deliverer.] The great number of metaphors in this, and the next verſe, is a large paraphraſe upon the firſt commandment, declaring God alone to be David's confidence; in whom he placed all his ſtrength, ſecurity, and happineſs. The conſequence of which is, that we ſhould love God with all our heart, and ſoul, and ſtrength, as Moſes adds after that precept, Deut. vi. 4, 5. x 12, and therefore David, when he reviewed this Pſalm, begins it thus: I will love thee, O Lord, my ſtrength, &c. Pſalm xviii. 1.

Ver. 4. I will call on the Lord, who is worthy to be praiſed: ſo ſhall I be ſaved from mine enemies.] See that Pſalm, where the ſame words are to be found. Upon which Strigelius piouſly obſerves, that as the πανοπλία, or whole armour, of a ſoldier is of no ſervice to him unleſs he put it on, to defend himſelf, and offend his enemy, ſo no protection from God is to be expected, unleſs we apply ourſelves unto him by prayer and praiſes.

Ver. 5. When the waves of death compaſſed me: the floods of ungodly men made me afraid.] The words in this verſe differ from thoſe in Pſalm xviii. but the ſenſe is the ſame; namely, that David was in a ſinking condition, and ſaw no way to eſcape, being over-powered by troops of ungodly men, who, like a torrent, threatened to ſweep him away.

Ver. 6. The ſorrows of hell compaſſed me about: the ſnares of death prevented me.] He was ſo intangled in their ſnares, that he had no more power to help himſelf than a dead man bound hand and foot in his grave. For ſo the Hebrew word ſheol, which we tranſlate hell, here ſignifies.

Ver. 7. In my diſtreſs I called upon the Lord.] He did not deſpair when he was at this plunge, but made his addreſſes to him who is omnipotent, moſt earneſtly beſeeching that propitious Being to deliver him, as he had frequently done.

——— And he did hear my voice out of his temple, and my cry did enter into his ears.] There is very little difference between theſe words and thoſe in Pſalm xviii. And the meaning is, that God gave him a gracious anſwer from his ſanctuary, or from heaven, of which the ſanctuary was a type, and ſhewed that he was ſenſibly touched with David's affliction.

Ver. 8. Then the earth ſhook and trembled.] The terror which God infuſed into the enemies of David is compared to an earthquake, which cauſes all perſons to tremble, as it did the jailor, Acts xvi. 29.

——The foundations of heaven moved and ſhook, becauſe he was wroth.] In Pſalm xviii. the words are, the foundations of the hills; which explains what David here means by heaven; namely, mountains lifted up to heaven. Or, he repreſents the dread which fell upon his enemies, by the conſternation which an earthquake cauſes, when it is accompanied with thunder, lightning, and hail, from heaven. We do not read that there were literally ſuch ſtorms and earthquakes for David's deliverance. But if there were, it need not ſeem ſtrange, when profane hiſtory informs us of God's interpoſing after this manner in ſome caſes. Livy informs us, that in the eighth year of the ſecond Punic war, when Hannibal and the Romans were drawn up, and ready for battle, upon which the fate of Rome depended, there fell ſuch a ſhower of hail and rain, as confounded both armies, and compelled them to retreat to their reſpective camps; and, on the next day, they were again parted by the like tempeſt, in the very ſame place; but aſſoon as they came to their camps, the tempeſt ceaſed, and a wonderful ſerenity ſucceeded.

Ver. 9. There went up a ſmoke out of his noſtrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured, &c.] Theſe are very ſtrong metaphors, to expreſs the moſt flaming degree of anger, and its dreadful effects.

Ver. 10. He bowed the heavens alſo and came down: and darkneſs was under his feet.] The Divine Majeſty appeared deſcending from heaven, in a glorious cloud, which at the bottom was all dark, but radiant above, and ſhining with an amazing luſtre.

Ver. 11. And he rode upon a cherub.] To ride, in the Hebrew language, ſignifies to rule, or manage with an abſolute power, that on which one is ſaid to ride. And therefore to ride upon a cherub, or to make the clouds his chariot, which is the very ſame, becauſe angels were wont to appear in bright clouds, is to ſend his heavenly miniſters to execute his pleaſure, wherever he thinks good.

——— And did fly.] Made haſte to ſuccour David, when he was in great diſtreſs.

——— And he was ſeen upon the wings of the wind.] A rapid wind ſhewed the Divinity was preſent to overturn all oppoſition.

Ver. 12. And he made darkneſs pavilions round about him, dark waters, and thick clouds of the ſky.] This is ſtill a deſcription of the angelic powers, who ſurrounded their omnipotent Sovereign, as his miniſters, ready to be employed wherever he ſhould think fit to ſend them.

Ver. 13. Through the brightneſs before him were coals of fire kindled.] Thoſe celeſtial miniſters going forth from the glorious preſence of God, ſent hail-ſtones and lightnings in the face of David's enemies.

Ver. 14. The Lord thundered from heaven, and the moſt High uttered his voice.] Thunder is called the voice of God, in Pſalm xxix. which he ſent forth in ſuch terrible cracks, accompanied with flaſhes of fire, that quite daunted the enemies of David.

Ver. 15. He ſent out arrows, and ſcattered them; lightning, and diſcomfited them.] Theſe were the weapons with which they were vanquiſhed; lightnings were the darts and arrows that compelled them to have recourſe to flight.

Ver. 16. And the channels of the ſea appeared, the foundations of the world were diſcovered at the rebuking of the Lord, &c.] This is the deſcription of a great earthquake, which was the effect of God's juſt indignation againſt David's enemies.

Ver. 17. He ſent from above, he took me: he drew me out of many waters.] He delivered David from innumerable dangers, which are here compared to waters breaking out upon a country, to overflow it.

Ver. 18. He delivered me from my ſtrong enemies, and from them that hated me.] Firſt from Goliath, and afterward from the Philiſtines, Syrians, and other nations, whoſe hatred to him made them ſollicitous to deſtroy him.

———For they were too ſtrong for me.] Their forces were more numerous than his, and would have overpowered him, if God had not interpoſed for his preſervation.

Ver. 19. They prevented me in the day of my calamity, but the Lord was my ſtay.] When he was in a weak condition, and unable to defend himſelf, Saul came ſuddenly upon him, and had certainly deſtroyed him, if the Lord had not been his ſupport.

Ver. 20. He brought me forth alſo into a large place.] When his houſe, for inſtance, was beſet by Saul's officers, who watched to kill him, at his coming out in the morning, he eſcaped by the help of his wife, and went to Ramah, where he was at liberty to go where he pleaſed.

———He delivered me becauſe he delighted in me.] God afterward delivered him in many other ſtraits, becauſe he had a kindneſs for him, and determined to make him king of Iſrael.

Ver. 21. The Lord rewarded me according to my righteouſneſs, &c.] God knew that he was innocent of what he was accuſed, and that he had no deſign to injure Saul.

Ver. 22. For I have kept the ways of the Lord, and have not wickedly departed from my God.] He did not take any unlawful courſes to preſerve himſelf: But when Saul fell into his hands, he would not hurt him, becauſe he was the Lord's anointed.

Ver. 23. For all his judgments were before me.] He made the commands of God the rule of his actions.

——— As for his ſtatutes I did not depart from them.] In Pſalm xviii. the words are, I did not put away his ſtatutes from me; that is, he did not make them give way to his intereſt, but obſerved them in the ſtricteſt manner.

Ver. 24. I was alſo upright before him, &c.] This is ſtill ſpoken with reſpect to Saul: For David choſe rather to ſuffer any thing, than injure that prince, and nothing could tempt him to commit that iniquity, to which he was by favourable opportunities.

Ver. 25. Therefore the Lord hath recompenſed me according to my righteouſneſs, &c.] According to David's prayer; which is very remarkable, 1 Sam. xxvi. 23. where he deſires God to deal by him, as he had dealt by Saul; with whoſe blood he would not ſtain his hands, when it was in his power to take revenge.

Ver. 26. With the merciful thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf merciful, &c.] It is the common method of God's providence to do good to thoſe who do good to others; and to do them juſtice, who do not ſwerve from the rules of righteouſneſs, when they are injuriouſly treated by their neighbours.

Ver. 27. With the pure thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf pure.] God will faithfully keep his promiſes to thoſe who are faithful to him.

———And with the froward thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf unſavoury.] The Divine Majeſty will declare how much he diſtaſtes and abhors thoſe who take deceitful courſes to accompliſh their ends. In Pſalm xviii. the words are, with the froward thou wilt ſhew thy ſelf froward, that is, God inſnares thoſe in their own devices, who perverſely ſtrike into crooked ways to compaſs their deſigns; which unexpectedly end in their deſtruction.

Ver. 28. And the afflicted people thou wilt ſave: but thine eyes are upon the haughty, that thou mayſt bring them down.] down.] It is uſual for God to deliver poor helpleſs people, who humbly depend upon him alone for ſafety: But he is attentive to lay thoſe low who, proud of their power, inſolently oppreſs their poor inferiors.

Ver. 29. For thou art my lamp, O Lord, and the Lord will lighten my darkneſs.] David was a remarkable inſtance of this; for God raiſed him from a deſpicable ſtate, to an illuſtrious condition; and when he concluded that he ſhould periſh, advanced him to royal ſplendor and greatneſs.

Ver. 30. For by thee I have run through a troop: by my God have I leaped over a wall.] Now he ſeems to celebrate the wonderful works of God, after the perſecution from Saul was over, and he was made king. Numerous armies then aſſaulted him, but he broke and ſcattered them all, and ſcaled the higheſt walls, in whoſe incloſure his enemies thought themſelves ſecure.

Ver. 31. As for God, his way is perfect.] By the way of God, ſeems to be meant his counſels, together with his proceedings, and the methods of his providence: Which for the preſent may appear perplexed, but in the event will be found to have been perfectly regular and juſt, and altogether agreeable to his promiſes.

——The word of the Lord is tried.] The experience of all good men tells us, that God never deviated from his word; which is freer from all deceit, than the moſt refined gold is from droſs.

——He is a buckler to all them that truſt in him.] So that none can hurt thoſe who place themſelves under his protection, with a pious confidence in him.

Ver. 32. For who is God, ſave the Lord?] For none can defeat his intentions, or reſiſt his will.

——And who is a rock, ſave our God?] There are none ſo powerful as to be able to injure thoſe whom God will vouchſafe to protect; or to defend thoſe whom he determines to deſtroy.

Ver. 33. God is my ſtrength and power.] What great men would Scipio and others have proved, had they been poſſeſſed with ſuch a ſenſe of God, as to have acknowledged, that all their courage and conduct, and all their mighty victories, were owing to his Divine Power. But no warrior ever reſembled David, who had God in all his thoughts, and acknowledged all his great actions to be performed by his gracious aid.

——And he maketh my way perfect.] God removed all obſtacles that preſented themſelves in David's way, to retard the completion of his conqueſts.

Ver. 34. He maketh my feet like hinds feet.] This is commonly thought to relate to the ſwiftneſs of thoſe creatures; but Bochart hath made it probable, that it hath a reference to the firmneſs of their treading; which is very remarkable, as he ſhews in his Hierozoicon, p. 1. lib. 3. c. 17.

——And ſetteth me upon my high places.] He was enabled to purſue his enemies with great celerity, even to ſuch places, as, for their height and craggineſs, ſeemed to be inacceſſible.

Ver. 35. He teacheth my hands to war: ſo that a bow of ſteel is broken by mine arms.] He aſcribes all his ſtrength and dexterity to God; who enabled him to wreſt the ſtrongeſt bow out of the hands of his enemies, and to break it in pieces.

Ver. 36. Thou haſt alſo given me the ſhield of thy ſalvation.] When he was in great dangers, God protected him; particularly in the battle mentioned in the preceding chapter, when Iſhbi-benob had ſlain him, if Abiſhai had not ſtepped in for his timely ſuccour.

——And thy gentleneſs hath made me great.] Theſe wonderful deliverances he could aſcribe to nothing but the tender mercy of God to him, when he was unworthy of the Divine Favour.

Ver. 37. Thou haſt enlarged my ſteps under me: ſo that my feet did not ſlip.] When he was in great ſtraits, and ſurrounded with difficulties, God opened a ſpacious paſſage, and made all things ſucceed according to the deſire of David.

Ver. 38. I have purſued mine enemies, and deſtroyed them, &c.] He gained compleat victories over the Philiſtines, Moabites, Syrians, and Ammonites. See the 8th and 10th chapters of this book.

Ver. 39. And I have conſumed them, and wounded them, that they could not ariſe.] Gave them ſuch a fatal blow, as rendered them unable to renew the fight.

——Yea, they are fallen under my feet.] They ſubmitted themſelves to him, and ſerved him.

Ver. 40. For thou haſt girded me with ſtrength to battle: them that roſe up againſt me, haſt thou ſubdued under me.] This was remarkably fulfilled in the rebellion of Abſalom; when David was in a feeble condition, and had but few followers. But God inſpired them with courage to fight, and crowned the battle with ſuch ſucceſs, that they routed the army of Abſalom; and all Iſrael was brought under obedience to David.

Ver. 41. Thou haſt alſo given me the necks of mine enemies, &c.] This alſo was literally fulfilled, when Sheba raiſed a new rebellion, and his head was thrown over the wall of Abel to Joab, chap. xx.

Ver. 42. They looked, but there was none to ſave.] In Pſalm xviii. it is, they cried: Which may ſignify, that they ſought for help from their allies and confederates; but to no purpoſe.

——Even unto the Lord, but he anſwered them not.] It was too late to ſeek for aid from God, when they were deſtitute of all other aſſiſtance; for he had then deſerted them, and would not hear their prayers.

Ver. 43. Then did I beat them as ſmall as the duſt of the earth.] In Pſalm xviii. the words are, as the duſt before the wind. The meaning of which is, that David ſo entirely vanquiſhed his enemies, that they had no more power than the duſt of the earth, which is whirled about with every blaſt of wind.

--I did ſtamp them as the mire of the ſtreet, and did ſpread them abroad.] In the fore-mentioned Pſalm, the words run thus, I did caſt them out as the dirt in the ſtreet. That is, he rendered them as contemptible as the ſoil in dirt the ſtreet, which every one tramples under his feet.

Ver. 44. Thou alſo haſt delivered me from the ſtrivings of my people, thou haſt kept me to be head of the heathen.] The firſt part of theſe words relates to the union of the people of Iſrael and Judah, under David's government, after long contentions between them. The other part has a reference to the enlargement of his kingdom, by ſubduing the neighbouring heathen people, chap. viii. 10.

——A people which I knew not, ſhall ſerve me.] Such as the Syrians of Zobah, and Rehob, and Iſh-tob, and Maachah. Of whom, David, in all probability, had little or no knowledge, till they came to aſſiſt the Ammonites, chap. x. 19.

Ver. 46. Strangers ſhall fade away.] Fall as withered leaves from the trees.

——And they ſhall be afraid of their cloſe places.] Diſtruſting their ſtrong holds in ſuch a manner, that they came creeping out with fear, to ſurrender up themſelves into his hands.

Ver. 47. The Lord liveth, and bleſſed be my rock.] He deſires that all the praiſe may be aſcribed to God alone; in whoſe eternal power he ſtill confided.

——And exalted be the God of the rock of my ſalvation.] He again deſires the Lord might be magnified with the higheſt praiſes; who had not only preſerved him from periſhing, but likewiſe exalted him to the throne of Iſrael.

Ver. 48. It is God that avengeth me, and that bringeth down the people under me.] David did not avenge himſelf, but left it to God to plead his cauſe; who not only puniſhed thoſe who were injurious to him, but brought many nations under his empire.

Ver. 49. And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies: thou alſo haſt lifted me up on high above them that roſe againſt me.] David made ſome ſmall alteration in theſe words, when he inſerted this hymn into the book of Pſalms, for public uſe. Of which, Abarbinel endeavours to aſſign a reaſon, but ſeems too curious in his obſervations: The plaineſt and moſt certain of which is this; that the firſt part of theſe words relates to the nations whom David ſubdued, and who were properly his enemies; and the latter has a reference to the children of Iſrael, when they roſe up againſt him, with an intention to dethrone him.

——Thou haſt delivered me from the violent man.] God delivered him from Saul, who perſecuted him with the utmoſt violence for a very conſiderable time.

Ver. 50. Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O Lord, among the heathen, &c.] He reſolved to offer his thankful acknowledgments to God, in every place, ſo as to make make thoſe nations whom he had ſubdued ſenſible, that he aſcribed all his victories to the moſt High, in honour of whom he would ſing this perpetual ſong.

Ver. 51. He is the tower of ſalvation for his king.] As David was a king, by the Divine appointment, and not by uſurpation, ſo he truſted in God alone, for the ſupport of his regal authority.

—— And ſheweth mercy to his anointed, unto David, and to his ſeed for evermore.] David hoped the ſame mercy which had promoted him to this dignity would be continued to him, and likewiſe to his poſterity, till the coming of the great King Meſſiah, whoſe kingdom ſhall have no end.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 David, in his laſt words, profeſſeth his faith in Gods promiſes to be beyond ſenſe or experience. 6 The different ſtate of the wicked. 8 A catalogue of Davids mighty men.

NOW theſe be the laſt words of David: David the ſon of Jeſſe ſaid, and the man who was raiſed up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael, ſaid,

2 The ſpirit of the LORD ſpake by me, and his word was in my tongue.

3 The God of Iſrael ſaid, the Rock of Iſrael ſpake to me, He that ruleth over men muſt be juſt, ruling in the fear of God:

4 And he ſhall be as the light of the morning, when the ſun riſeth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender graſs ſpringing out of the earth by clear ſhining after rain.

5 Although my houſe be not ſo with God; yet he hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, ordered in all things and ſure: for this is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, although he make it not to grow.

6 ¶ But the ſons of Belial ſhall be all of them as thorns thruſt away, becauſe they cannot be taken with hands.

7 But the man that ſhall touch them, muſt be fenced with iron, and the ſtaff of a ſpear, and they ſhall be utterly burnt with fire in the ſame place.

8 ¶ Theſe be the names of the mighty men whom David had; the Tachmonite that ſat in the ſeat, chief among the captains (the ſame was Adino the Eznite) he lift up his ſpear againſt eight hundred, whom he ſlew at one time.

9 And after him was Eleazar the ſon of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they defied the Philiſtines that were there gathered together to battle, and the men of Iſrael were gone away.

10 He aroſe, and ſmote the Philiſtines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the ſword: and the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and the people returned after him only to ſpoil.

11 And after him was Shammah the ſon of Agee the Hararite: and the Philiſtines were gathered together into a troop, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles: and the people fled from the Philiſtines.

12 But he ſtood in the midſt of the ground, and defended it, and ſlew the Philiſtines: and the LORD wrought a great victory.

13 And three of the thirty chief went down, and came to David in the harveſt-time, unto the cave of Adullam: and the troop of the Philiſtines pitched in the valley of Rephaim.

14 And David was then in an hold, and the gariſon of the Philiſtines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David longed, and ſaid, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, which is by the gate!

16 And the three mighty men brake through the hoſt of the Philiſtines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheleſs he would not drink thereof, but poured it out unto the LORD.

17 And he ſaid, Be it far from me, O LORD, that I ſhould do this: is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. Theſe things did theſe three mighty men.

18 And Abiſhai the brother of Joab, the ſon of Zeruiah, was chief among three; and he lift up his ſpear againſt three hundred, and ſlew them, and had the name among three.

19 Was he not moſt honourable of three? therefore he was their captain: howbeit, he attained not unto the firſt three.

20 And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, the ſon of a valiant man of Kabzeel, who had done many acts, he ſlew two lion-like men of Moab: he went down alſo and ſlew a lion in the midſt of a pit in time of ſnow.

21 And he ſlew an Egyptian, a goodly man: and the Egyptian had a ſpear in his hand; but he went down to him with a ſtaff, and plucked the ſpear out of the

Egyptians

Egyptians hand, and ſlew him with his own ſpear.

22 Theſe things did Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.

23 He was more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not to the firſt three: and David ſet him over his guard.

24 Aſahel the brother of Joab was one of the thirty; Elhanan the ſon of Dodo of Beth-lehem,

25 Shammah the Harodite, Elika the Harodite,

26 Helez the Paltite, Ira the ſon of Ikkeſh the Tekoite,

27 Abiezer the Anethothite, Mebunnai the Huſhathite,

28 Zalmon the Ahohite, Maharai the Netophathite,

29 Heleb the ſon of Baanah, a Netophathite, Ittai the ſon of Ribai out of Gibeah of the children of Benjamin,

30 Benaiah the Pirathonite, Hiddai of the brooks of Gaaſh,

31 Abi-albon the Arbathite, Azmaveth the Barhumite,

32 Eliahba the Shaalbonite; of the ſons of Jaſhen, Jonathan,

33 Shammah the Hararite, Ahiam the ſon of Sharar the Hararite,

34 Eliphelet the ſon of Ahasbai, the ſon of the Maachathite, Eliam the ſon of Ahithophel the Gilonite,

35 Hezrai the Carmelite, Paarai the Arbite,

36 Igal the ſon of Nathan of Zobah, Bani the Gadite,

37 Zelek the Ammonite, Naharai the Beerothite, armour-bearer to Joab the ſon of Zeruiah,

38 Ira an Ithrite, Gareb an Ithrite,

39 Uriah the Hittite: thirty and ſeven in all.

Ver. 1. Now theſe be the laſt words of David.] The laſt words that he ſpake by the Holy Ghoſt, as Abarbinel expounds them. For he obſerves, that after David had compoſed the book of Pſalms, and inſerted therein the hymn in the foregoing chapter, then he ſpake theſe words; after which, the influence of the Holy Spirit reſided on him no more. The Chaldee paraphraſe, which was always highly eſteemed by the Jews, takes theſe words as if they were a prophecy of the Meſſiah, and expounds them in the following manner: "Theſe are the words of "the prophecy of David, which he propheſied of the "conſummation of all things, in the day of conſolation "which is to come."

———David the ſon of Jeſſe ſaid.] He remembers his low condition, when God was pleaſed to make choice of him to be a king.

———And the man who was raiſed up on high.] Namely, from feeding his father's ſheep, to rule the people of Iſrael.

———The anointed of the God of Jacob.] The Chaldee hath it, anointed by the WORD of the God of Jacob.

———And the ſweet pſalmiſt of Iſrael ſaid.] Who was inſpired to compoſe many delightful hymns in the praiſes of God.

Ver. 2. The ſpirit of the Lord ſpake by me, &c.] David would not have theſe hymns, nor what he now ſpake, looked upon as human compoſitions, but as proceeding from a Divine Impulſe communicated to him by the Holy Ghoſt.

Ver. 3. The God of Iſrael ſaid, the Rock of Iſrael ſpake to me.] By Nathan, or by Samuel.

——— He that ruleth over men muſt be juſt, ruling in the fear of God.] Or, as it is rendered in the margin, Be thou ruler over, &c. which the Chaldee expounds of the Meſſiah in this manner: "The faithful God ſpake, I "will conſtitute to me a king; he is the Meſſiah who ſhall "ariſe, and reign in the fear of the Lord." But this relates firſt to David, the type of Chriſt, who was taught to rule juſtly, and in the fear of God; that is, in the exact obſervance of all the Divine Laws. Or, as Abarbinel interprets it, "When he who rules men is juſt, then the "fear of the Lord will rule and have dominion in the "earth."

Ver. 4. And he ſhall be as the light of the morning, when the ſun riſeth.] The dominion of the juſt ſhall be as the morning light, when the ſun ariſeth, and the light continually increaſes.

——— As the tender graſs ſpringing out of the earth by clear ſhining after rain.] Our tranſlators have quite tranſpoſed the Hebrew words, which run thus: "From "ſplendor and from rain, graſs out of the earth." The ſenſe of which, Abarbinel conceives, is this: "It ſhall be "ſuch a morning, in which there is ſometimes ſun-ſhine, "and ſometimes ſhowers of rain, to make graſs ſpring out "of the earth."

Ver. 5. Although my houſe be not ſo with God, yet he hath made with me an everlaſting covenant, ordered in all things and ſure.] The ſame Abarbinel aſſigns the following interpretation to this paſſage; "Although the know-"ledge of a juſt man gradually grows and increaſes, and "ſometimes is clouded, and at other times illuminated, "the kingdom of David ſhall not be ſo; but God hath "made a perpetual covenant," &c.

———For this is all my ſalvation, and all my deſire, although he make it not to grow.] Or, as the ſame author expounds it, "This is all my ſalvation, and my deſire, "that he would not make it grow or ſhoot up (for that "ſuppoſes it to be buried;) but that it may always re-"main, ordered and preſerved in an equal manner."

It muſt be acknowledged, that there are no words ſo obſcure in this book, as thoſe which compoſe theſe two verſes; the ſenſe of which Ludovicus de Dieu ſeems to have moſt clearly illuſtrated. "The ſtability and per-"petuity of this kingdom, ſaith he, David amplifies by a "compariſon taken from three natural things, which are "very grateful to men, but not conſtant and ſtable, in a "ſettled order, and ſure. For the ſun riſes, but goes "down again; and the morning may be clear, but clouds "afterward ariſe; and the tender graſs ſprings up, but "withers away. Not ſo, continues David, is my king-"dom before God. It is flouriſhing like all theſe, but "then it is perpetual: For he hath made an everlaſting "covenant with me, tho' ſome afflictions have befallen "me; and he hath not made all my ſalvation and deſire "to grow. So he makes the firſt caph of ſimilitude to "ſtand for three, and to be repeated thrice in this follow-"ing manner:

"The God of Iſrael ſaid, the Rock of Iſrael ſpake con-"cerning me; the juſt man ruleth among men: He ruleth "in the fear of God. And as the ſun riſes with a radiant "light; as the morning is without clouds, in conſequence "of its ſplendor; as from rain the tender graſs ſprings "out of the earth; yet (or truly) ſo is not my houſe with "God; becauſe he hath made an everlaſting covenant "with me; regularly diſpoſed in every particular, and "well kept and preſerved in that order. Although he "doth not make all my ſalvation and deſire to grow; "that is, tho' ſome adverſities happen to me and my fa-"mily, yet that always remains, which, in the covenant "of God made with me, is in all things orderly diſpoſed, "and preſerved."

Ver. 6. But the ſons of Belial ſhall be all of them as thorns thruſt away, becauſe they cannot be taken with hands.] The kingdom of impious men ſhall not be like the kingdom of the houſe of David; they being ſo far from reſembling graſs, which is uſeful, that they are rather like thorns, which are rejected as hurtful and pernicious; that is, ſuch wicked men are not fit for human ſociety.

Ver. 7. But the man that ſhall touch them, muſt be fenced with iron, and the ſtaff of a ſpear.] If any perſon will meddle with them, it muſt be at his peril, for ſo the Hebrew word jimmale (which we tranſlate fenced) ſignifies, ſhall be filled with the iron and the ſtaff of a ſpear. This weapon is never uſed to cut down thorns; but iron inflicts a ſevere wound, like that which a man receives from a ſpear, when both the iron and wood of it pierce into his body.

——— And they ſhall be utterly burnt with fire in the ſame place.] Men therefore burn them in the ſame place where they grow. And thus wicked men are deſtroyed, where they imagine themſelves moſt ſecure. This the Targum applies to the judgment of the great day, ſaying, Their puniſhment is in the hand of man; but they ſhall be burnt up utterly, when the houſe of the great judgment appears: that they may ſit on the throne of judgment, to judge the world.

Ver. 8. Theſe be the names of the mighty men whom David had.] Now follows a catalogue of thoſe valiant men who contributed their aſſiſtance to raiſe David to his dignity, and to preſerve him in it, being continually with him in all his wars. There is a liſt of them in 1 Chron. xi. very different from this, in ſeveral particulars. But Abarbinel thinks that circumſtance creates no difficulty, if we do but obſerve, that the author of that book there diſtinguiſhes them into three claſſes; namely, thoſe who had always been with him; they who came to him to Ziklag, a little before he was made king of Judah; and they who came to him to Hebron, after he was proclaimed king of all Iſrael. It was proper to preſerve the memories of all theſe great men; but in this book the Divine Writer intended to mention only the moſt excellent heroes, who conſtantly attended David in his wars, and for whoſe ſake he compoſed the preceding ſong of praiſes to God.

———The Tachmonite that ſat in the ſeat.] Or, as it is tranſlated in the margin, Joſheb-boſhebat the Tachmonite, for he is called in 1 Chron. xi. 11. Iſhobeam, which ſeems to be an abbreviation of that other name. He ſat in the council of war, next to Joab, being, as it is thought, his lieutenant-general; and, as he is here called, the Tachmonite, or, as it ought rather to be written, Chachmonite, Abarbinel thinks he was a man of learning, and addicted to ſtudy, as well as to military affairs; for the Hebrew word chacham ſignifies a wiſe man.

——— Chief among the captains.] The principal commander under Joab, who is not mentioned in this catalogue, tho' he was a very great man. But he had ſtained his character by the baſe murder of two eminent perſons, Abner and Amaſa; and ſome think this was the reaſon why he had not the honour to be ranked among thoſe worthies who ſerved David.

——(The ſame was Adino the Eznite.)] He is thought to have had two names, and that he was of the family of the Eznites; tho' Abarbinel will have his name to have been Adinohaezri.

———He lift up his ſpear.] Theſe words are ſupplied out of 1 Chron. xi. 11.

——Againſt eight hundred, whom he ſlew at one time.] In the laſt cited place of the Chronicles it is ſaid, that he killed three hundred; that is, after the ſlaughter he made in one battle of eight hundred, he killed three hundred in another, as Kimchi underſtands it.

Ver. 9. And after him was Eleazar the ſon of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David.] He was a Benjamite, for Ahoah was one of his ſons, 1 Chron. viii. 4.

——— When they defied the Philiſtines.] As Goliath had defied the Iſraelites, 1 Sam. xvii. 1.

———That were gathered together to battle.] In Paſdammim, as we read, 1 Chron. xi. 13. which is the ſame with Ephes-dammim, 1 Sam. xvii. 1.

———And the men of Iſrael were gone away.] They had fled from before the Philiſtines, as it is explained, 1 Chron. xi. 13.

Ver. 10. He aroſe, and ſmote the Philiſtines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the ſword.] Being all beſmeared with blood; which drying by the heat of it, made his ſword cleave to his hand.

—— And the Lord wrought a great victory that day.] Like that of Shamgar, Judges iii. 31. and of Samſon, Judges xv. 13. where it has been ſhewn, that theſe were not incredible ſtories, God inſpiring men with wonderful courage, and ſtriking a terror into their enemies. There were men in ancient times of prodigious ſtrength, mentioned by Pliny, Nat. Hiſt. lib. 7. cap. 20.

———And the people returned after him only to ſpoil.] They, who before had fled, rallied again, when they ſaw the wonders he performed; and followed after him, not to fight, but only to partake of the ſpoil.

Ver. 11. And after him was Shammah the ſon of Agee the Hararite.] Who is not expreſly mentioned in the book of the Chronicles, but plainly implied to be engaged in the great action here deſcribed. For it is ſaid, 1 Chron. xi. 14. that they ſet themſelves, &c. that is, Shammah and Eleazar, who joined in this enterprize. But this paſſage in Samuel teaches us, that Shammah had the chief hand in it; and therefore it is aſcribed to him.

——— And the Philiſtines were gathered together into a troop.] Or, as it is rendered in the margin, for forage. For ſo Ralbag interprets the Hebrew word chajja.

———Where was a piece of ground full of lentiles.] In the Chronicles it is, full of barley: But this does not create any real difficulty, one part of the field being ſown with lentiles, and the other with barley.

———And the people fled from the Philiſtines.] Fearing to defend the place.

Ver. 12. And he ſtood in the midſt of the ground, and defended it, and ſlew the Philiſtines.] So that they could neither burn the corn, nor carry it away, nor tread it down.

——And the Lord wrought a great victory.] By the hand of Shammah, who was one of the three moſt mighty men, tho' not particularly named in the book of the Chronicles; it being the manner of the Scripture, as the Jews obſerve, to propound that briefly in one place, which hath been at large explained in another; as this action of Shammah is here in this book.

Ver. 13. And three of the thirty chief.] Or, as it is in the margin, three captains over the thirty. Not the three before-mentioned, but the three that follow; who had not the fortitude of the firſt three, but were greater than any of the thirty whom they commanded.

———Went down and came to David in the harveſt-time.] Or rather, as the Hebrew words are, at harveſt; that is, ſaith Abarbinel, the Philiſtines came to deſtroy the fruits of the earth, in order to famiſh the Iſraelites. Whereupon David raiſed an army to protect and defend them in reaping their harveſt.

———Unto the cave of Adullam.] A place where David had ſecreted himſelf from the perſecution of Saul, 1 Sam. xxii. 1. and where he now fortified himſelf againſt the Philiſtines, who, in the beginning of his reign, came with great forces againſt him.

———And the troop of the Philiſtines pitched in the valley of Rephaim.] Of which ſee above, chap. v. 18.

Ver. 14. And David was then in an hold; and the gariſon of the Philiſtines was then at Beth-lehem.] They had poſſeſſed themſelves of this place, and planted a gariſon in it.

Ver. 15. And David longed, and ſaid, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem.] David being hot and thirſty, declared to ſome about him, how delighted he ſhould be with a draught of the waters of Beth-lehem; where he was born, and had lived a long time, and had therefore been accuſtomed to them, and knew how very grateful and refreſhing they were. But he was far from deſiring or expecting that any of his men ſhould hazard their lives to procure them.

Ver. 16. And the three mighty men brake through the hoſt of the Philiſtines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David.] They undertook this action without David's knowledge, and there are three wonderful circumſtances in it, as Abarbinel obſerves. Firſt, that three men could break through the whole hoſt of the Philiſtines: Secondly, that they durſt ſtay long enough to draw water out of the well: Thirdly, that they could carry it away, with a high hand, through the ſame hoſt, and bring it to David.

To

To which he might have added a fourth particular; namely, that they attempted this at the very gate of Bethlehem, where the Philiſtines undoubtedly kept the ſtrongeſt guard.

——Neverthelеſs, he would not drink thereof.] Leſt by gratifying himſelf upon ſuch terms, he ſhould ſeem, either to ſet too high a price upon the ſatisfaction of his appetite, or too low a price upon the lives of his ſoldiers, or ſhould encourage others to the like hazardous and unjuſtifiable attempts.

——But poured it out unto the Lord.] Not in that place where it was brought to him; but kept it, as Abarbinel thinks, till he had an opportunity to go to the altar, and there pour it before God, as a kind of drink-offering, and a grateful acknowledgment of God's goodneſs in preſerving the lives of David's captains, in ſo dangerous an expedition.

Ver. 17. And he ſaid, Be it far from me, O Lord, that I ſhould do this; is not this the blood of the men that went in jeopardy of their lives? &c.] He no longer looked upon it as water, but conſidered it as the blood of thoſe men who fetch'd it with the peril of their lives: And the blood of every creature belonged to God; and was proper to be offered unto him.

——Theſe things did theſe three mighty men.] They all joined in this hazardous exploit: But now follows what they did ſingly.

Ver. 18. And Abiſhai the brother of Joab, the ſon of Zeruiah, was chief among three.] The chief of thoſe three mighty men before-mentioned. See 1 Chron. xi. 20.

——And he lift up his ſpear againſt three hundred, and ſlew them, and had the name among three.] He fought with and killed three hundred men in one battle; and was the moſt eminent and famous of thoſe three.

Ver. 20. And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, the ſon of a valiant man of Kabzeel, who had done many acts.] He was deſcended from valiant anceſtors, whom he far excelled. Kabzeel was a city in the ſouthern part of the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 21.

——He ſlew two lion-like men of Moab.] The Hebrew word ariel ſignifies a lion of God; that is, a great lion; and it was the name, among the Moabites, for a very valiant man; who, at this day, among the Arabians, is called aſſedollabi, a lion of God, as Bochart has obſerved, out of many authors, in his Hierozoicon, P. 1. l. 3. cap. 1.

——He went down alſo and ſlew a lion in the midſt of a pit, in time of ſnow.] This action was the greater, becauſe lions, in ſnowy ſeaſons are fiercer than uſual, for want of prey; and are then alſo fulleſt of heat and vigour. But it is not probable, that Benaiah went to encounter this lion, merely to ſhew his bravery. Some think this furious animal had done much miſchief to the country, which fired Benaiah with a reſolution to expoſe himſelf to this combat with it: But Bochart diſſents from this opinion, and thinks that this hero was under no neceſſity of hazarding his life, in ſuch a daring manner, ſince he might have called others to aſſiſt him, in deſtroying this pernicious beaſt. He therefore is of opinion, that the lion, during a deep ſnow, took ſhelter in a cave (for ſo the word we tranſlate pit ſometimes ſignifies); and that Benaiah, being abroad in that ſnowy ſeaſon, retired to the ſame place, to defend himſelf from the ſeverity of the weather; but was neceſſitated to encounter the lion, who ſprang toward him, with open mouth to devour him. Abarbinel obſerves three great circumſtances in this action: Firſt, that Benaiah ſlew a lion, which is the fierceſt of all ſavage animals: Secondly, he ſlew him in a pit, where he could not turn himſelf as he pleaſed: and, Thirdly, in a time of ſnow, when his hands and feet were cold and benumbed, which leſſened the vigour of their vital operations.

Ver. 21. And he ſlew an Egyptian, a goodly man.] A perſon of a great and majeſtic ſtature, 1 Chron. xi. 23.

——And the Egyptian had a ſpear in his hand; but he went down to him with a ſtaff, and plucked the ſpear out of the Egyptian's hand; and ſlew him with his own ſpear.] It is evident from hence, that Benaiah was not only a perſon of intrepidity, but was likewiſe maſter of great skill and dexterity, in managing a combat either with man or beaſt.

Ver. 22. Theſe things did Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.] Who the third was, is not expreſly declared, either here, or in the book of Chronicles. Abarbinel thinks he might poſſibly join the other two, but is not mentioned, ſince he did not perform any extraordinary action by himſelf. But perhaps Adina, the ſon of Shiza, might be the third; becauſe it is ſaid, 1 Chron. xi. 42. that he was a captain of the Reubenites, and thirty with him. Which ſeems to ſignify, that he was above the thirty, as Abiſhai and Benaiah were.

Ver. 23. He was more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not to the firſt three.] Was not comparable to Adino, and Eleazar, and Shammah.

Ver. 24. Aſahel the brother of Joab was one of the thirty.] Now follow the names of thirty valiant men, but not equal to the worthies already named. Aſahel ſeems to have been the chief of the thirty; and ſome accordingly tranſlate the words, he was above the thirty, and ſo might be the laſt of the three of the ſecond order of worthies.

——Elhanan the ſon of Dodo of Beth-lehem.] Concerning whom we find nothing more recorded, than that he was born and bred (it is likely) in the ſame place with David.

Ver. 25. Shammah the Harodite, Elika the Harodite.] The firſt of theſe is called Shammoth, 1 Chron. xi. 27. and is ſaid to be an Hararite. Concerning which, and ſuch like alterations, and other changes of the names, which will be obſerved by comparing this catalogue with that, it will be ſufficient to ſuggeſt, Firſt, that the ſame names of perſons, or places, are differently written and pronounced, according to the various dialects uſed by men of divers places or ages: Secondly, that one man had frequently two names: Thirdly, that David had more worthies than thoſe who are mentioned here; and as ſome of theſe were ſlain in the former part of his reign, as Aſahel was, ſo others ſucceeded them, and ſome were added to this number, as appears from 1 Chron. xi. where there is a greater number than is here expreſſed. For the author of that book reckons up all the chief commanders in the army; ſo that tho' they were not all heroes in themſelves, yet as they were great commanders over others, Ezra thought fit to mention them. But here in the book of Samuel, the Sacred Hiſtorian only enumerates thoſe who were eminent heroes in themſelves, and takes no notice of the chief commanders in the army who were not ſo.

Ver. 26. Helez the Paltite, Ira the ſon of Ikkeſh the Tekoite.] None of the memorable acts of theſe, or the following worthies being recorded, all that we can ſay of them is this; that when God intended to raiſe a king to a great height, as he did David, he excited the ſpirits of ſeveral great men to aſſiſt him. Thus he did with Alexander the Great, who had Clitus, Parmenio, Antigonus, Ptolemy, Seleucus, Craterus, and other brave men to accompany him in his enterprizes. But David had many more, in a much leſs kingdom.

This chapter concludes with declaring, that the number of theſe worthies was thirty-ſeven in all; but as no more than thirty-ſix are named, Joab is ſuppoſed by Abarbinel to be the other; for he was the head of them all.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 David tempted by Satan, forceth Joab to number the people. 5 The captains in nine months and twenty days bring the muſter of thirteen hundred thouſand fighting men. 10 David having three plagues propounded by Gad, repenteth, and chuſeth the three days peſtilence. 15 After the death of threeſcore and ten thouſand, David by repentance preventeth the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. 18 David, by Gads direction, purchaſeth Araunahs threſhing-floor, where having ſacrificed, the plague ſtayeth.

AND again the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he moved David againſt them, to ſay, Go number Iſrael and Judah.

2 For the king ſaid to Joab the captain of the hoſt, which was with him, Go now through all the tribes of Iſrael, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, and number ye the people, that I may know the number of the people.

3 And Joab ſaid unto the king, Now the LORD thy God add unto the people (how many ſoever they be) an hundred-fold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may ſee it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

4 Notwithſtanding, the kings word prevailed againſt Joab, and againſt the captains of the hoſt; and Joab and the captains of the hoſt went out from the preſence of the king, to number the people of Iſrael.

5 ¶ And they paſſed over Jordan, and pitched in Aroer, on the right ſide of the city that lieth in the midſt of the river of Gad, and toward Jazer.

6 Then they came to Gilead, and to the land of Tahtim-hodſhi; and they came to Dan-jaan, and about to Zidon,

7 And came to the ſtrong hold of Tyre, and to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites: and they went out to the ſouth of Judah, even to Beer-ſheba.

8 So when they had gone through all the land, they came to Jeruſalem at the end of nine months and twenty days.

9 And Joab gave up the ſum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Iſrael eight hundred thouſand valiant men that drew the ſword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thouſand men.

10 ¶ And Davids heart ſmote him, after that he had numbred the people: and David ſaid unto the LORD, I have ſinned greatly in that I have done: and now I beſeech thee, O LORD, take away the iniquity of thy ſervant; for I have done very fooliſhly.

11 For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet Gad, Davids ſeer, ſaying, 12 Go and ſay unto David, Thus ſaith the LORD, I offer thee three things; chooſe thee one of them, that I may do it unto thee.

13 So Gad came to David, and told him, and ſaid unto him, Shall ſeven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they purſue thee? or that there be three days peſtilence in thy land? now adviſe, and ſee what anſwer I ſhall return to him that ſent me.

14 And David ſaid unto Gad, I am in a great ſtrait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD (for his mercies are great) and let me not fall into the hand of man.

15 So the LORD ſent a peſtilence upon Iſrael, from the morning even to the time appointed: and there died of the people, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, ſeventy thouſand men.

16 And when the angel ſtretched out his hand upon Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, the LORD repented him of the evil, and ſaid to the angel that deſtroyed the people, It is enough: ſtay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD was by the threſhing-place of Araunah the Jebuſite.

17 And David ſpake unto the LORD when he ſaw the angel that ſmote the people, and ſaid, Lo, I have ſinned, and I have done wickedly: but theſe ſheep, what have they done? let thine hand, I pray thee, be againſt me, and againſt my fathers houſe.

18 ¶ And Gad came that day to David, and ſaid unto him, Go up, rear an altar unto the LORD, in the threſhing-floor of Araunah the Jebuſite.

19 And David, according to the ſaying of Gad, went up as the LORD commanded.

20 And Araunah looked, and ſaw the king and his ſervants coming on toward him: and Araunah went out and bowed himſelf before the king on his face upon the ground.

21 And Araunah ſaid, Wherefore is my lord the king come to his ſervant? And David ſaid, To buy the threſhing-floor of thee to build an altar unto the LORD, that the plague may be ſtayed from the people.

22 And Araunah ſaid unto David, Let my lord the king take and offer up what ſeemeth good unto him: behold, here be oxen for burnt-ſacrifice, and threſhing-inſtruments, and other inſtruments of the oxen for wood.

23 All theſe things did Araunah, as a king, give unto the king: and Araunah ſaid unto the king, The LORD thy God accept thee.

24 And the king ſaid unto Araunah, Nay; but I will ſurely buy it of thee at a price:

price: neither will I offer burnt-offerings unto the LORD my God, of that which doth coſt me nothing. So David bought the threſhing-floor, and the oxen, for fifty ſhekels of ſilver.

25 And David built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings: ſo the LORD was intreated for the land, and the plague was ſtayed from Iſrael.

Ver. 1. And again the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he moved David againſt them, to ſay, Go number Iſrael and Judah.] David had not long enjoyed the fruit of his victories, before he brought a moſt dreadful calamity upon his kingdom, by his unaccountable reſolution to have the people number'd. The Text before us imports, that the Iſraelites had provoked God to diſpleaſure againſt them, (which is no great wonder, that being generally the return they made him, whenever they were bleſſed with any happy interval of peace and proſperity) and that he moved David againſt them; or, as the author of the Chronicles repreſents it, ſuffered Satan to tempt him to this deed, 1 Chron. xxi. 1. not that the thing itſelf was forbidden; for, on the contrary, there was an expreſs permiſſion from Moſes for it, provided half a ſhekel was paid for every perſon ſo numbred, Exod. xxx. 12, 13. The reaſon therefore of God's being provoked at this action in David was, in all probability, becauſe he reſolved upon it from wrong motives, without any neceſſity, in a time of profound peace, after ſo many miraculous deliverances, with a ſeeming confidence in his own ſtrength, and contrary to his continual profeſſions of truſting in God alone.

Ver. 2. For the king ſaid to Joab the captain of the hoſt, which was with him, Go now through all the tribes of Iſrael, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba.] That is, from one end of the country to the other; for Dan was the utmoſt bound of it in the north, as Beer-ſheba was in the ſouth.

——And number ye the people.] Joab was to take proper officers with him, to aſſiſt him in this affair.

Ver. 3. And Joab ſaid unto the king, Now the Lord thy God add unto the people (how many ſoever they be) an hundred-fold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may ſee it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?] Joab, as wicked as he had been in other inſtances, endeavoured, tho' in vain, to diſſuade the king from the criminal reſolution he had formed. And it appears by the firſt book of Chronicles, chap. xxi. ver. 6. that he went about this work with ſuch an unwilling mind, that he prolonged the accompliſhment of it as much as he could, in hope the king would ſee his error, and revoke his fatal command; for Joab came back before he had numbred the tribes of Benjamin and Levi.

Ver. 5. And they paſſed over Jordan.] They went firſt to the eaſtern part of the country, and from thence proceeded by the northern coaſt to the weſt, and then to the ſouth.

——And pitched in Aroer.] This was a city in the tribe of Gad, ſituated on the northern bank of the brook Arnon, and at the extremity of the country which the Hebrews poſſeſſed beyond Jordan. Euſebius declares, that Aroer, in his time, was ſeated on a mountain. Reland thinks there was a city of this name near Rabbah of the Ammonites, otherwiſe called Philadelphia. The Hebrew word aroer ſignifies health; it is very poſſible therefore, that ſeveral places in the country may have been denominated from Aroer, underſtood in this ſignification.

——On the right ſide of the city that lieth in the midſt of the river of Gad, and toward Jazer.] We no where elſe read of any ſuch river, which in the margin is more properly tranſlated the valley of Gad. Jazer was a city in that tribe, and was ſeated at the foot of the mountains of Gilead, near the brook Jazer, which forms a rivulet or torrent, that falls into the Jordan.

Ver. 6. Then they came to Gilead, and to the land of Tahtim-hodſhi.] Gilead was a mountainous country, which lay eaſtward of the river Jordan, and ſeparated the lands of Ammon, Moab, Reuben, Gad, and Manaſſeh, from Arabia Deſerta. Gilead is often put for the whole country which lies beyond Jordan. Euſebius informs us, that mount Gilead extended from Libanus northward, as far as the land poſſeſſed by Sihon king of the Amorites, and which was given to the tribe of Reuben. This ridge of mountains therefore muſt have been above ſeventy leagues in length, from ſouth to north; and it comprehended the mountains of Seir and Baſan; and, perhaps, thoſe of Trachonitis, Auran, and Hermon. Jeremiah likewiſe ſeems to ſay, that Gilead is the beginning of Libanus, "Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Le-" banon," Jer. xxii. 6.

As theſe mountains are covered with trees that diſtil a precious gum, the Scripture frequently celebrates the balm of Gilead.

As to the land of Tahtim-hodſhi, the words in the Hebrew import (as is obſerved in the margin of our Bible) the Netherlands newly inhabited; and therefore by this name may probably be denoted the low country lying about the lake Semechonitis, which lake lay north of the lake of Genneſereth, between it and the head of Jordan, and had a large extent of marſhy ground about it. Now this marſhy tract might probably be improved by draining, and ſo render'd more fit for receiving both men and cattle; and therefore in a courſe of years might be better inhabited, and ſo come to have the name of Tahtim-hodſhi confer'd upon it.

——And they came to Dan-jaan.] This is no other than that which is moſt frequently denoted by the ſimple name of Dan, lying at the head of the Jordan; and it is thought to be here call'd Dan-jaan, from its neighbourhood to the woods of Libanus.

——And about to Zidon.] Not to the city of Zidon; for that was not ſubject to the Iſraelites, but to the coaſts about it.

Ver. 7. And came to the ſtrong hold of Tyre.] To the territory near it. Tyre was a famous city of Phœnicia, the particular deſcription of which ſhall be given in a more proper part of this Work.

——And to all the cities of the Hivites, and of the Canaanites.] Who lived in thoſe north-weſt parts of the country.

——And they went out to the ſouth of Judah, even to Beer-ſheba.] Joab, and the other officers, having taken an account of all the towns upon the ſea-coaſt, which was in the weſt, turned to the ſouth, into the tribe of Judah.

Beer-ſheba ſignifies the well of an oath, or the well of ſeven, becauſe here Abraham made an alliance with Abimelech king of Gerar, and gave him ſeven ewe-lambs, to ſerve as a monument of that covenant they had ſworn to. Dan was at the northern, and Beer-ſheba at the ſouthern extremity of the Holy Land.

Joab, and the officers who were aſſociated with him, having travelled through the land on either ſide Jordan, returned to Jeruſalem, at the end of nine months and twenty days, and delivered to the king the ſum of all the military men of valour, whom they had numbred, namely, of Iſrael eight hundred thouſand, and of Judah five hundred thouſand, ver. 8, 9. But before this time, David, having received ſome evident tokens of the Divine diſpleaſure, 1 Chron. xxvii. 24. and a fatal meſſage from the Lord being delivered to him the next morning by the prophet Gad, was ſo far from enjoying any ſatisfaction at the vaſt number of his martial ſubjects, that he was ſoon ſtruck with a lively ſenſe of his own folly, which broke out in expreſſions of the deepeſt remorſe, ver. 10.

Ver. 11. For when David was up in the morning, the word of the Lord came unto the prophet Gad, David's ſeer, ſaying.] Theſe words ſeem to import, that David was not ſeverely touch'd in conſcience, till the prophet came and told him, how highly he had offended God. This holy man is called David's ſeer, becauſe he was his domeſtic prophet, with whom it was cuſtomary for him to adviſe in all difficult conjunctures, and who kept a record of the memorable acts performed by David, 1 Sam. xxix. 29.

Ver. 12. Go, and ſay unto David, Thus ſaith the Lord, I offer thee three things, &c.] Now it had been a proper time, as Abarbinel obſerves, for David to have fallen down before the Lord, and deprecated his diſpleaſure, in theſe words, ver. 10. "I have ſinned greatly in what I "have done," &c. But he found the ſentence was paſſed upon him abſolutely, and therefore he humbly ſubmits to it.

Ver. 13. So Gad came to David, and told him, and ſaid unto him, Shall ſeven years of famine come unto thee in thy land?] In the firſt book of Chronicles, chap. xxi. ver. 12. only three years famine are propounded; ſo that it is likely the prophet means here ſeven years, including the three years famine, which had been inflicted upon the account of the Gibeonites; and likewiſe the next year, which could not be very fruitful, through ſcarceneſs of ſeed, the Philiſtine war, and, as Uſher conjectures, becauſe the fourth year being a jubilee, there was to be neither ſowing nor reaping, but for the poor.

——— Or wilt thou flee three months before thine enemies, while they purſue thee? or that there be three days peſtilence in thy land?] Theſe were the three ſevere judgments wherewith God uſually afflicted the Iſraelites for their ſins; but the Divine Majeſty was now ſo gracious as to give David his choice, which of them he would ſuffer.

Ver. 14. And David ſaid unto Gad, I am in a great ſtrait: let us fall now into the hand of the Lord, &c.] The humbled monarch declared it to be a hard choice, and ſeems to leave it to God, to ſend either famine or peſtilence (for both come from the hand of God;) and deſires only, that men might not be the inſtruments of his puniſhment: For, as they are very frequently cruel, ſo they make no diſtinction between good and bad, but deſtroy all alike. This is admirably expreſſed by the ſon of Sirach, Eccluſ. ii. 17, 18. "They that fear the Lord, will "prepare their hearts, and humble their ſouls in his ſight, "ſaying, We will fall into the hands of the Lord, and not "into the hands of men: for as his Majeſty is, ſo is his "mercy."

Ver. 15. So the Lord ſent a peſtilence upon Iſrael.] The ſymptoms of which were various, if we may believe Joſephus. For ſome, ſays that hiſtorian, died ſuddenly in intolerable pain; others waſted away, and left nothing to be buried but skin and bones, their bodies being conſumed by the diſeaſe; others were ſuddenly choaked, &c.

——— From the morning even to the time appointed.] There are thoſe who by the time appointed underſtand, to the end of three days, mentioned by Gad, as the time appointed by the Lord for the continuance of this plague. But this is quite contrary to what follows; namely, that God repented him of the evil, and commanded the deſtroying angel to ſtay his hand. The LXX therefore tranſlate it better, ἕως ὥρας ἀρίστου, till the time of dinner. Certain it is, that the Hebrew word moed ſignifies ſome part of that day when the plague began. But, the morning and evening are the moſt oppoſite parts of the day in Scripture; we therefore ſuppoſe, with Bochart, that the plague continued from morning to the evening. For moed properly ſignifies, an aſſembly; and therefore the time moed may be conſidered as the time when the people aſſembled together for evening prayer; namely, about the ninth hour of the day. According to this account, the peſtilence laſted no more than nine hours, or the eighth part of three days.

——— And there died of the people from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, ſeventy thouſand men.] If this dreadful peſtilence had raged for the ſpace of three days, and in every nine hours had ſwept away ſeventy thouſand perſons, above the third part of thoſe who had been numbered would have periſhed by this calamity. But, as Kimchi here obſerves, God was pleaſed, in his mercy, to contract the time.

Ver. 16. And when the angel ſtretched out his hand upon Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, the Lord repented him of the evil, and ſaid to the angel that deſtroyed the people, It is enough: ſtay now thine hand.] God did not change his mind, as ſome have raſhly imagined, but only revoked that which he decreed upon a certain condition; which was, that a peſtilence ſhould depopulate the country for the ſpace of three days, unleſs David and the people repented; but when God ſaw them affected with the humble impreſſions of remorſe, 1 Chron. xxi. 16. he ſhortened the time, and would not let the angel proceed above an eighth part of it.

——— And the angel of the Lord was by the threſhing-place of Araunah the Jebuſite.] He is alſo called Aranjah, in the Hebrew text of ver. 18. and Ornan, 1 Chron. xxi. 18. ſuch changes in the pronunciation of names being uſual in Scripture.

Araunah was probably an old inhabitant of Jeruſalem, whoſe habitation and threſhing-floor were upon mount Moriah, where Abraham prepared to offer up his ſon, and where the temple of Jeruſalem was afterward built. The Jews will have it, that Abel and Cain offered their ſacrifices here, and that it was likewiſe the place where Adam was created.

Ver. 17. And David ſpake unto the Lord when he ſaw the angel that ſmote the people.] It is added, 1 Chron. xxi. 16. that David ſaw the angel of the Lord ſtanding between the earth and the heaven, with a drawn ſword in his hand; and that both he, and the elders of Iſrael who were with him, fell on their faces; and that Araunah and his ſons, who were threſhing likewiſe, ſaw the angel, and went and hid themſelves, ver. 20. of that chapter. The ſeveral parts of this account therefore being compared together, the whole will by no means admit of an allegorical ſenſe, but ought to be conſidered as a real fact.

——And ſaid, Lo, I have ſinned, and I have done wickedly: but theſe ſheep, what have they done?] Like a good man he reflected only on his own ſin, in numbering the people, but did not think of theirs in depoſing him ſo lately, and ſetting up Abſalom; which Theodoret, Procopius Gazæus, and ſome others, think was the crime for which they were puniſhed.

—— Let thy hand, I pray thee, be againſt me, and againſt my father's houſe.] That is, not only againſt him, but againſt his kindred alſo, who did not diſſuade him from the vanity of numbering the people, but perhaps encourag'd him in it.

Ver. 18. And Gad came that day to David, and ſaid unto him, Go up, rear an altar unto the Lord, in the threſhing-floor of Araunah the Jebuſite.] While David was offering up his mournful ſupplication, the prophet came to him, and commanded him, from God, to erect an altar on that ſpot of ground, where he had ſeen the deſtroying angel ſtand. David immediately haſted toward the threſhing-floor, and Araunah came forward, to give him a reſpectful meeting, ver. 20. and as ſoon as he underſtood the king's purpoſe of buying the threſhing-floor of him, he made him a generous offer, not only of that, but likewiſe of the threſhing oxen, together with the carts, and all the wooden inſtruments that were upon it, ver. 22. The Sacred Text adds, "All theſe things did Araunah, as a "king, give unto the king," ver. 23. The words in the Hebrew are, "Theſe things gave Araunah the king unto "the king." From whence ſome infer, that before the taking of Jeruſalem, he was the king of the Jebuſites, or a man of the greateſt authority among them, or was deſcended from the blood royal of the Jebuſites, as Dr. Lightfoot expreſſes it. But neither the Greek, nor the Syriac, nor the Arabic copies, have the word king. Nor was it in many of the Vulgate, till Sixtus's correction; nor in the Chaldee paraphraſe, in the time of Kimchi, who cites it thus; "Araunah gave to the king what the king asked "of him." To this we may add, with Bochart, that Araunah, or Ornan, being mentioned fourteen times in the Holy Books, it is ſurpriſing he ſhould be ſtiled a king in no place but this. But it is likely he was a very rich man, as Joſephus reports, whom David ſpared when he took the fort of Zion; either becauſe he was a lover of the Iſraelites, or had rendered ſome good office to the king.

David thanked Araunah for his generous offer, but gave him to underſtand, that it was not fit for the king of Iſrael to offer ſacrifices to God at other people's coſt, and deſired him to ſet a price upon his threſhing-floor. Araunah therefore ſold this, and all that was upon it, to the king, for fifty ſhekels of ſilver, ver. 24.

We read in 1 Chron. xxi. 25. according to our tranſlation, that David gave him ſix hundred ſhekels of gold by weight, which ſeems to claſh ſtrangely with the account before us in this book of Samuel. Some Rabbies have fancied, that every tribe paid fifty ſhekels of ſilver, which made the ſum total amount to ſix hundred. But were that that true, as it is not, becauſe David reſolved to be at all the expence himſelf, ſix hundred ſhekels of ſilver would make but the twelfth part of ſix hundred ſhekels of gold, for that is the proportion which thoſe metals bore to one another. * Some learned men, obſerving that the Hebrew words keſſeph, and ſhekel, often ſignify money and value in general, have concluded, that the ſum mentioned in the 24th verſe of this chapter was fifty ſhekels of gold; and that mentioned in the Chronicles, ſix hundred ſhekels of ſilver, which amounted in value to fifty ſhekels of gold. So that either ſum anſwers to five hundred forty ſeven pounds ſterling. But we think they remove the difficulty beſt, who ſuppoſe, that the fifty ſhekels of ſilver were paid only for the floor, oxen, and wooden inſtruments; and the ſix hundred ſhekels of gold, for all the adjacent grounds, which David had choſen to build the temple upon.

Ver. 25. And David built there an altar unto the Lord, and offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings.] The burnt-offerings were prayers to God, that he would remove the peſtilence; and the peace-offerings were acknowledgments of the goodneſs of God, who had already given David hopes of this mercy.

——— So the Lord was intreated for the land, &c.] As evidently appeared by the miraculous fire which deſcended from heaven, and conſumed the ſacrifices, 1 Chron. xxi. 26. From hence David concluded, that God would be more placable in this place than in any other, and therefore determined to have the temple erected there.

The END of the Second Book of SAMUEL.

Critical

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

FIRST BOOK of the KINGS,

Commonly called the THIRD BOOK of the KINGS.

The ARGUMENT.

We have four books, in our Bible, which are called the Books of Kings. Anciently there were but two in the Hebrew Bible, the firſt whereof was called Samuel, and the other Kings, or Kingdoms. At preſent, in the Hebrew copies, as well as in the Greek and Latin, there are four books, the two firſt whereof in the Hebrew are call'd Samuel, and the two laſt, Kings. The Greeks cite them all four under the name of the Books of Kingdoms, and the Latins under that of the Books of Kings.

The firſt Book of the Kings, on which we are now entring, compriſes the hiſtory of an hundred and twenty-ſix years; from the anointing of Solomon, and his admiſſion as a partner with David in the kingdom, to the death of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah. Here we have an account of Adonijah's aiming at the crown, and thereby giving Nathan and Bathſheba an opportunity of perſuading David to nominate his ſucceſſor, and appoint Solomon, his aſſociate on the throne. Here we read of the deaths of David, Adonijah, Joab, and Shimei: Of the building and completion of the temple by Solomon: Of this prince's riches, wiſdom, and reputation; his fatal ſeduction into idolatry, and his death: Of his ſon Rehoboam's alienating the minds of the Iſraelites by his imprudent intractability, which occaſioned the revolt of the ten tribes, and the choice of Jeroboam for their king: Of Rehoboam's ſucceſſors, Abijam, Aſa, and Jehoſhaphat: Of Jeroboam's ſucceſſors, Nadab, Baaſha, Elah, Zimri, Omri, Tibni, Ahab, and Ahaziah.

Difficulties have been ſtarted, with relation to this, and the following Book of Kings, and the time when they were compiled. Some have been of opinion, that David, Solomon, and Hezekiah, wrote the hiſtory of their own reigns. Others have aſſerted, that this province was executed by the prophets who lived under the government of thoſe monarchs, in Iſrael and Judah, namely, Iſaiah, Jeremiah, Gad, and Nathan. It is certain, that ſeveral of the prophets have written the lives of thoſe kings, who reigned in their times; and the names and writings of theſe prophets are mentioned in ſeveral places of the Books of Kings and Chronicles. The memoirs and annals likewiſe of the kings of Judah and Iſrael are cited almoſt every moment, and theſe comprehended the particulars of thoſe princes actions, of which the Sacred Books have tranſmitted to us ſummaries only, and abridgments.

It muſt be confeſſed therefore, that there are two claſſes of writers who have been concerned in compoſing the Books of Kings, namely, thoſe original, primitive, and cotemporary authors, who wrote the annals, journals, and memoirs of what paſſed in their times; from whence the matter and ſubſtance of our Sacred Hiſtory has been formed; and from whence the authors who came afterward have collected what they have left us. The ancient and original memoirs have not deſcended down to us, but were certainly tainly in the hands of thoſe ſacred penmen, whoſe writings are in our poſſeſſion, ſince they cite and refer to them.

It is generally believed, that Ezra is the author of this and the following Book of Kings, and likewiſe of the Chronicles, as we have them at preſent; and the proofs on which this opinion is grounded are theſe: Firſt, The author, who digeſted theſe writings into order, lived during the Babyloniſh captivity, 2 Kings, chap. xxv. Secondly, He declares, in the xviith chapter of the ſecond Book of Kings, that in his time the ten tribes were captives in Aſſyria, whither they had been carried as a puniſhment for their ſins. Thirdly, He refers almoſt every-where to ancient memoirs which he had before him. Fourthly, The author ſeems to have been a prieſt, and very much attached to the houſe of David. Now all theſe marks ſuit very well with Ezra, a learned and very curious prieſt, who lived during the Babyloniſh captivity, and after it; and might have collected an infinite number of monuments, which we are deprived of by time, and the perſecutions the Jews have ſuffer'd.

There are indeed ſome particulars in this Book, which are inconſiſtent with the time of Ezra. For inſtance, the author declares, that in his time the ark of the covenant was ſtill in the temple, 1 Kings viii. 8. and that the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael were ſtill ſubſiſting, chap. xii. 19. He likewiſe mentions the months Zif, and Bul, chap. vi. 1. and 38. names which in the time of Ezra were no longer in uſe. Laſtly, He expreſſes himſelf throughout, as a cotemporary, and as an author would have done, who had been a witneſs of what he wrote. But theſe ſeeming difficulties may be eaſily reconciled; for Ezra frequently tranſcribed word for word the memoirs he had in his poſſeſſion, and copied them without giving himſelf the trouble to reconcile them. This is a proof of his fidelity and honeſty. In other places he inſerts ſome reflections, or illuſtrations, which ariſe naturally from his ſubject. This ſhews, that he was maſter of the matter which he had in hand, and that, being inſpired by God, he was not afraid of intermixing his own words with thoſe of the prophets, whoſe writings lay before him.

CHAP. I.

1 Abiſhag cheriſheth David in his extreme age. 5 Adonijah, Davids darling, uſurpeth the kingdom. 11 By the counſel of Nathan, 15 Bathſheba moveth the king, 22 and Nathan ſecondeth her. 28 David reneweth his oath to Bathſheba. 32 Solomon, by Davids appointment, being anointed king by Zadok and Nathan, the people triumph. 41 Jonathan, bringing theſe news, Adonijahs gueſts flee. 50 Adonijah flying to the horns of the altar, upon his good behaviour is diſmiſſed by Solomon.

NOW king David was old, and ſtricken in years; and they covered him with clothes, but he gat no heat.

2 Wherefore his ſervants ſaid unto him, Let there be ſought for my lord the king a young virgin, and let her ſtand before the king, and let her cheriſh him, and let her lie in thy boſom, that my lord the king may get heat.

3 So they ſought for a fair damſel throughout all the coaſts of Iſrael, and found Abiſhag a Shunammite, and brought her to the king.

4 And the damſel was very fair, and cheriſhed the king, and miniſtred to him: but the king knew her not.

5 ¶ Then Adonijah the ſon of Haggith exalted himſelf, ſaying, I will be king: and he prepared him chariots and horſemen, and fifty men to run before him.

6 And his father had not diſpleaſed him at any time, in ſaying, Why haſt thou done ſo? and he alſo was a very goodly man; and his mother bare him after Abſalom.

7 And he conferred with Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, and with Abiathar the prieſt: and they following Adonijah, helped him.

8 But Zadok the prieſt, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and Nathan the prophet, and Shimei, and Rei, and the mighty men which belonged to David were not with Adonijah.

9 And Adonijah ſlew ſheep and oxen and fat cattle, by the ſtone of Zoheleth, which is by En-rogel, and called all his brethren the kings ſons, and all the men of Judah the kings ſervants.

10 But Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother he called not.

11 ¶ Wherefore Nathan ſpake unto Bathſheba the mother of Solomon, ſaying, Haſt thou not heard that Adonijah the ſon of Haggith doth reign, and David our lord knoweth it not?

12 Now therefore come, let me, I pray thee, give thee counſel, that thou mayſt ſave thine own life, and the life of thy ſon Solomon.

13 Go, and get thee in unto king David, and ſay unto him, Didſt not thou, my lord, O king, ſwear unto thine handmaid, ſaying, Aſſuredly Solomon thy ſon ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne? why then doth Adonijah reign?

14 Behold, while thou yet talkeſt there with the king, I will alſo come in after thee, and confirm thy words.

15 ¶ And Bathſheba went in unto the king, into the chamber: and the king was very old; and Abiſhag the Shunammite miniſtred unto the king.

16 And Bathſheba bowed, and did obeiſance unto the king: and the king ſaid, What wouldſt thou?

17 And ſhe ſaid unto him, My lord, thou ſwareſt by the LORD thy God unto thine handmaid, ſaying, Aſſuredly Solomon thy ſon ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne:

18 And now behold, Adonijah reigneth; and now, my lord the king, thou knoweſt it not.

19 And he hath ſlain oxen, and fat cattle, and ſheep in abundance, and hath called all the ſons of the king, and Abiathar the prieſt, and Joab the captain of the hoſt: but Solomon thy ſervant hath he not called.

20 And thou, my lord, O king, the eyes of all Iſrael are upon thee, that thou ſhouldſt tell them who ſhall ſit on the throne of my lord the king after him.

21 Otherwiſe it ſhall come to paſs, when my lord the king ſhall ſleep with his fathers, that I and my ſon Solomon ſhall be counted offenders.

22 ¶ And lo, while ſhe yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet alſo came in.

23 And they told the king, ſaying, Behold, Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, he bowed himſelf before the king with his face to the ground.

24 And Nathan ſaid, My lord, O king, haſt thou ſaid, Adonijah ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne?

25 For he is gone down this day, and hath ſlain oxen, and fat cattle, and ſheep in abundance, and hath called all the kings ſons, and the captains of the hoſt, and Abiathar the prieſt; and behold, they eat and drink before him, and ſay, God ſave king Adonijah.

26 But me, even me thy ſervant, and Zadok the prieſt, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and thy ſervant Solomon hath he not called.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, and thou haſt not ſhewed it unto thy ſervant, who ſhould ſit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

28 ¶ Then king David anſwered and ſaid, Call me Bathſheba: and ſhe came into the kings preſence, and ſtood before the king.

29 And the king ſware, and ſaid, As the LORD liveth that hath redeemed my ſoul out of all diſtreſs,

30 Even as I ſware unto thee by the LORD God of Iſrael, ſaying, Aſſuredly Solomon thy ſon ſhall reign after me, and he ſhall ſit upon my throne in my ſtead; even ſo will I certainly do this day.

31 Then Bathſheba bowed with her face to the earth, and did reverence to the king, and ſaid, Let my lord king David live for ever.

32 ¶ And king David ſaid, Call me Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king alſo ſaid unto them, Take with you the ſervants of your lord, and cauſe Solomon my ſon to ride upon mine own mule, and bring him down to Gihon.

34 And let Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, anoint him there king over Iſrael: and blow ye with the trumpet, and ſay, God ſave king Solomon.

35 Then ye ſhall come up after him, that he may come and ſit upon my throne; for he ſhall be king in my ſtead: and I have appointed him to be ruler over Iſrael, and over Judah.

36 And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada anſwered the king, and ſaid, Amen: the LORD God of my lord the king ſay ſo too.

37 As the LORD hath been with my lord the king, even ſo be he with Solomon, and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David.

38 So

38 So Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, the ſon of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and cauſed Solomon to ride upon king Davids mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the prieſt took an horn of oil out of the tabernacle, and anointed Solomon: and they blew the trumpet, and all the people ſaid, God ſave king Solomon.

40 And all the people came up after him, and the people piped with pipes, and rejoiced with great joy, ſo that the earth rent with the ſound of them.

41 ¶ And Adonijah and all the gueſts that were with him, heard it, as they had made an end of eating: and when Joab heard the ſound of the trumpet, he ſaid, Wherefore is this noiſe of the city, being in an uproar?

42 And while he yet ſpake, behold, Jonathan the ſon of Abiathar the prieſt came, and Adonijah ſaid unto him, Come in, for thou art a valiant man, and bringeſt good tidings.

43 And Jonathan anſwered and ſaid to Adonijah, Verily our lord king David hath made Solomon king.

44 And the king hath ſent with him Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have cauſed him to ride upon the kings mule.

45 And Zadok the prieſt, and Nathan the prophet, have anointed him king in Gihon: and they are come up from thence rejoicing, ſo that the city rang again: this is the noiſe that ye have heard.

46 And alſo Solomon ſitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

47 And moreover, the kings ſervants came to bleſs our lord king David, ſaying, God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne: and the king bowed himſelf upon the bed.

48 And alſo thus ſaid the king, Bleſſed be the LORD God of Iſrael, which hath given one to ſit on my throne this day, mine eyes even ſeeing it.

49 And all the gueſts that were with Adonijah, were afraid, and roſe up, and went every man his way.

50 ¶ And Adonijah feared, becauſe of Solomon, and aroſe, and went, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

51 And it was told Solomon, ſaying, Behold, Adonijah feareth king Solomon: for lo, he hath caught hold on the horns of the altar, ſaying, Let king Solomon ſwear unto me to-day, that he will not ſlay his ſervant with the ſword.

52 And Solomon ſaid, If he will ſhew himſelf a worthy man, there ſhall not an hair of him fall to the earth: but if wickedneſs ſhall be found in him, he ſhall die.

53 So king Solomon ſent, and they brought him down from the altar; and he came and bowed himſelf to king Solomon: and Solomon ſaid unto him, Go to thine houſe.

Ver. 1. Now king David was old, and ſtricken in years, &c.] David was now about ſeventy years of age, as we learn from 2 Sam. v. 4, 5. and had ſo exhauſted his ſtrength and natural heat, by a long ſeries of wars, fatigues, and misfortunes, that no clothes could keep him warm. Thoſe of his ſervants therefore, who, in all probability, were his phyſicians, found it neceſſary to ſeek him a young and beautiful virgin, to cheriſh him, and lie in his boſom, ver. 2. This declining ſtate, to which he was reduced, made Adonijah, who was now his eldeſt ſon, being next in birth to Abſalom, begin to think himſelf ſure of the regal dignity, ver. 5. He accordingly prepared a ſumptuous equipage of chariots, and guards, and running footmen, juſt as Abſalom had done, when he began to conſpire againſt his father, 2 Sam. xv. 1.

Ver. 6. And his father had not diſpleaſed him at any time, in ſaying, Why haſt thou done ſo?] David's extraordinary indulgence to his children was one of his great faults: For he was ſo fond of them, that he ſeems to have overlook'd their errors, and never to have reproved them for what they did amiſs.

——— And he alſo was a very goodly man.] And ſo the more likely to draw the people after him. For a noble aſpect was always a conſiderable qualification for the regal authority, as appears by the hiſtory of Saul, David, and Abſalom.

Ver. 7. And he conferred with Joab the ſon of Zeruiah, and with Abiathar the prieſt: and they following Adonijah, helped him.] Adonijah was not inſenſible that his father intended Solomon for his ſucceſſor: He therefore, in order to fruſtrate that deſign, made what haſte he could to get himſelf proclaimed; and with that view leagued himſelf with Joab and Abiathar, whom perhaps he knew were two diſcontented perſons; the former, upon the account of David's putting Amaſa in his place; and the other, becauſe he ſaw Zadok in greater favour than himſelf.

Ver. 8. But Zadok the prieſt, and Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and Nathan the prophet, and Shimei, and Rei, and the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah.] The firſt three of theſe were great favourites of David, and therefore Adonijah knew they would not be for his turn. The two next were probably perſons of note, who were perfectly in the intereſt of David. And Shimei may poſſibly have been the perſon whom Solomon afterward advanced to a great office, chap. iv. 18. The mighty men, here mentioned, are thoſe who are named in 2 Sam. xxiii. And as they had ſerved under David ſo long, and performed ſuch memorable actions in his reign, and under his conduct, Adonijah had no hope of drawing them into his party.

Ver. 9. And Adonijah ſlew ſheep and oxen, and fat cattle, by the ſtone of Zoheleth, which is by En-rogel.] The Hebrew word zohel ſignifies a ſlow motion; from whence this ſtone had its name. The Rabbins tell us, that it ſerved as an exerciſe to the young men, who tried their ſtrength by rolling, or lifting it. Others think it was uſeful to the fullers, to beat their clothes upon, after they had waſhed them in the well called Rogel.

—And

——And called all his brethren the king's ſons.] Whoſe names are mentioned, 2 Sam. iii. 4, 5. and more largely in 1 Chron. iii. 4, 5, &c.

——— And all the men of Judah the king's ſervants.] Except thoſe before-mentioned, ver. 8. This ſeems to have been a fœderal feaſt, at which thoſe who were preſent took an oath of allegiance to Adonijah.

Ver. 10. But Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother he called not.] This naturally cauſed his deſign to be ſuſpected by them: Nathan, therefore, went and adviſed Bathſheba to go and inform the king of Adonijah's proceeding, and to remind him of his promiſe in favour of her ſon Solomon, ver. 13. Bathſheba immediately complied with the prophet's directions, and, while ſhe was ſtill ſpeaking to the king, Nathan came in, as it had been previouſly agreed, and gave David a particular account of Adonijah's feaſt, together with the true intention of it, and the company who were preſent at it; and then deſired to know whether all this was tranſacted by the king's conſent, ver. 15, &c. to 27, incluſive. David then ordered Bathſheba to be ſent for, ſhe having retired, upon Nathan's entrance into the royal apartment; and he then renewed his aſſurance to her, in the moſt ſolemn manner, that none but Solomon ſhould ſucceed him on the throne, ver. 28, 29, 30. The king then ordered Solomon to be ſet upon his mule, and to be carried to Gihon, accompanied with the royal guards, and alſo with Zadok the prieſt, Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, one of David's worthies. Zadok and Nathan were then to anoint Solomon king; after which he was to be brought back, and ſeated upon the royal throne, and there proclaimed David's ſucceſſor, by the ſound of the trumpet, ver. 32, 33, 34.

Gihon, where the ſolemnity of Solomon's unction was to be performed, in conformity to the orders of David, was a fountain on the weſt ſide of Jeruſalem; and it divided it ſelf, as ſome ſay, into two ſtreams, which made as many pools; namely, that of Siloam, and that of Solomon, mentioned by Joſephus, (De Bello Judaico, lib. 6. cap. 38.) But Kimchi, and Abarbinel alſo, take them only for different names of one and the ſame rivulet; which, according to the Targum, was called Gihon, and alſo Siloam. David ſeems to have made choice of this fountain for anointing Solomon, in oppoſition to his other ſon Adonijah, who, at the ſame time, was ſetting up for king near the fountain of Rogel, on another ſide of Jeruſalem.

The king's commands were executed with ſuch ſpeed, that Adonijah and his company had not the leaſt knowledge of what had been tranſacted, till they were alarmed with the ſound of the trumpet, and the univerſal ſhouts of the people, who cried, God ſave king Solomon, ver. 38, 39, 40, 41.

Jonathan, the ſon of Abiathar, came ſoon after to Adonijah and his company, and gave them an account of the whole ceremony; aſſuring them, that it was all performed by the expreſs order of the king, who had teſtified an uncommon joy, for raiſing his favourite ſon upon his throne, before he left the world; whilſt the air was filled with the acclamations of all the people. This unexpected intelligence ſtruck them with ſuch a conſternation, that they fled with the utmoſt ſpeed; and Adonijah, ſeeing himſelf forſaken, and expoſed to the reſentment of David and Solomon, went and took ſanctuary at the horns of the altar; that being a privileged place, not by the appointment of the law, but by the cuſtom of all nations. It is a queſtion to what altar he fled, whether to that at the tabernacle in Gibeon, or to that which had been lately erected on the threſhing-floor of Araunah. Some think, he fled to this laſt, which was neareſt; and it is expreſly ſaid of Joab, in the next chapter, ver. 29. that he fled to the tabernacle of the Lord, which is not ſaid here of Adonijah.

Solomon being informed of Adonijah's retreat to the altar, ſent him word, that if he behaved himſelf for the future like an honeſt man, not a hair of his head ſhould be hurt; but cauſed him to be aſſured at the ſame time, that his next diſloyal attempt ſhould certainly be puniſhed with death. This meſſage brought Adonijah upon his knees to the new king; after which he was order'd to retire to his own houſe, there to lead a private life, and not appear in public with ſuch an equipage as he had formerly provided, in order to make it ſubſervient to his ambition.

CHAP. II.

1 David having given a charge to Solomon, 3 of religiouſneſs, 5 of Joab, 7 of Barzillai, 8 of Shimei, 10 dieth. 12 Solomon ſucceedeth. 13 Adonijah, moving Bathſheba to ſue unto Solomon for Abiſhag, is put to death. 26 Abiathar having his life given him, is deprived of the prieſthood. 28 Joab fleeing to the horns of the altar, is there ſlain. 35 Benaiah is put in Joabs room, and Zadok in Abiathars. 36 Shimei confined to Jeruſalem, by occaſion of going thence to Gath, is put to death.

NOW the days of David drew nigh that he ſhould die; and he charged Solomon his ſon, ſaying,

2 I go the way of all the earth: be thou ſtrong therefore, and ſhew thyſelf a man.

3 And keep the charge of the LORD thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his ſtatutes and his commandments and his judgments and his teſtimonies, as it is written in the law of Moſes, that thou mayſt proſper in all that thou doſt, and whitherſoever thou turneſt thyſelf:

4 That the LORD may continue his word, which he ſpake concerning me, ſaying, If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth, with all their heart, and with all their ſoul, there ſhall not fail thee (ſaid he) a man on the throne of Iſrael.

5 Moreover, thou knoweſt alſo what Joab the ſon of Zeruiah did to me, and what he did to the two captains of the hoſts of Iſrael, unto Abner the ſon of Ner, and unto Amaſa the ſon of Jether, whom he ſlew, and ſhed the blood of war in peace, and put the blood of war upon his girdle that was about his loins, and in his ſhoes that were on his feet.

6 Do therefore according to thy wiſdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.

7 But ſhew kindneſs unto the ſons of Barzillai the Gileadite, and let them be of thoſe that eat at thy table: for ſo they came to me when I fled becauſe of Abſalom thy brother.

8 And behold, thou haſt with thee Shimei the ſon of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which curſed me with a grievous curſe, in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but he came down to meet me at Jordan, and I ſware to him by the LORD, ſaying, I will not put thee to death with the ſword.

9 Now therefore hold him not guiltleſs: for thou art a wiſe man, and knoweſt what thou oughtſt to do unto him; but but his hoar head bring thou down to the grave with blood.

10 So David ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David.

11 And the days that David reigned over Iſrael, were forty years: ſeven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jeruſalem.

12 ¶ Then ſat Solomon upon the throne of David his father, and his kingdom was eſtabliſhed greatly.

13 ¶ And Adonijah the ſon of Haggith came to Bathſheba the mother of Solomon, and ſhe ſaid, Comeſt thou peaceably? And he ſaid, Peaceably.

14 He ſaid moreover, I have ſomewhat to ſay unto thee. And ſhe ſaid, Say on.

15 And he ſaid, Thou knoweſt that the kingdom was mine, and that all Iſrael ſet their faces on me, that I ſhould reign: howbeit the kingdom is turned about, and is become my brothers: for it was his from the LORD.

16 And now I ask one petition of thee, deny me not. And ſhe ſaid unto him, Say on.

17 And he ſaid, Speak, I pray thee, unto Solomon the king (for he will not ſay thee nay) that he give me Abiſhag the Shunammite to wife.

18 And Bathſheba ſaid, Well, I will ſpeak for thee unto the king.

19 ¶ Bathſheba therefore went unto king Solomon, to ſpeak unto him for Adonijah; and the king roſe up to meet her, and bowed himſelf unto her, and ſat down on his throne, and cauſed a ſeat to be ſet for the kings mother; and ſhe ſat on his right hand.

20 Then ſhe ſaid, I deſire one ſmall petition of thee, I pray thee ſay me not nay. And the king ſaid unto her, Ask on, my mother, for I will not ſay thee nay.

21 And ſhe ſaid, Let Abiſhag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

22 And king Solomon anſwered and ſaid unto his mother, And why doſt thou ask Abiſhag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him the kingdom alſo; (for he is mine elder brother) even for him, and for Abiathar the prieſt, and for Joab the ſon of Zeruiah.

23 Then king Solomon ſware by the LORD, ſaying, God do ſo to me, and more alſo, if Adonijah have not ſpoken this word againſt his own life.

24 Now therefore, as the LORD liveth, which hath eſtabliſhed me, and ſet me on the throne of David my father, and who hath made me an houſe, as he promiſed, Adonijah ſhall be put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon ſent by the hand of Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, and he fell upon him that he died.

26 ¶ And unto Abiathar the prieſt ſaid the king, Get thee to Anathoth, unto thine own fields, for thou art worthy of death: but I will not at this time put thee to death, becauſe thou bareſt the ark of the Lord GOD before David my father, and becauſe thou haſt been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

27 So Solomon thruſt out Abiathar from being prieſt unto the LORD; that he might fulfil the word of the LORD, which he ſpake concerning the houſe of Eli in Shiloh.

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab (for Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Abſalom) and Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and caught hold on the horns of the altar.

29 And it was told king Solomon that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and behold, he is by the altar: then Solomon ſent Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, ſaying, Go fall upon him.

30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the LORD, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the king, Come forth. And he ſaid, Nay, but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, ſaying, Thus ſaid Joab, and thus he anſwered me.

31 And the king ſaid unto him, Do as he hath ſaid, and fall upon him, and bury him; that thou mayſt take away the innocent blood which Joab ſhed, from me, and from the houſe of my father.

32 And the LORD ſhall return his blood upon his own head, who fell upon two men more righteous and better than he, and ſlew them with the ſword, my father David not knowing thereof, to wit, Abner the ſon of Ner, captain of the hoſt of Iſrael, and Amaſa the ſon of Jether, captain of the hoſt of Judah.

33 Their blood ſhall therefore return upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his ſeed for ever: but upon David, vid, and upon his ſeed, and upon his houſe, and upon his throne ſhall there be peace for ever from the LORD.

34 So Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and ſlew him; and he was buried in his own houſe in the wilderneſs.

35 ¶ And the king put Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada in his room, over the hoſt; and Zadok the prieſt did the king put in the room of Abiathar.

36 ¶ And the king ſent and called for Shimei, and ſaid unto him, Build thee an houſe in Jeruſalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

37 For it ſhall be, that on the day thou goeſt out, and paſſeſt over the brook Kidron, thou ſhalt know for certain, that thou ſhalt ſurely die: thy blood ſhall be upon thine own head.

38 And Shimei ſaid unto the king, The ſaying is good: as my lord the king hath ſaid, ſo will thy ſervant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jeruſalem many days.

39 And it came to paſs at the end of three years, that two of the ſervants of Shimei ran away unto Achiſh ſon of Maachah king of Gath: and they told Shimei, ſaying, Behold, thy ſervants be in Gath.

40 And Shimei aroſe, and ſaddled his aſs, and went to Gath to Achiſh to ſeek his ſervants: and Shimei went, and brought his ſervants from Gath.

41 And it was told Solomon that Shimei had gone from Jeruſalem to Gath, and was come again.

42 And the king ſent and called for Shimei, and ſaid unto him, Did I not make thee to ſware by the LORD, and proteſted unto thee, ſaying, Know for a certain, that on the day thou goeſt out, and walkeſt abroad any whither, that thou ſhalt ſurely die? and thou ſaidſt unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why then haſt thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and the commandment that I have charged thee with?

44 The king ſaid moreover to Shimei, Thou knoweſt all the wickedneſs which thine heart is privy to, that thou didſt to David my father: therefore the LORD ſhall return thy wickedneſs upon thine own head;

45 And king Solomon ſhall be bleſſed, and the throne of David ſhall be eſtabliſhed before the LORD for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada, which went out and fell upon him, that he died: and the kingdom was eſtabliſhed in the hand of Solomon.

Ver. 1. Now the days of David drew nigh, that he ſhould die.] And he himſelf was ſenſible that his end was approaching.

——And he charged Solomon his ſon, ſaying.] After the example of Abraham, the father of the faithful, Gen. xviii. 19.

Ver. 2. I go the way of all the earth.] I am in the laſt period of my life, and therefore unable to manage the reins of government any longer.

——Be thou ſtrong therefore, and ſhew thyſelf a man.] It requires great ſtrength and fortitude of mind, to rule a people agreeably to the law of God, I therefore recommend it to thee, to conduct thyſelf with manly wiſdom, courage, and conſtancy, tho' as yet thou art but young in years.

Ver. 3. And keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his ſtatutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his teſtimonies.] Under theſe four words are comprehended all the laws of Moſes: Statutes being ſuch conſtitutions as had not their foundation merely in reaſon, but in the will and pleaſure of God; as not to ſow two ſeeds of different kinds together, &c. Commandments were moral duties, which had a manifeſt reaſon; as not to ſteal, &c. Judgments were the laws belonging to civil government, in things between one man and another; ſuch as are mentioned, Exod. xxi. and in the following chapters. And, Teſtimonies were ſuch laws as preſerved the remembrance of ſome great events, and teſtified the loving-kindneſs of the Lord; as the ſabbath, the paſſover, and all the reſt of the feaſts.

——As it is written in the law of Moſes.] Which the Jewiſh kings were bound not only to read, but to write a copy of it with their own hands, that they might learn to fear the Lord, &c. Deut. xvii. 18, 19.

——That thou mayſt proſper in all that thou doſt, and whitherſoever thou turneſt thyſelf.] Or, "that thou "mayſt do wiſely," &c. as it is in the margin. For there is no policy like true religion and piety.

Ver. 4. That the Lord may continue his word which he ſpake concerning me, &c.] In order to induce Solomon to keep the charge of the Lord, David repreſents to him, that all the gracious promiſes of God, to perpetuate the kingdom in his family, were only conditional, and entirely depended on their conformity to his laws; ſo that they muſt expect their proſperity to riſe and fall in proportion to their obedience.

Ver. 5. Moreover thou knoweſt alſo what Joab, the ſon of Zeruiah, did to me.] David, after he had given his ſon this general charge, directed him to perform ſome particular acts of juſtice and kindneſs. And firſt of all he bids him remember, how Joab had uſed him. How inſolently, for inſtance, he had treated him in his great affliction, and threatned him with a new rebellion, 2 Sam. xix. 7. and how lately he had ſet up Adonijah to reign, while he was yet alive.

——And what he did to the two captains of the hoſts of Iſrael, unto Abner the ſon of Ner, and unto Amaſa the ſon of Jether, whom he ſlew.] For this was a great diſhonour to David, who had given Abner ſafe conduct, and paſſed his word to Amaſa, that he ſhould be commander in chief of all his forces: And therefore he might properly ſay, it was done to himſelf. But it is a very idle conceit of the Jews, in Jalkut, and in other books; which refer theſe words, what he did to me, to his ſhewing the letter, which David wrote to him concerning Uriah, to the great commanders of the army, and thereby expoſing the king, as a murderer of one of his beſt ſubjects.

——And ſhed the blood of war in peace, and put the blood of war upon his girdle that was about his loins, and in his ſhoes that were on his feet.] It was an high aggravation of his crime, that he not only ſhed that blood in peace, (ſpeaking to Abner and Amaſa, in a friendly manner, when he murder'd them) but likewiſe appeared with their their blood upon his belt, and in his ſhoes, as if he thought their aſſaſſination a glory to him.

Ver. 6. Do therefore according to thy wiſdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave in peace.] I need not inſtruct thee how to proceed: thou knoweſt but too well that Joab has forfeited his life, and on how many accounts he is unworthy of it.

David had not remitted the former crimes of this general, (nor could he by the law) and he only deferred the puniſhment of a man who was very powerful, and likewiſe very ſerviceable in his way. Some inquire, how Solomon, who was then but a youth, could cut off Joab, ſince David, when he flouriſhed moſt, durſt not do it? But this ſeeming difficulty may eaſily be ſolved, if it be conſider'd that it now was a time of peace and tranquility, when Joab was leſs neceſſary; and the reputation and power of Solomon was continually increaſing, ver. 12. and conſequently he was more reſpected than Joab, who now declined in his intereſt by reaſon of his age.

Ver. 7. But ſhew kindneſs unto the ſons of Barzillai the Gileadite, and let them be of thoſe that eat at thy table.] This was the manner in which David had treated Mephiboſheth, who, in all probability, was now dead, otherwiſe David would not have forgotten him. The gratitude of this prince is here very remarkable, for it extended itſelf to all the ſons of Barzillai, who only deſired him to be kind to Chimham, 2 Sam. xix. 37.

——— For ſo they came to me when I fled becauſe of Abſalom thy brother.] That is, ſuch kindneſs they ſhewed to David, inviting him to Barzillai's houſe, where he was ſuſtained in his great diſtreſs.

Ver. 8. And behold thou haſt with thee Shimei the ſon of Gera.] The plain ſenſe of Solomon's having Shimei with him, is, that he was in his power as being one of his ſubjects.

Ver. 9. Now therefore hold him not guiltleſs, &c.] Shimei deſerves to ſuffer a violent death, for his horrid curſes and indignity to me, when I laboured under the deepeſt affliction; but as he took an opportunity to acknowledge his crime, at a ſeaſon when I thought it more proper to forgive than puniſh it, I at that time ſealed his pardon with an oath; but thou, who art not under the ſame reſtriction, mayſt, if thou ſhalt think fit, inflict ſuch a puniſhment on him as his crime deſerves.

David's intention was not, as Abarbinel obſerves, that Solomon ſhould put Shimei to death for curſing his ſovereign; but he admoniſhes the young king not to truſt that man, nor act by his advice; but (ſaith he) if he any way offend thee, do not forgive him as I did, but "bring "down his hoar hair to the grave with blood;" that is, tho' he be an old man, let not that circumſtance move thee to treat him with clemency, but puniſh him according to his demerits.

Ver. 10. So David ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David.] The ancient monarch having left theſe inſtructions with his ſucceſſor, breathed his laſt ſoon after, in the 70th year of his age, after having reigned ſeven years and a half in Hebron, over the houſe of Judah, and thirty-three in Jeruſalem, over all the twelve tribes. He died 1015 years before the incarnation of our bleſſed Saviour, and left an immenſe treaſure behind him, beſide that which he had dedicated to the ſervice of the temple; and he was buried in a ſtately tomb, in that part of the city which he had cauſed to be built, adjoining to the old Jebus, or Jeruſalem. The author of the Chronicles declares, that the hiſtory of this great king was compiled by Samuel, Nathan, and Gad, 1 Chron. xxix. 29. His zeal, piety, and temperance, are celebrated in ſeveral places of the Old and New Teſtament; but that which raiſes his character to its nobleſt height is, that the promiſe of the Meſſiah, which had been made to Abraham, Jacob, and Judah, was fixed to the poſterity of this monarch. Accordingly, the ſacred genealogiſts have given us the two lines of it in which his birth was joined, namely, that of Nathan, from whom his virgin-mother was deſcended, and that of Solomon, from which Joſeph his reputed father ſprung. (Compare Matth. i. 1, &c. and Luke iii. 23. to 31.

Joſephus relates, (Antiq. l. 7. cap. ult.) that Solomon depoſited immenſe riches in David's monument; and that, thirteen hundred years after, the high-prieſt Hircanus being beſieged in Jeruſalem by Antiochus Theos, and not knowing where to procure the money he wanted to give this prince, in order to induce him to raiſe the ſiege, he at laſt opened David's monument, out of which he took three thouſand talents, and gave part of them to Antiochus. The Jewiſh hiſtorian adds, that, many years after, Herod the Great, having once more ſearched this ſepulchre, took great ſums out of it.

It is very probable, that Joſephus had read ſomething like this in the memoirs of his country, and added ſuch improvements as had been made by the traditions of the people.

David's monument was always very much reſpected by the Jews. The Heathens themſelves knew it; and Dio informs us, that part of it fell down in the reign of the emperor Adrian. (Dio in Adrian. vit.) St. Jerom relates, that he often went to pray at the ſepulchre of this royal prophet. (Epiſt. ad Marcellam.) Cardinal Grimani has given us the repreſentation of a noble monument, which ſome aſſert to be David's. Modern travellers deſcribe to us ſome very magnificent ſepulchres, hewn in a rock, and which are ſaid to have been made for the kings of Judah; but it would be very difficult, at this diſtance of time, to diſtinguiſh David's from the reſt.

David is frequently celebrated by Mohammed, in his Korân, particularly in chap. ii. where it is ſaid, that "David ſlew Jâlût (by which name Goliath is meant;) "and God gave him the kingdom and wiſdom, and "taught him his will; and if God had not prevented men, "the one by the other, verily the earth had been cor-"rupted." In the xxxivth chapter of that work, Mohammed repreſents the Deity ſpeaking in the following manner: "We heretofore beſtowed on David excellence from "us: and we ſaid, O mountains, ſing alternate praiſes "with him; and we obliged the birds alſo to join there-"in." We ſhall add but one paſſage more, out of the xxxviiith chapter, where the Deity is again introduced, as ſpeaking thus: "Do thou patiently bear that which they "utter; and remind them of our ſervant David, endued "with ſtrength; for he was one who ſeriouſly turned him-"ſelf unto God. We compelled the mountains to cele-"brate our praiſe with him, in the evening and at ſun-"riſe; and alſo the birds, which gathered themſelves to-"gether unto him: all of them returned frequently unto "him for this purpoſe. And we eſtabliſhed his kingdom, "and gave him wiſdom, and eloquence of ſpeech."

The Jewiſh doctors have added ſeveral fabulous particulars to the canonical hiſtory of David; but they are ſo extremely romantic and abſurd, that we think it would be waſting time to tranſcribe any of them into this work.

Ver. 12. Then ſat Solomon upon the throne of David his father, and his kingdom was eſtabliſhed greatly.] Abarbinel thinks this may refer to the ſecond ſolemn inveſtiture of Solomon by all the eſtates of the realm: who confirmed that which had been tranſacted by a few (tho' by David's order) at Gihon, 1 Chron. xxix. 22, 23.

Ver. 13. And Adonijah the ſon of Haggith came to Bathſheba the mother of Solomon, &c.] Solomon being ſeated on the throne, ſoon found it neceſſary to fulfil ſome of the ſevere part of his father's laſt injunctions. Adonijah obliged him to have recourſe to this proceeding, by an action, which tho' owing perhaps to a youthful indiſcretion, could not but render him ſuſpected of ſome further deſign, in concert with the turbulent Joab. We have obſerved more than once, that it was looked upon as a treaſonable deſign againſt the regal dignity, to marry, court, or debauch any of the king's concubines; notwithſtanding which, Adonijah, obnoxious and diſgraced as he was, for his late attempt upon the crown, was raſh enough to make uſe of Bathſheba's interceſſion, to obtain the king's permiſſion to marry Abiſhag, the young Shunammite virgin, who had been the cheriſher of David's old age; and he aſſured Bathſheba, that he deſired no other recompence for the loſs of a crown, which belonged to him by right of primogeniture. The widow of David, glad perhaps to find that her ſon's rival would be ſatisfied at ſo eaſy a rate, made no difficulty to promiſe him her intereſt, not doubting of ſucceſs. Solomon, who expected nothing leſs than ſuch a requeſt from her, received her with all the marks of honour that were due to a queen and a mother, and had already promiſed to grant her ſuit; but when he heard heard the purport of it, he was ſo enraged at his ambitious brother, that he order'd him to be put to immediate death.

Abiathar the prieſt, who had been one of the chiefs in Adonijah's conſpiracy, was treated with leſs ſeverity than he had reaſon to expect; for the king contented himſelf with diveſting him of his ſhare of the high-prieſthood, and confining him to his own territories at Anathoth, a city of the prieſts, (Joſh. xxi. 28.) in conſideration of his fidelity to David, during the rebellion of Abſalom; at which time he carried the ark before the king, and became a ſharer in his afflictions.

Joab, alarmed at theſe proceedings, went and took ſanctuary at the horns of the altar, which were four, namely, one at each corner. Here he thought to ſave himſelf, according to the cuſtom of all nations, who fled to their altars, when they were guilty of any great crime. But the Jewiſh doctors ſay, Joab was miſtaken in two particulars. Firſt, in fancying that place could be any ſecurity for a wilful murderer. And, ſecondly, in that he expected ſafety by taking hold of the horns of the altar, whereas the refuge of the altar, according to Kimchi, was on the top of it only. But this we conceive to be frivolous; and the opinion of Raſi ſeems to have more ſolidity; namely, that as God had appointed cities of refuge, whither the man-ſlayer ſhould flee, when they came into the land of Canaan, Exod. xxi. 13. ſo while the Iſraelites were in the wilderneſs, the camp ſerved for that purpoſe; and the words in ver. 14. of that chapter, declaring, that if a man committed a voluntary murder, he ſhould be taken from the altar and put to death, are not only a confirmation of that learned Jew's opinion, but likewiſe intimate, that even in the land of Canaan the altar continued a refuge for thoſe who fled to it. But then this queſtion ariſes, Why Joab (who, as the Jews fancy, was preſident of the great Sanhedrin, and underſtood the law) ſhould think to find protection here, when he knew himſelf to be a wilful murderer? To this the Jews anſwer, That he hoped hereby to ſave his eſtate, which otherwiſe would have been forfeited. So they ſay, in the Gemara Sanhedrin, cap. 6. n. 7. he hoped to be condemned by the judgment of the Sanhedrin, and then his eſtate would go to his heirs; whereas, if he was cut off by the king, it would fall to him. Others ſay, he hoped to obtain burial by theſe means. But we think it more probable, that he hoped to obtain a pardon, by conſecrating himſelf to the ſervice of God, as he imagined he did by this ſolemn ceremony. For, the laying hold of the altar, had a vow in it for the future, as well as the hope of preſent ſafety.

Ver. 29. And it was told king Solomon, that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the Lord, and behold, he is by the altar: then Solomon ſent Benaiah, the ſon of Jehoiada, ſaying, Go fall upon him.] This puniſhment was not inflicted on him for killing Abner and Amaſa; tho' the remembrance of that innocent blood determined the king not to pardon the crimes he had newly committed: firſt, in ſetting up Adonijah to be king, while his father was living, which was no better than rebellion: and, ſecondly, in this new attempt on the kingdom, by adviſing Adonijah to beg Abiſhag for his wife. Solomon did not puniſh him for the former of theſe crimes, becauſe he had pardoned Adonijah; and therefore would not be ſevere againſt his adherents: but when both Adonijah and Joab renewed their traiterous deſigns, the king thought fit to cut them off; and Joab was ſenſible that he deſerved no leſs, as appears by his flying to the altar; which was an acknowledgment that he was guilty of the crime charged upon him by Solomon, namely, of his being one of the wicked counſellors of Adonijah.

Ver. 30. And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the Lord, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the king, Come forth.] Abarbinel thinks that Benaiah had an inclination to bring Joab to Solomon, and to endeavour to obtain his pardon, ſo far as to have him only depoſed from his office, as Abiathar was.

——And he ſaid, Nay, but I will die here.] This he ſaid, that he might cauſe Solomon to incur the hatred of the people, for ſtaining the houſe of God with blood.

——And Benaiah brought the king word again, ſaying, Thus ſaid Joab, and thus he anſwered me.] The generality of interpreters take this to be but the repetition of the ſame thing in different words; but Abarbinel thinks they are two diſtinct anſwers of Joab; in which, he refuſes to come from the place where he was; and pronounces the ſentence upon himſelf, not deſiring any pardon. For theſe words, thus ſaith Joab, reſpect, as that author thinks, the ſentence which Joab pronounced on himſelf, that he would die. And thoſe words, thus he anſwered, ſignify, he would not come from the altar.

Ver. 31. And the king ſaid unto him, Do as he hath ſaid, and fall upon him, and bury him.] Kill him at the very altar where he reſolves to die. After which, Solomon would not deny him burial ſuitable to his quality. But many think Benaiah did not kill him at the altar, but dragged him from thence, and then ſlew him. For what neceſſity was there to contaminate the holy place with human blood? Others, on the contrary, are of opinion, that Solomon thought fit to have him ſlain at the altar, to make it evident to all men, that no place, tho' ever ſo holy, ſhould ſecure any criminal from the hand of juſtice.

——That thou mayſt take away the innocent blood which Joab ſhed, from me, and from the houſe of my father.] Solomon here means, the blood of Abner and Amaſa, whoſe murder, as we obſerved before, was not the immediate reaſon of Joab's death. But the words of Solomon are to be underſtood as if he had ſaid, Do not imagine thou ſhalt offend God, by killing Joab even at the altar, ſince thou wilt rather perform an acceptable ſervice to the Divine Majeſty, by cutting off a man who deſerves to die, not only for his rebellious confederation with Adonijah, but likewiſe on account of the innocent blood which he had ſhed before. The affair of Adonijah therefore was the principal cauſe of Joab's death, and the aſſaſſination of Abner and Amaſa only the ſecondary.

Ver. 35. And the king put Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada in his room over the hoſt: and Zadok the prieſt did the king put in the room of Abiathar.] It is evident, that Zadok was a great man before this promotion, at leaſt the vicar of the high-prieſt Abiathar; who, as ſome of the Jews believe, was deprived by David himſelf, or ſuſpended from his pontifical office upon his anointing Adonijah. But as no ſuch anointing is mentioned in the ſtory of that prince, the deprivation of Abiathar, in conſequence of it, muſt be a fiction; and he therefore continued high-prieſt till his removal by Solomon, who tranſlated that great office from the family of Ithamar to that of Eleazar, (according to the threatning againſt Eli, 1 Sam. ii. 30.) in which it continued till the time of the captivity, no notice being taken of Jonathan the ſon of Abiathar, mentioned in the preceding chapter, ver. 42. Grotius obſerves, in his treatiſe De Imperio Sum. Poteſtat. that the ſagan, or vicar of the high-prieſt, had rather a hope than a right to ſucceed to the pontificate: for Maimonides informs us, that the Sanhedrin choſe the high-prieſt out of the family of Aaron; but here it is plain, that the king diſpoſed of that office; for otherwiſe it could not be truly ſaid, that he put Zadok in the room of Abiathar, by the ſame authority with which he advanced Benaiah in the room of Joab. Cardinal Bellarmin, indeed, for fear kings ſhould be thought ſuperior to the high-prieſt, affirms, that Solomon did not diſplace Abiathar, as a king, but as a prophet. (De Pontificio, lib. 2.) But Solomon was not then a prophet; and all thoſe who poſſeſſed royal authority over the Jews, in the time of the Macedonians and Romans, and likewiſe the poſterity of Herod, challenged to themſelves this power of making a high-prieſt, tho' they left to the Jews an ἀυτονομία, or the government of themſelves by their own laws, in other things.

Ver. 36. And the king ſent and called for Shimei, and ſaid unto him, Build thee an houſe in Jeruſalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.] The king then ſent for Shimei, and told him, that he would put it into his power to ſave his life, by confining himſelf within the walls of Jeruſalem; but aſſured him, at the ſame time, that if ever he ſtirred out of that city for the future, his diſobedience ſhould coſt him his life. The old man, glad to come off ſo well, thanked the king for his unexpected clemency; but venturing, ſome years after, to tranſgreſs his orders, and ride out of Jeruſalem after two run-away ſervants, was put to death for it at his return.

CHAP.

CHAP. III.

1 Solomon marrieth Pharaohs daughter. 2 High places being in uſe, Solomon ſacrificeth at Gibeon. 5 Solomon at Gibeon, in the choice which God gave him, preferring wiſdom, obtaineth wiſdom, riches and honour. 16 Solomons judgment between the two harlots, maketh him renowned.

AND Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaohs daughter, and brought her into the city of David, until he had made an end of building his own houſe, and the houſe of the LORD, and the wall of Jeruſalem round about.

2 Only the people ſacrificed in high places, becauſe there was no houſe built unto the name of the LORD, until thoſe days.

3 And Solomon loved the LORD, walking in the ſtatutes of David his father: only he ſacrificed and burnt incenſe in high places.

4 And the king went to Gibeon to ſacrifice there: for that was the great high place: a thouſand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.

5 ¶ In Gibeon the LORD appeared to Solomon in a dream by night: and God ſaid, Ask what I ſhall give thee.

6 And Solomon ſaid, Thou haſt ſhewed unto thy ſervant David my father great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteouſneſs, and in uprightneſs of heart with thee, and thou haſt kept for him this great kindneſs, that thou haſt given him a ſon to ſit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O LORD, my God, thou haſt made thy ſervant king inſtead of David my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in.

8 And thy ſervant is in the midſt of thy people, which thou haſt choſen, a great people that cannot be numbred nor counted for multitude.

9 Give therefore thy ſervant an underſtanding heart, to judge thy people, that I may diſcern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy ſo great a people?

10 And the ſpeech pleaſed the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God ſaid unto him, Becauſe thou haſt asked this thing, and haſt not asked for thyſelf long life, neither haſt asked riches for thyſelf, nor haſt asked the life of thine enemies, but haſt asked for thyſelf underſtanding to diſcern judgment;

12 Behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wiſe and an underſtanding heart, ſo that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee ſhall any ariſe like unto thee.

13 And I have alſo given thee that which thou haſt not asked, both riches, and honour: ſo that there ſhall not be any among the kings like unto thee, all thy days.

14 And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my ſtatutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days.

15 And Solomon awoke, and behold, it was a dream: and he came to Jeruſalem, and ſtood before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt offerings, and offered peace-offerings, and made a feaſt to all his ſervants.

16 ¶ Then came there two women that were harlots, unto the king, and ſtood before him.

17 And the one woman ſaid, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one houſe, and I was delivered of a child with her in the houſe.

18 And it came to paſs the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered alſo: and we were together; there was no ſtranger with us in the houſe, ſave we two in the houſe.

19 And this womans child died in the night; becauſe ſhe overlaid it.

20 And ſhe aroſe at midnight, and took my ſon from beſide me, while thine handmaid ſlept, and laid it in her boſom, and laid her dead child in my boſom.

21 And when I roſe in the morning to give my child ſuck, behold, it was dead: but when I had conſidered it in the morning, behold, it was not my ſon, which I did bear.

22 And the other woman ſaid, Nay; but the living is my ſon, and the dead is thy ſon: and this ſaid, No; but the dead is thy ſon, and the living is my ſon. Thus they ſpake before the king.

23 Then ſaid the king, The one ſaith, This is my ſon that liveth, and thy ſon is the dead: and the other ſaith, Nay; but thy ſon is the dead, and my ſon is the living.

24 And the king ſaid, Bring me a ſword. And they brought a ſword before the king.

25 And the king ſaid, Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

26 Then ſpake the woman whoſe the living child was unto the king (for her bowels yearned upon her ſon) and ſhe ſaid, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wiſe ſlay it: but the other ſaid, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it.

27 Then the king anſwered and ſaid, Give her the living child, and in no wiſe ſlay it: ſhe is the mother thereof.

28 And all Iſrael heard of the judgment which the king had judged, and they feared the king: for they ſaw that the wiſdom of God was in him, to do judgment.

Ver. 1. And Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, &c.] Solomon did not think it enough that he had rid himſelf of two ſuch potent enemies as Adonijah and Joab; but he ſought to ſtrengthen himſelf ſtill more by eſpouſing the daughter of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. He brought this princeſs to Jeruſalem, and provided apartments for her in the city of David, till he had erected a palace for her reception; as he did ſome years after, when he had completed the temple.

Theſe kind of alliances were prohibited by the Moſaic law, Deut. vii. 3. but it is ſuppoſed that Solomon cauſed the Egyptian princeſs to be inſtructed in the Jewiſh religion, and likewiſe to embrace it before he married her; becauſe we do not find that God reproved him for it, in that intercourſe which he had ſoon after with him; but, on the contrary, ſeemed well pleaſed with what he had done. It is true, Solomon is afterward ſaid to have been ſeduced to idolatry by his ſtrange wives, chap. xi. 1, &c. but they were thoſe whom he married toward the latter end of his reign; and Pharaoh's daughter ſeems to have been excepted, unleſs we will ſuppoſe, that ſhe relapſed into her former idolatry when ſhe ſaw him immerſed in it.

However that fact be, Solomon is generally believed to have compoſed the forty-fifth Pſalm on the occaſion of this marriage, and likewiſe the book of Canticles, which is a kind of epithalamium.

Ver. 2. Only the people ſacrificed in high places, &c.] Hitherto the people uſed to reſort to ſeveral high places, to offer up their devotions and ſacrifices; but the moſt conſiderable of all was Gibeon, ver. 4. becauſe the tabernacle, altar, and all the other ſacred utenſils, except the ark, were there. Whilſt therefore the temple was building, Solomon uſed to repair to Gibeon upon all ſolemn occaſions, with a magnificence ſuitable to his dignity, and at one time offered a thouſand ſacrifices; not in one day, but during the time he continued at Gibeon. This can hardly be thought incredible, if it be remember'd, that the fire on the altar was celeſtial flame, which conſumed the ſacrifice much ſooner than any ordinary fire could have done. From whence it was called ariel, which ſignifies the lion of God.

Ver. 5. In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night: and God ſaid, Ask what I ſhall give thee.] Perhaps Solomon thought he ſaw the Divine Glory ſhine around him; or elſe the meaning is, God revealed himſelf in a dream; in which, Solomon heard a voice ſpeaking to him, bidding him ask what he deſired, and it ſhould be beſtowed upon him. The young monarch conſidering that he was king over a great people, and that ſovereign power could not well be managed without an extraordinary ſhare of wiſdom, begged ſuch a portion of it as might enable him to govern with that prudence and ſagacity as became a king of Iſrael. God was ſo well pleaſed with this requeſt of Solomon, which ſhewed he already had a conſiderable ſhare of the accompliſhment he implored, that he not only beſtowed upon him ſuch a profuſion of wiſdom and knowledge, as had never been poſſeſſed by any mortal, but likewiſe ſuperadded a promiſe of ſuch other temporal bleſſings as he had ſo judiciouſly overlooked.

The example of this young prince ſhould teach all Chriſtian kings to be very moderate in their eſtimation of the riches, honours, and pleaſures of this world; and to place their chief glory in ſhewing themſelves the true images of that God whom they profeſs to adore, by reſembling him in wiſdom, which is the ſource of all good things; and in juſtice, which is the true eſtabliſhment of their thrones.

Ver. 16. Then came there two women that were harlots, unto the king, and ſtood before him.] Solomon having obtained the ineſtimable gift of wiſdom from God, an occaſion happened not long after, which made it appear in its full luſtre and glory, and ſpread the fame of it through all the nations around. Two harlots, or, as the Targum repreſents them, two women who kept a houſe of public entertainment, and perhaps were alſo common women, preſenting themſelves before Solomon, as he ſat in judgment, implored him to decide a difference that was riſen between them: and one of them opening the caſe, acquainted the king, that both of them dwelling in one houſe, without any other company, ſhe was brought to bed of a child; and that three days after, her companion was delivered of another, which ſhe killed by overlaying it; and finding her child dead, ſhe aroſe at midnight, and took away the other child, whilſt the mother ſlept, laying her own dead infant in the room of it; ſo that when the parent roſe in the morning to give her babe ſuck, ſhe found a dead child by her, and ſoon perceived that it was not her own. The other woman poſitively denied all that her companion had alledged, to prove the living child was hers, and ſtrongly aſſerted, that the dead infant ſhe had found in her boſom was indeed her own child.

This intricate caſe, which had happened without proof or witneſs, in the dead of the night, and likewiſe in a lone houſe, wherein was no company, but theſe two women, did indeed require a head like Solomon's, to diſcuſs and decide it; and this great king gave a convincing proof upon that occaſion, of the excellent knowledge of nature with which he was endued; as not only underſtanding the vertues and powers of plants, trees, and animals; but alſo the moſt ſecret propenſities and inclinations of the heart of man, and the tender yearning and affections of mothers toward their children. For when he had heard the reſpective pleas of the contending parties, he commanded a ſword to be brought, and pronounced the following ſentence, which the audience, perhaps at firſt, thought very ſtrange and unjuſt. "The one, ſaid the king, "ſaith, This is my ſon that liveth, and thy ſon is the "dead: and the other ſaith, Nay; but thy ſon is the "dead, and my ſon is the living. Divide therefore the "living child in two, and give half to the one, and half "to the other," ver. 23, 25. When the real mother heard the king pronounce this ſentence, her bowels yearned for her child, and ſhe earneſtly intreated the king not to ſuffer the innocent babe to be killed, but rather to give it to her companion, who had robbed her of it, and unjuſtly claimed it for her own. The pretended mother, on the other hand, approved the equity of the ſentence, and conſented to the diviſion of the child, ſince both of them could not have the whole.

Solomon no ſooner heard their different reflections upon the ſentence he had pronounced, but he adjudged the living child to her, who, by her anxiety to preſerve its life, had given an inconteſtable proof that the infant was her own. Her ſolicitude to ſave it was the voice of nature, which Solomon perfectly underſtood; and by this noble deciſion he evinced the truth of what he himſelf declares in his Proverbs; namely, that a king, ſeated on his throne of judgment, has in ſome meaſure the ſpirit of divination on his lips.

The wiſdom of this young monarch was the more ſurpriſing, and extraordinary, as he was then, at moſt, but twenty twenty years of age, according to the chronology of our Bibles, and of the learned Archbiſhop Uſher.

CHAP. IV.

1 Solomons princes. 7. His twelve officers for proviſion. 20, 24 The peace and largeneſs of his kingdom. 22 His daily proviſion. 26 His ſtables. 29 His wiſdom.

SO king Solomon was king over all Iſrael.

2 And theſe were the princes which he had, Azariah the ſon of Zadok, the prieſt:

3 Elihoreph and Ahiah, the ſons of Shiſha, ſcribes: Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Ahilud, the recorder.

4 And Benaiah the ſon of Jehoiada was over the hoſt: and Zadok and Abiathar were the prieſts.

5 And Azariah the ſon of Nathan was over the officers: and Zabud the ſon of Nathan was principal officer, and the kings friend.

6 And Ahiſhar was over the houſhold: and Adoniram the ſon of Abda was over the tribute.

7 ¶ And Solomon had twelve officers over all Iſrael, which provided victuals for the king and his houſhold: each man his month in a year made proviſion.

8 And theſe are their names: The ſon of Hur, in mount Ephraim.

9 The ſon of Dekar, in Makaz, and in Shaalbim, and Beth-ſhemeſh, and Elon-beth-hanan.

10 The ſon of Heſed, in Aruboth: to him pertained Sochoh, and all the land of Hepher.

11 The ſon of Abinadab, in all the region of Dor, which had Taphath the daughter of Solomon to wife.

12 Baana the ſon of Ahilud, to him pertained Taanach and Megiddo, and all Beth-ſhean, which is by Zartanah beneath Jezreel, from Beth-ſhean to Abelmeholah, even unto the place that is beyond Jokneam.

13 The ſon of Geber, in Ramoth-gilead: to him pertained the towns of Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh, which are in Gilead: to him alſo pertained the region of Argob, which is in Baſhan, threeſcore great cities with walls, and braſen bars.

14 Ahinadab the ſon of Iddo had Mahanaim.

15 Ahimaaz was in Naphtali; he alſo took Baſmath the daughter of Solomon to wife.

16 Baanah the ſon of Huſhai was in Aſher and in Aloth.

17 Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Paruah, in Iſſachar.

18 Shimei the ſon of Elah, in Benjamin.

19 Geber the ſon of Uri was in the country of Gilead, in the country of Sihon king of the Amorites, and of Og king of Baſhan; and he was the only officer which was in the land.

20 ¶ Judah and Iſrael were many, as the ſand which is by the ſea in multitude, eating and drinking, and making merry.

21 And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms, from the river unto the land of the Philiſtines, and unto the border of Egypt: they brought preſents, and ſerved Solomon all the days of his life.

22 ¶ And Solomons proviſion for one day was thirty meaſures of fine flour, and threeſcore meaſures of meal,

23 Ten fat oxen, and twenty oxen out of the paſtures, and an hundred ſheep, beſide harts and roe-bucks, and fallow-deer, and fatted fowl.

24 For he had dominion over all the region on this ſide the river, from Tiphſah even to Azzah, over all the kings on this ſide the river: and he had peace on all ſides round about him.

25 And Judah and Iſrael dwelt ſafely, every man under his vine, and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beer-ſheba, all the days of Solomon.

26 ¶ And Solomon had forty thouſand ſtalls of horſes for his chariots, and twelve thouſand horſemen.

27 And thoſe officers provided victual for king Solomon, and for all that came unto king Solomons table, every man in his month: they lacked nothing.

28 Barley alſo, and ſtraw for the horſes and dromedaries brought they unto the place where the officers were, every man according to his charge.

29 ¶ And God gave Solomon wiſdom and underſtanding, exceeding much, and largeneſs of heart, even as the ſand that is on the ſea-ſhore.

30 And Solomons wiſdom excelled the wiſdom of all the children of the eaſt-country, and all the wiſdom of Egypt.

31 For he was wiſer than all men; than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the ſons of Mahol: and his fame was in all nations round about.

32 And

32 And he ſpake three thouſand proverbs: and his ſongs were a thouſand and five.

33 And he ſpake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyſſop that ſpringeth out of the wall: he ſpake alſo of beaſts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fiſhes.

34 And there came of all people to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wiſdom.

Ver. 1. So Solomon was king over all Iſrael.] Reigned with the full conſent of all the tribes of Iſrael.

Ver. 2. And theſe were the princes which he had.] The principal officers employed under him.

—— Azariah the ſon of Zadok, th prieſt.] He was the ſon of Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok, and conſequently was Zadok's grandſon, 1 Chron. vi. 8, 9. But ſuch are uſually called ſons in Scripture; and it is probable, that Zadok, in his old age, bred up Azariah as his own child. It is not here ſaid what office he had, unleſs we tranſlate the word prieſt, the chief officer, as it is rendered in the margin, or prime miniſter of ſtate. But Abarbinel thinks this is a miſtake, and therefore takes him to have been one of the ſcribes, together with Elihoreph, and Ahiah, mentioned ver. 3. and thinks the words ſhould be tranſlated thus: "Azariah the ſon of Zadok the prieſt, and "Elihoreph, and Ahiah the ſon of Shiſha were ſcribes;" And theſe three ſecretaries had each their ſeveral employments. One, he ſuppoſes, acted in matters of judgment; the ſecond in the revenue; and the third wrote annals, kept the records, and was a public regiſter.

Ver. 3. —— Jehoſhaphat, the ſon of Ahilud, the recorder.] Or rather, the chancellor of the kingdom, as we have already obſerved, 2 Sam. viii. 16.

Ver. 4 —— And Zadok and Abiathar were the prieſts.] That is, the principal, or high prieſts. Abiathar had been diveſted of the pontificate by Solomon, who placed Zadok in his room; but he perhaps allowed Abiathar, upon his petition, to come to Jeruſalem, not to officiate as high prieſt, but to live upon the altar, according to the prediction, 1 Sam. ii. 36. and he retained the name and title of high-prieſt, tho' Zadok only enjoyed the office.

Ver. 5. And Azariah the ſon of Nathan was over the officers.] That is, the twelve officers, mentioned, ver. 7, 8, &c. who gave accounts to him as their overſeer.

—— And Zabud the ſon of Nathan was principal officer, and the king's friend.] The word cohen ſignifies here, as well as in 2 Sam. viii. 18. a miniſter of ſtate, in which ſtation Zabud was the chief; and the king intruſted him with the management of all political affairs, and with his moſt ſecret counſels. Dr. Hammond obſerves, in his annotations on Matt. ix. that the king's friend was an officer of nearneſs to the king. For Nathan having bred up Solomon, might eaſily procure his ſons to be advanced by that monarch to the higheſt dignities under him; and eſpecially as that prophet had been very inſtrumental in placing him on the throne.

Ver. 6. And Ahiſhar was over the houſhold.] Enjoyed the office of lord high chamberlain, who took-in and diſplaced officers in the family.

—— And Adoniram the ſon of Abda was over the tribute.] Which was impoſed on the people for the ſupport of the government. But perhaps this word tribute, which is tranſlated levy in the margin, may refer not only to the levying of money, but likewiſe of men. Concerning which we read in the next chapter, ver. 13, 14. where Adoniram is ſaid to be over the levy; and ſo he might be over both.

Ver. 7. And Solomon had twelve officers over all Iſrael, which provided victuals for the king and his houſhold, &c.] The country being divided into twelve parts, as many officers were conſtituted to buy proviſions for the king and his family, at the beſt hand, and every thing in its proper ſeaſon. This ſupply was to be ſent, by each officer in his month, to the place where the king reſided; by which means there was great plenty for all who belonged to the court, and for all foreigners who reſorted thither, to tranſact buſineſs, or to hear the wiſdom of Solomon. And they were there entertained without any grievance to his people.

Ver. 8. And theſe are their names: The ſon of Hur, in mount Ephraim.] This, and others of them are denominated from their fathers, who were known and famous in their generations. The ſon of Hur had mount Ephraim, and the adjacent territory, conſigned to him for the exerciſe of his purveyorſhip.

Ver. 9 The ſon of Dekar, in Makaz, and in Shaalbim, and Beth-ſheneſh, and Elon-beth-hanan.] Makaz, or Macces, is thought to have been a city in the tribe of Dan; we ſuppoſe it to be the ſame as Makteſh, the jaw-tooth, or En-hakkore, mentioned, Judges xv. 9. and Zephaniah i. 11.

Shaalbim, otherwiſe called Shaalabbin, Shaalbin, Salebim, or Selebin, was a city in the tribe of Dan, adjacent to Ajalon, and Heres, and to the cities of Makaz, and Beth-ſhemeſh; all which circumſtances pretty nearly ſhew its ſituation. Euſebius calls it Salaba, and places it in the canton of Samaria. St. Jerom gives it the name of Salebi, and joins it to Ajalon, and Emmaus. The LXX call it Salamin, or Talamin.

Beth-ſhemeſh was a city belonging to the prieſts, and in the tribe of Judah. In Euſebius's account, it is ten miles from Eleutheropolis eaſtward, in the way to Nicopolis, or Emaus. Beth-ſhemeſh ſignifies the houſe of the ſun. As the tribes of Dan and Judah were adjacent, this city is ſometimes mentioned as belonging to the one, and ſometimes to the other. There was another city of this name in the tribe of Iſſachar, Joſh. xix. 22. and a third in the tribe of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 38.

Elon-beth-hanan was a city in the tribe of Dan. Elon ſignifies a grove of oaks, and we read of Elon-Mamre, Elon-More, &c. that is to ſay, the grove or oak of Mamre, &c.

Ver. 10. The ſon of Heſed in Aruboth.] Or, Araboth. This is thought to be a city or country belonging to the tribe of Judah; but the true ſituation of it is not known to us. Aruboth may ſignify deſerts, or uncultivated plains.

—— To him pertained Sochoh.] This was a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 35. Euſebius ſays, there were two cities of this name, one the higher, and the other the lower Sochoh, nine miles from Eleutheropolis, toward Jeruſalem.

—— And all the land of Hepher.] This may poſſibly be the portion given to the daughters of Hepher, Joſh. xvii. 3, &c.

Ver. 11. The ſon of Abinadab, in all the region of Dor.] Dor, or Dora, was the capital of a certain country in the land of Canaan, called in Scripture Nephat Dor; Joſhua conquered it, and killed its king, and gave the city Dor to the half tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, Joſh. xvii. 11. Dor is ſituated on the Mediterranean, and has a very bad port. It lies between Cæſarea in Paleſtine, and mount Carmel, nine miles from Cæſarea. It is often placed in Phœnicia. Antiochus Sidetes beſieged Tryphon in it, the uſurper of the kingdom of Syria, 1 Maccab. xv. 11.

Some young people of Dor having of their own notion, and without the conſent of the magiſtrates, placed a ſtatue of the emperor in the ſynagogue belonging to the Jews in this town, king Agrippa, upon intelligence of what was done, immediately went to Petronius, governor of the province, and complained of the attempt made by thoſe of Dor; laying before him the emperor's ordinances, whereby the Jews were allowed not only the free exerciſe of their religion and laws, throughout the whole extent of the empire, but likewiſe had a grant of the privilege of freedom in towns and corporations; Agrippa therefore deſired him to put a ſtop to the inſolence of thoſe of Dor, and oblige them to remove the emperor's ſtatue from the place where they had ſet it up. Petronius hereupon wrote a letter in very ſtrong terms to the magiſtrates of this city, commanding them to ſend to him the authors of this innovation, and to be careful that nothing of the like nature ſhould happen for the future; that that they ſhould not ſeek any occaſion of quarrelling with the Jews, and ſhould leave every one at liberty to worſhip God in his own way, Joſeph. Antiq. l. xix. c. 5, 6.

——— Which had Taphath the daughter of Solomon to wife.] Solomon had no daughters marriageable when theſe officers were created. But, in proceſs of time, this ſon of Abinadab, and Ahimaaz, mentioned ver. 15. had behaved themſelves ſo well in their reſpective ſtations, that the king did them the honour to give them two of his daughters in marriage.

Ver. 12. Baana the ſon of Ahilud, to him pertained Taanach and Megiddo, and all Beth-ſhean, &c.] All theſe places have been mentioned in the foregoing books, where we have collected all that we can find concerning them.

Ver. 13. The ſon of Geber, in Ramoth-gilead: to him pertained the towns of Jair, &c.] Theſe places beyond Jordan are alſo well known, being frequently mentioned in the preceding books.

Ver. 14. Ahinadab the ſon of Iddo had Mahanaim.] And the territory belonging to it, which was very fertile: but this ſeems to ſome not to bear a due proportion to the reſt, as not being a twelfth part of the whole country. Therefore they follow the marginal tranſlation, to Mahanaim; that is, all the territory from the places before-named, to this place.

Mahanaim, or Manaim, was a city of the Levites of the family of Merari, in the tribe of Gad, upon the brook Jabbok. The name Mahanaim ſignifies, the two fields; and the patriarch Jacob gave it this name, becauſe he here had a viſion of angels coming to meet him. In the Vulgate it is ſometimes called caſtra, the camp.

Ver. 15. Ahimaaz was in Naphtali.] The ſoil belonging to this tribe was very fertile in corn and oil; and its limits were extended into upper and lower Galilee, having Jordan to the eaſt, the tribes of Aſher and Zebulon to the weſt, mount Libanus to the north, and the tribe of Iſſachar to the ſouth.

Ver. 16. Baanah the ſon of Huſhai was in Aſher.] This man, perhaps, was the ſon of Huſhai, the friend of David, and was therefore preferred by Solomon. The inheritance, belonging to the tribe of Aſher, lay in a very fruitful country, with Phœnicia to the weſt of it; mount Libanus to the north; mount Carmel, and the tribe of Iſſachar, to the ſouth; and the tribes of Zebulon and Naphtali to the eaſt. The tribe of Aſher never poſſeſſed the whole extent of land which was aſſigned to it; its allotment was to reach from Libanus, part of Syria, and Phœnicia; but either its weakneſs, its negligence, or its ſins, or all theſe in conjunction, were the cauſe that it could never get poſſeſſion of its whole portion.

Ver. 17. Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Paruah, in Iſſachar.] The tribe of Iſſachar had its portion in one of the beſt parts of the land of Canaan, along the great plain, or valley of Jezreel, with the half tribe of Manaſſeh to the ſouth, that of Zebulon to the north, the Mediterranean to the weſt, and Jordan, with the extremity of the ſea of Tiberias, to the eaſt.

Ver. 18. Shimei the ſon of Elah, in Benjamin.] The portion of land, belonging to the tribe of Benjamin, had Judah on the ſouth, the Jordan on the eaſt, Ephraim on the north, and Dan on the weſt.

Ver. 19. Geber the ſon of Uri was in the country of Gilead.] That is, in the remaining part of the country of Gilead, which was mentioned before, ver. 13.

——— In the country of Sihon king of the Amorites.] The Amorites were a people deſcended from Amorrhæus, the fourth ſon of Canaan. They firſt of all peopled the mountains lying to the weſt of the Dead-ſea; and they had likewiſe eſtabliſhments to the eaſt of the ſame ſea, between the brooks Jabbok and Arnon, from whence they expelled the Ammonites and Moabites. The Iſraelites conquered this country, Numb. xxi. 24.

——— And of Og king of Baſhan.] This country is bounded eaſtward by the mountains of Gilead, and the land of Ammon, and eaſt Edom; northward, by mount Hermon; ſouthward, by the brook Jabbok; and weſtward, by the river Jordan. It was thought to be one of the moſt fruitful countries in the world; its rich paſtures, ſtately oaks, and fine cattle, are principally commended, (Reland. Palæſtin. l. i. p. 200, &c.) It was comprehended in the country belonging to the tribe of Manaſſeh.

——— And he was the only officer which was in the land.] There is nothing in the Hebrew to anſwer theſe words, he was; therefore this doth not relate to the officer laſt mentioned. But the meaning, according to Abarbinel, is, that beſide all the officers before-named, there was another, who took care of ſuch ſtrangers as were going to court, or coming from it; as the other twelve took care of the king's family, and of all belonging to it. This officer made proviſion in the country where the king then dwelt; and therefore is not named, becauſe he was not fixed and ſettled in his ſtation, as the others were; but was choſen by the citizens of that city where the king reſided.

Ver. 20. Judah and Iſrael were many, as the ſand which is by the ſea in multitude.] The ſame Abarbinel thinks this and the next verſe explain the reaſon why this officer was appointed: firſt, becauſe Iſrael and Judah were ſo great a people: and ſecondly, becauſe ſtrangers came from ſeveral regions, to bring preſents, or tranſact buſineſs; and therefore it was neceſſary this officer ſhould ſet a reaſonable price upon all things ſold in the market, that the people might not exact upon any perſon, when they ſaw a multitude of buyers, which might tempt them to ſell their commodities too dear.

Ver. 21. And Solomon reigned over all kingdoms, from the river unto the land of the Philiſtines, and unto the border of Egypt.] The bounds of his kingdom were the river Euphrates on the eaſt; the country of the Philiſtines on the weſt; and Egypt on the ſouth. For God had promiſed that the dominion of the Iſraelites ſhould be extended from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates, Gen. xv. 18.

——— They brought preſents, and ſerved Solomon all the days of his life.] This explains what went before; which is not to be underſtood as if all thoſe countries had no other king than Solomon; but that their kings were tributaries to him, and made him preſents in token of their ſubjection.

Ver. 22. And Solomon's proviſion for one day was thirty meaſures of fine flour, &c.] This proviſion amounted daily to thirty meaſures of fine flour, each meaſure containing about eight buſhels and an half; double that quantity of common flour; ten fatted, and twenty paſture oxen, and an hundred ſheep; beſide veniſon, poultry, and other eatables, which were ſent to the royal table from all parts of the kingdom by the twelve officers above-mentioned.

Ver. 24. For he had dominion over all the region on this ſide the river, from Tiphſah even to Azzah, over all the kings on this ſide the river.] The objection, that all the country of Iſrael could not afford ſuch a conſtant ſupply of proviſions, is prevented by this obſervation, that the dominion of Solomon extended to many other regions, from whence he might be furniſhed with more than his own country produced.

Tiphſah was an eminent city on the Euphrates, and it is mentioned by Ptolemy, Strabo, and Pliny. It had a bridge and a ferry over that river, as Strabo teſtifies in many places, (lib. 16. p. 747.)

Azzah is the ſame city with Gaza, which was one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines, and ſituated toward the ſouthern extremity of the promiſed land.

Ver. 26. And Solomon had forty thouſand ſtalls of horſes for his chariots.] In 2 Chron. ix. 25. it is ſaid he had but four thouſand. But Abarbinel thinks there is no diſagreement between theſe two places, becauſe the horſes of Solomon are meant here, and their ſtalls or ſtables there; ten horſes being in every ſtable, which amount to forty thouſand. But this did not ſatisfy Bochart, who rather inclines to the opinion of Capellus, that the Hebrew word arbaim here ſignifies four, not forty. But this is without example; therefore others think, that in the Chronicles the author ſpeaks of thoſe ſtalls for horſes, which Solomon had in Jeruſalem for his conſtant guard, which were but four thouſand; whereas the Sacred Penman of this book of Kings means thoſe which were diſperſed throughout the whole kingdom.

——— And twelve thouſand horſemen.] Who, probably, were diſtributed into every tribe, to keep them in peace, and to be ready to oppoſe any enemy that might invade them. Abarbinel thinks, that Solomon did not offend againſt the law in Deuteronomy, which commanded the Iſraelites not to multiply horſes, Deut. xvii. 16. becauſe he did it not out of pride and vanity, but merely for the preſervation of peace, by keeping all his neighbours in awe.

Ver. 29. And God gave Solomon wiſdom and underſtanding, exceeding much, and largeneſs of heart, even as the ſand that is on the ſea-ſhore.] As the ſand there incloſes a vaſt body of waters, ſo the mind of Solomon contained an ocean of knowledge, as the great lord Bacon obſerves.

Ver. 30. And Solomon's wiſdom excelled the wiſdom of all the children of the eaſt-country.] Some, by theſe eaſtern ſages, underſtand the Chaldeans; but they were rather a northern people, and not famous for learning in the time of Solomon; nor began to be ſo till the reign of Nabonaſſar. Nor are the Tyrians here meant, as Pineda imagines; for they were a weſtern people. Theſe children of the eaſt, therefore, were the oriental Arabians, who were famous for wiſdom in ancient times, as is evident by the incomparable book of Job.

——— And all the wiſdom of Egypt.] Which country was celebrated for wiſdom and learning, even in the time of Moſes, as appears from Acts vii. 22. And, in after-times, Macrobius calls Egypt matrem artium, the mother of arts.

Ver. 31. For he was wiſer than all men.] Maimonides confines theſe words to the men of that age.

——— Than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda.] If theſe were the ſons of Zerah the ſon of Judah, mentioned in 1 Chron. ii. 6. then it is not true, that Solomon is only compared with the wiſe men who were his cotemporaries, for theſe lived long before him; and the two former are thought to have been endued with the ſpirit of prophecy, being the authors, as ſome think, of two pſalms. For Pſalm lxxxviii. is ſaid to be an inſtructive pſalm of Heman the Ezrahite; and the lxxxixth, of Ethan the Ezrahite. Of this opinion is Dr. Lightfoot; but it is more probable, that other men are here meant: For we read of Heman the grandchild of Samuel, 1 Chron. vi. 33. who was alſo a prophet, 1 Chr. xxv. 5. And in the ſame time there was one Ethan a Levite, of the poſterity of Merari, 1 Chron vi. 42. who is joined with Heman and Aſaph, as principal ſingers, 1 Chron. xv. 17. Now the pſalms before-mentioned may more reaſonably be aſcribed to them, there being expreſs mention of David and his kingdom in one of them. Solomon, therefore, ſeems to be compared only with the wiſe men of his own time.

——— The ſons of Mahol.] Who, perhaps, was a skilful muſician; for mahol ſignifies a pipe.

Ver. 32. And he ſpake three thouſand proverbs.] St. Jerom thinks theſe are the proverbs we read in the book of that name; but it is ſtrange that he ſhould not be ſenſible that book doth not contain ſo many. Joſephus is ſo extravagant as to affirm, that Solomon wrote three thouſand books of proverbs; when the Scripture mentions no more than three thouſand proverbs, many of which have been loſt, as other compoſitions of his are.

——— And his ſongs were a thouſand and five.] He was an excellent poet likewiſe: And in ancient times it was cuſtomary for wiſe men to couch uſeful inſtructions in ſongs, which made them more eaſily remembred. But of all theſe poetical compoſitions of Solomon, none but the Song of Songs is thought to be divinely inſpired.

Ver. 33. And he ſpake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon, even unto the hyſſop that ſpringeth out of the wall.] That is, of all claſſes of plants, from the largeſt to the leaſt. Ezub, which is commonly tranſlated hyſſop, ſeems to be the ſame with the Ethiopian word azub, which ſignifies mint, and is more agreeable to this place, being more directly oppoſite to the cedar than hyſſop, which hath a ſtalk, and ſometimes, of great ſtrength. From Solomon's great skill in the properties and virtues of all plants, Nachmanides takes the liberty to conclude, that he wrote a book of medicine.

——— He ſpake alſo of beaſts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fiſhes.] This ſhews the prodigious extent of his knowledge, which comprehended the whole hiſtory of animals as well as that of plants, whoſe various natures and qualities were familiar to him. Some Jews fancy, that Ariſtotle ſaw the books which Solomon is ſuppoſed to have written on theſe ſubjects, and that he publiſhed them in his own name, in his hiſtory of animals. Solomon had ſo vaſt a genius, that he purſued all manner of knowledge, while he governed his kingdom with great prudence; ſo that in his days the wiſh of Plato was fulfilled, That either philoſophers might be kings, or kings be philoſophers.

Ver. 34. And there came of all people to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wiſdom.] The plain meaning is, that people came from all the neighbouring nations, being ſent by their kings, who heard of Solomon's fame. Nay, their own natural deſires might carry them to him: For, as Dion Pruſæus obſerves, (Orat. de Regno, p. 6.) there is no ſpectacle ſo grateful, as a wiſe and good king; all men flock to ſee him, and partake, τῆ καλῆς διανόιας καὶ ἀγαθῆς, of his good and pious mind; and if he be mild and gentle, there is no ſight ſo ſweet and lovely: Inſomuch, that thoſe who behold him, never leave him but with the utmoſt reluctance, as the ſame author obſerves; and they who hear him, ἐπιθυμοῦσιν ἰδεῖν, are deſirous to ſee him, more than children are to find their unknown father.

CHAP. V.

1 Hiram ſending to congratulate Solomon, is certified of his purpoſe to build the temple, and deſired to furniſh him with timber thereto. 7 Hiram bleſſing God for Solomon, and requeſting food for his family, furniſheth him with trees. 13 The number of Solomons workmen and labourers.

AND Hiram king of Tyre ſent his ſervants unto Solomon; (for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father) for Hiram was ever a lover of David.

2 And Solomon ſent to Hiram, ſaying,

3 Thou knoweſt how that David my father could not build an houſe unto the name of the LORD his God, for the wars which were about him on every ſide, until the LORD put them under the ſoles of his feet.

4 But now the LORD my God hath given me reſt on every ſide, ſo that there is neither adverſary, nor evil occurrent.

5 And behold, I purpoſe to build an houſe unto the name of the LORD my God, as the LORD ſpake unto David my father, ſaying, Thy ſon whom I will ſet upon thy throne in thy room, he ſhall build an houſe unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou, that they hew me cedar-trees out of Lebanon, and my ſervants ſhall be with thy ſervants: and unto thee will I give hire for thy ſervants, according to all that thou ſhalt appoint: for thou knoweſt that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians.

7 ¶ And it came to paſs, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and ſaid, Bleſſed be the LORD this day, which hath given unto David a wiſe ſon over this great people.

8 And

8 And Hiram ſent to Solomon, ſaying, I have conſidered the things which thou ſenteſt to me for: and I will do all thy deſire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning timber of fir.

9 My ſervants ſhall bring them down from Lebanon unto the ſea: and I will convey them by ſea in flotes, unto the place that thou ſhalt appoint me, and will cauſe them to be diſcharged there, and thou ſhalt receive them: and thou ſhalt accompliſh my deſire, in giving food for my houſhold.

10 So Hiram gave Solomon cedar-trees, and fir-trees, according to all his deſire.

11 And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thouſand meaſures of wheat for food to his houſhold, and twenty meaſures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

12 And the LORD gave Solomon wiſdom, as he promiſed him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon, and they two made a league together.

13 ¶ And king Solomon raiſed a levy out of all Iſrael; and the levy was thirty thouſand men.

14 And he ſent them to Lebanon, ten thouſand a month by courſes: a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and Adoniram was over the levy.

15 And Solomon had threeſcore and ten thouſand that bare burdens, and fourſcore thouſand hewers in the mountains:

16 Beſides the chief of Solomons officers which were over the work, three thouſand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

17 And the king commanded, and they brought great ſtones, coſtly ſtones, and hewed ſtones, to lay the foundation of the houſe.

18 And Solomons builders, and Hirams builders did hew them, and the ſtone-ſquarers: ſo they prepared timber and ſtones to build the houſe.

Ver. 1. And Hiram king of Tyre ſent his ſervants unto Solomon; (for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father) for Hiram was ever a lover of David.] Of all the princes who ſought the friendſhip of Solomon, Hiram, king of Tyre, David's old friend and ally, was the firſt who ſent ambaſſadors to congratulate his acceſſion to the crown, and to offer his ſervice to him, as he had formerly done to his father. Joſephus informs us, that Solomon, upon the return of theſe ambaſſadors, wrote a letter to the Tyrian king, in theſe terms:

King Solomon to king Hiram, greeting,

" Be it known to thee, O king, that my father David " had it a long time in his mind to erect a temple to the " Lord; but being perpetually in war, and under a ne- " ceſſity of clearing his hands of his enemies, and making " them all his tributaries, before he could attend this " great and holy work, he hath left it to me, in time of " peace, both to begin, and to finiſh it, according to the " direction, as well as the prediction, of Almighty God. " Bleſſed be his Great Name for the preſent tranquility " of my dominions! and by his gracious aſſiſtance, I ſhall " now dedicate the beſt improvements of this liberty and " leiſure, to his honour and worſhip. Wherefore, I make " it my requeſt, that you will let ſome of your people go " with ſome ſervants of mine to mount Libanus, to aſſiſt " them in cutting down materials toward this building; " for the Sidonians underſtand it much better than we do. " As for the workmen's reward, or wages, whatever you " think reaſonable ſhall be punctually paid them."

Hiram was much pleaſed with Solomon's letter, and returned the following anſwer:

King Hiram to king Solomon,

" Nothing could have been more agreeable to me, than " to underſtand, that the government of your bleſſed fa- " ther is devolved by God's providence into the hands of " ſo excellent, ſo wiſe, and ſo virtuous a ſucceſſor; his " Holy Name be praiſed for it! That which you write " for, ſhall be accompliſhed with all care and good-will; " for I will give orders to go down and export ſuch quan- " tities of the faireſt cedars, and cypreſs-trees, as you " ſhall have occaſion for. My people ſhall bring them to " the ſea-ſide for you, and from thence ſhip them away to " what part you pleaſe, where they may be ready for " your own men to tranſport them to Jeruſalem. It would " be a great obligation, after all this, to allow us ſuch a " proviſion of corn in exchange, as may ſtand with your " convenience; for that is the commodity we iſlanders " want moſt."

Joſephus aſſures us, that the originals of theſe letters were extant in his time, both in the Jewiſh and Tyrian records; and they are entirely agreeable with what is related in this chapter upon the ſame ſubject: but it is ſomething extraordinary, that Euſebius, who calls this Tyrian king Suron, ſhould give us his letter to Solomon with ſo much variation from Joſephus. Hiram therein ſpecifies, that he had ſent to Solomon eighty thouſand Phœnicians and Tyrians.— That the architect he ſent him was a Tyrian by birth; but that by the mother's ſide he was deſcended from the tribe of David, &c.

The ſame Joſephus adds likewiſe, out of Dio and Menander, that Solomon and Hiram uſed to try each others capacity with riddles, and that the non-ſolvent was obliged to pay ſome conſiderable forfeit to the propoſer. So that Hiram having once received ſuch a one as he could not expound, was forced to pay Solomon a large ſum; which the Tyrian king, however, made him refund ſoon after, by getting one Abdemon, a Tyrian, to invent another, which proved too hard for that wiſe monarch.

Ver. 10. So Hiram gave Solomon cedar-trees, &c.] The cedar-trees of Lebanon making ſo noble a figure in the Sacred Books of the Old Teſtament, and having been anciently the pride of Syria, we hope a ſhort account of thoſe which are ſtill left will not be unacceptable to our readers. They are near a Chriſtian monaſtery, called Canobine, about ten hours journey from Tripoli, and they ſtand in the midſt of ſnow, near the higheſt part of Libanus, or Lebanon. Rauwolf, who viſited theſe cedars about Midſummer, complains of the rigour of the cold, and the ſnows which cover that part of the mountain. Radziville, who was there in June, about five years after him, talks of the ſnow that never melts. Other travellers expreſs themſelves to the ſame effect; among whom, our learned Dr. Maundrell repreſents theſe cedars growing in the midſt of ſnow, but he was there in the month of May. From all this we might have formed a judgment, that the cedars ſtand always in ſnow; but we are aſſured of the contrary, by De la Roque, according to whom, the ſnows begin to melt on the mountain in the month of April, and are no more to be ſeen after July; nor is, ſays he, any at all left, but in ſuch clifts of the mountain, as are inacceſſible to the ſun-beams: he adds, that the ſnow begins not to fall again till December, and that he himſelf, when he was there, ſaw no ſnow at all; and, it is probable, that he ſpeaks nothing but the truth.

Of the old cedars which are ſtill remaining, and are very large, there are only ſixteen; but there are great numbers of young ones of a leſſer growth. One of the largeſt of the former being meaſured, was found to be twelve yards ſix inches in girt, yet perfectly ſound, and the ſpread of its branches was twenty-two yards in diameter; and about five or ſix yards from the ground it divided it ſelf into five limbs, each equal to a great tree.

This noble tree bears a narrow leaf of a dark green, together with a cone like that of the pine-tree, but darker, and of a ſmoother coat. As theſe cedars ſpread out extremely, with a broad flat head, which is compared to the top of an umbrella, the weight of the ſnow that might lodge upon them at certain ſeaſons, would break down their branches; but to prevent this, they are reported to have the extraordinary faculty of preparing themſelves againſt ſo deſtructive a danger, by ſtretching their branches upward, till they form a cone, thereby exhibiting the ſmalleſt ſurface poſſible to the heavens, and by thoſe means preſerving themſelves from ruin.

The temple of Jeruſalem, and the palace of king Solomon were built with cedar; and there was ſo great a quantity of it in the temple, that it is ſometimes called Lebanon. "Open thy doors, O Lebanon." Zechar. xi. 1. and the houſe in which Solomon dwelt at Jeruſalem, is called the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon, 1 Kings vii. 2. The roof of the famous temple of Diana at Epheſus was likewiſe of cedar, according to the account we have of it from Pliny, lib. xvi. c. 40. Joſephus ſays, that Solomon planted cedars in Judæa, in ſo great a quantity, that they were as numerous in that country as ſycamores, which are very common trees there.

The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof againſt all putrefaction of animal bodies; and the ſawduſt of it is thought to be one of the ſecrets uſed by thoſe mountebanks, who pretend to be maſters of the embalming myſtery. This wood is alſo ſaid to yield an oil which is famous for preſerving books and writings; and the wood is thought, by lord Bacon, to continue ſound above a thouſand years. It is likewiſe recorded, that in the temple of Apollo Utica, there was found cedar-timber near two thouſand years old.

Ver. 11. And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thouſand meaſures of wheat for food to his houſhold, and twenty meaſures of pure oil.] In 2 Chron. ii. 10. it is ſaid, twenty thouſand baths of oil; but the Sacred Hiſtorian there ſpeaks of what was given to the workmen, who had other proviſions beſide, to ſupport them in their labours. But the author of this book of Kings ſpeaks here of what was given for the uſe of Hiram's family, as Kimchi and Ralbag ſolve this ſeeming contradiction.

Ver. 13. And king Solomon raiſed a levy out of all Iſrael, &c.] To cut down the trees, which Hiram's ſervants were to hew.

Ver. 14. And he ſent them to Lebanon, ten thouſand a month by courſes: a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home.] That they might not be fatigued by their labour, nor neglect their own families while they were employed abroad.

Ver. 15. And Solomon had threeſcore and ten thouſand that bare burdens.] Namely, porters, carmen, ſeamen, and ſuch like.

———And fourſcore thouſand hewers in the mountains.] That is, hewers of ſtone, for the timber was cut by Hiram's ſervants in Lebanon. And theſe hundred and fifty thouſand were not Iſraelites, as the thirty thouſand, mentioned in ver. 13. were, but ſtrangers of other nations, as may be gathered from chap. ix. 21, 22. It may ſeem ſtrange to ſome, that ſo many men ſhould be employed in building ſo ſmall a ſtructure as the temple was: but they muſt conſider, that there were many other works, which Solomon deſigned, and finiſhed, for which we read of no other preparation of materials, than what was now made.

Ver. 16. Beſides the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, three thouſand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.] In 2 Chron. ii. 18 they are ſaid to have been three thouſand and ſix hundred: for three hundred were overſeers even of the three thouſand three hundred, who were to be inſpectors over the reſt; that is, ſuperior officers, who ſurveyed the whole. Or, as Abarbinel takes it, there were three hundred ſupernumeraries, who were employed in the more exquiſite ſort of work; or, when any of the others failed, were ready to ſupply their places.

Ver. 17. And the king commanded, and they brought great ſtones, coſtly ſtones, and hewed ſtones, to lay the foundation of the houſe.] All things being now prepared, Solomon himſelf ſeems to have been preſent when the foundation of the houſe was laid; which foundation was not only very ſtrong and ſolid, but alſo exceedingly magnificent. For the king cauſed great ſtones to be laid for it, and ſome of great price, ſuch as marble, and thoſe alſo hewn and poliſhed, that they might lie more regular and even. Which ſhews the nobleneſs of his mind, in making that which was not expoſed to open view ſuitable to that which was ſeen.

Ver. 18. And Solomon's builders, and Hiram's builders did hew them.] It ſeems, Solomon's ſervants were directed by thoſe of Hiram, to aſſiſt in the work.

———And the ſtone ſquarers.] Or, the Giblites, as it is in the margin, who are mentioned, Joſh. xiii. 5. being Phœnicians, who inhabited Gabala, a promontory mentioned by Pliny; and were the moſt excellent artiſts in thoſe parts.

CHAP. VI.

1 The building of Solomons temple. 5 The chambers thereof. 11 Gods promiſe unto it. 15 The cieling and adorning of it. 23 The cherubims. 31 The doors. 36 The court. 37 The time of building it.

AND it came to paſs in the four hundred and fourſcore year after the children of Iſrael were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomons reign over Iſrael, in the month Zif, which is the ſecond month, that he began to build the houſe of the LORD.

2 And the houſe which king Solomon built for the LORD, the length thereof was threeſcore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.

3 And the porch before the temple of the houſe, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the houſe; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof before the houſe.

4 And for the houſe he made windows of narrow lights.

5 ¶ And againſt the wall of the houſe he built chambers round about, againſt the walls of the houſe round about, both of the temple, and of the oracle: and he made chambers round about.

6 The nethermoſt chamber was five cubits broad, and the middle was ſix cubits broad, and the third was ſeven cubits broad: for without in the wall of the houſe he made narrowed reſts round about, that the beams ſhould not be faſtned in the walls of the houſe.

7 And the houſe, when it was in building, was built of ſtone, made ready before it was brought thither: ſo that there was neither hammer, nor ax, nor any tool of iron heard in the houſe, while it was in building.

8 The door for the middle chamber was in the right ſide of the houſe: and they went up with winding ſtairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.

9 So he built the houſe and finiſhed it; and covered the houſe with beams and boards of cedar.

10 And then he built chambers againſt all the houſe, five cubits high: and they reſted on the houſe with timber of cedar.

11 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Solomon, ſaying,

12 Concerning this houſe, which thou art in building, if thou wilt walk in my ſtatutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them: then will I perform my word with thee, which I ſpake unto David thy father.

13 And I will dwell among the children of Iſrael, and will not forſake my people Iſrael.

14 So Solomon built the houſe, and finiſhed it.

15 And he built the walls of the houſe within with boards of cedar, both the floor of the houſe, and the walls of the cieling, and he covered them on the inſide with wood, and covered the floor of the houſe with planks of fir.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the ſides of the houſe, both the floor, and the walls with boards of cedar: he even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the moſt holy place.

17 And the houſe, that is, the temple, before it, was forty cubits long.

18 And the cedar of the houſe within was carved with knops, and open flowers: all was cedar, there was no ſtone ſeen.

19 And the oracle he prepared in the houſe within, to ſet there the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

20 And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with pure gold, and ſo covered the altar which was of cedar.

21 So Solomon overlaid the houſe within with pure gold: and he made a partition, by the chains of gold before the oracle, and he overlaid it with gold.

22 And the whole houſe he overlaid with gold, until he had finiſhed all the houſe: alſo the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

23 ¶ And within the oracle he made two cherubims of olive-tree, each ten cubits high.

24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub: from the uttermoſt part of the one wing unto the uttermoſt part of the other, were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubims were of one meaſure, and one ſize.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and ſo was it of the other cherub.

27 And he ſet the cherubims within the inner houſe; and they ſtretched forth the wings of the cherubims, ſo that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall: and their wings touched one another in the midſt of the houſe.

28 And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the houſe round about with carved figures of cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers within and without.

30 And the floor of the houſe he overlaid with gold, within and without.

31 ¶ And for the entring of the oracle he made doors of olive-tree: the lintel and ſide-poſts were a fifth part of the wall.

32 The two doors alſo were of olive-tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and ſpread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm-trees.

33 So alſo made he for the door of the temple, poſts of olive-tree, a fourth part of the wall.

34 And the two doors were of fir-tree: the two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

35 And he carved thereon cherubims, and palm-trees, and open flowers: and covered them with gold, fitted upon the carved work.

36 ¶ And

36 ¶ And he built the inner court with three rows of hewed ſtone, and a row of cedar-beams.

37 ¶ In the fourth year was the foundation of the houſe of the LORD laid, in the month Zif.

38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul (which is the eighth month) was the houſe finiſhed throughout all the parts thereof, and according to all the faſhion of it: So was he ſeven years in building it.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs in the four hundred and fourſcore year after the children of Iſrael were come out of the land of Egypt.] Theſe years are variouſly computed by the Jewiſh doctors; but we ſhall only obſerve, that they are plainly divided into two intervals, by the words of Jephthah to the Ammonites, Judges xi. 26. where he tells them, the Iſraelites had dwelt in the land of Canaan three hundred years: Unto which if we add the forty years, during which they wandered in the wilderneſs, there were three hundred and forty years paſt at that time, ſince they came out of Egypt. And ſo the other interval from that period was an hundred and forty years.

—— In the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Iſrael.] If it be asked, why he did not begin to build the temple ſooner, according to the command of his father David, who left him all neceſſary materials, ſuch as gold, ſilver, braſs, &c. for that ſtructure, and alſo a draught of it, ſo that he might have entered upon the work when he began his reign? Abarbinel anſwers, that Solomon would not make uſe of what his father had prepared but reſolved to build the houſe at his own expence, and to depoſite in the treaſury of the Lord's houſe the treaſure which David had dedicated to this work, chap. vii. 51. And therefore he ſtood in need of four years time, to collect ſo much gold and ſilver, as would be neceſſary to defray the charges of it.

—— In the month Zif, which is the ſecond month, that he began to build the houſe of the Lord.] This great work was begun on Monday the ſecond day of the month Zif, which anſwers to the twenty-firſt of our April; being the ſecond month of the ſacred, and eighth of the civil year.

We pretend to no knowledge of the temple but what we have from ſcripture in expreſs words, and from the clear ſenſe of them; and where theſe fail, we only beg to be allowed the uſe of criticiſm, and reaſonable or plauſible conjecture; for beyond theſe we have no other evidence. How great ſoever the learning of ſome moderns may be, yet what they aſſert has no weight, unleſs they can bring ſuch manner of proof as we intend to uſe. As for ancient authors, we have none to produce, beſide Joſephus and other Jews, rather of a later date than he. Now all we might learn from them, that has no foundation in Holy Writ, to us is no evidence at all. Much they knew, or pretended to know, from tradition; but that, we preſume, is no ſolid evidence. We know no monuments beſide thoſe we have ourſelves. And the Hebrew tongue, properly ſo called, being a ſort of dead language at the time when theſe authors wrote, it may well be doubted, whether they could underſtand it better than thoſe who ſtudy it at preſent. Nay more, it might be ſhewn, were this a proper place for ſuch a digreſſion, that Joſephus himſelf underſtood not ſome of thoſe Hebrew words he pretends to explain in his Hiſtory of the Jews.

Ver. 2. And the houſe which king Solomon built for the Lord, the length thereof was threeſcore cubits.] Forty of which belonged to the holy place, and twenty to the moſt holy.

The Jewiſh cubits were ſomething longer than ours, tho' how much is not agreed. The moſt received opinion fixes them from twenty to twenty-one inches. Some indeed would increaſe the cubit to a greater length, and others reduce it to ours of eighteen inches, for which we think they have no good authority.

—— And the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.] This height of thirty cubits muſt be underſtood of the Holy place, for the altitude of the Holy of Holies was no more than twenty cubits.

Ver. 3. And the porch before the temple of the houſe, &c.] Before the ſanctuary ſtood a porch; twenty cubits was the length thereof, and ten cubits was the breadth thereof, as this verſe declares. As for the wall between the porch and the temple, any one may ſee it ought to be there admitted, tho never expreſly mentioned by the Sacred Hiſtorian. We ſay, it appears to have been of great uſe, not only for the better ſupport of the building, but alſo to ſeparate the temple from the porch belonging to it; that ſo this temple might ſtand wholly by itſelf, and alſo be ſhut up, when there was occaſion for it.

Ver. 4. And for the houſe he made windows of narrow lights.] Or, as it is in the margin, "broad within, and "narrow without." By which means the houſe was better ſecured from the weather, and yet had light enough.

Ver. 5. And againſt the wall of the houſe he built chambers round about, againſt the wall of the houſe round about, both of the temple, and of the oracle.] The nethermoſt of theſe chambers is ſaid to be five cubits broad, ver. 6. But no mention is made of their length. Joſephus tells us, they were thirty in number all round the temple, which, it may be, he took from that of Ezekiel, who ſays, "The "ſide chambers were three, one over another, and thirty "in order," Ezek. xli. 6. So that thirty being multiplied by three, according to the number of ſtories, thoſe chambers will amount in all to ninety; and they are called the nethermoſt, the middle, and the third, ver. 6. Such a number might eaſily be placed about the houſe, ſuppoſing each of them to have been five cubits in length as well as height; for in the breadth they differed from five to ſix, and from ſix to ſeven; the reaſon of which is given in the ſixth verſe, "for without in the wall of the houſe he made "narrowed neſts round about, that the beams ſhould not "be faſtned in the walls of the houſe." The Hebrew which our tranſlators have rendered, by narrowed neſts in the text, is tranſlated, narrowings, or rebatements, in the margin. The meaning therefore ſeems to be, that the wall to which theſe chambers were adjoined, was thicker below than above, ſo that there was more ſpace for making the upper chambers wider.

Theſe chambers, however, will appear ſomething ſmall, and ſo indeed Joſephus calls them; but if their uſe was well known, that might afford us ſome light into this matter; but concerning their uſe, we find only, that Joas was hidden in the bed-chamber belonging to the temple, 2 Kings xi. 2. The Hebrew word Heder, or Cheder, which is rendered bed-chamber, ſeems to be underſtood of one of the three ſtories about the temple, where might be the beds for the prieſts in waiting, and among thoſe rooms, or chambers, one, or more, eſpecially reſerved or ſet apart for the high-prieſt; which ought therefore to have been a retired place, and not eaſily acceſſible but to himſelf and his conſort, and thoſe they truſted. Theſe rooms are alſo called inner-parlours, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11. where for parlours the Hebrew hath Chadarim, and they are diſtinguiſhed from the lower apartments, Ganſakim (tranſlated treaſuries in our verſion, and likewiſe from the) upper rooms.

Taking it then for granted, that theſe chambers were chiefly or frequently intended for lodging rooms, we may venture to ſay, that they were ſufficiently ſpacious for that purpoſe, eſpecially thoſe of the middle and third ſtories, and the Jewiſh bed-chambers were generally upper rooms.

Ver. 7. And the houſe when it was in building, was built of ſtone, made ready before it was brought thither.] The ſtones were ſo fitted for their reſpective uſe and places, that they might be joined together without any other labour than diſpoſing them by or upon one another.

—— So that there was neither hammer nor ax, nor any tool of iron heard in the houſe, while it was laid in building.] Any one would think the ſenſe of theſe words ſufficiently plain; namely, that the ſtones were laid without any noiſe, there being nothing to be done but to join them together. The Jews, however, have been ſo abſurdly romantic as to fancy, that they were not hewn or poliſhed by by any inſtrument before they were brought to Jeruſalem, but that a worm called Samir, which God had created on purpoſe, did all the buſineſs, and that the ſtones of their own accord came to the temple, where the angels laid them in their proper place and order. Which fable was originally propagated by ſome ignorant perſon who did not underſtand the meaning of the word Samir, which ſignifies a very hard ſtone called Smiris, with which other ſtones might be cut and poliſhed as diamonds are. This was an emblem, as moſt interpreters obſerve, of that peace and tranquility which ſhould reign in the Chriſtian Church, when all things relating to religion, ſhould be tranſacted without contention.

Ver. 8. The door of the middle chamber was in the right ſide of the houſe; and they went up with winding ſtairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.] We may well imagine, that an opening was left in the thickneſs of the wall for a pair of ſtairs to wind up to the ſecond ſtory of the chambers about the temple; and alſo a paſſage from the temple to the porch, for there might be ſeveral occaſions which required the miniſters of the temple to go up to thoſe chambers, as well as in and out of the temple, of which a detail is not neceſſary here.

Ver. 9. So he built the houſe and finiſhed it.] That is, the wall of the houſe.

——— And covered the houſe with beams and boards of cedar.] In the margin it is, the vaultings and the ceilings of cedar. That is, the roof was an arch within, which made it look more noble, but was flat without.

Ver. 10. And then he built chambers againſt all the houſe, five cubits high.] The word then is not in the Hebrew; and the omiſſion of it, makes it evident, that the Sacred Hiſtorian here gives an account of the height of thoſe chambers, as he before did of the breadth, ver. 6. But it is very briefly, and we are to underſtand, that thoſe below, thoſe in the middle, and thoſe above, were of an equal height; namely, five cubits. The altitude of the whole therefore was fifteen cubits, which were five leſs than the elevation of the houſe, for that was twenty cubits, otherwiſe there would have been no room for the windows, which, we ſuppoſe, were above all thoſe chambers in the upper part of the houſe.

Ver. 11. And the word of the Lord came to Solomon, ſaying,] By the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite, as the Jews ſay in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 20. For it is not ſaid, that God appeared to Solomon now, as he did, chap. iii. 5. and ix. 2. 3. In which latter place it is ſaid, God appeared to him the ſecond time. Which, as Abarbinel obſerves, is a proof that God did not now appear to this prince, but ſpake to him by a prophet.

Ver. 12. Concerning this houſe which thou art in building, if thou wilt walk in my ſtatutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them: then will I perform my word with thee, which I ſpake unto David thy father.] Abarbinel here makes a query, why this prophecy is inſerted in the middle of the deſcription of the work, when it might ſeem to have been more properly introduced at the beginning, or after it was compleated? But as Solomon laid the foundation, and raiſed the building with the utmoſt firmneſs and ſolidity, ſo that it might laſt for many generations, God would not have him preſume upon its duration, unleſs he and the people of Iſrael were obedient to him. And therefore told him, he had better not proceed, nor be at any farther charge, unleſs he intended to be a good man, and obſerve all the Divine Laws. And the continuance of this houſe, and of God's preſence among them depending on the rectitude of their conduct, plainly ſignified, that let Solomon build this fabric ever ſo ſtrong, it ſhould be demoliſh'd if he prov'd diſobedient.

Ver. 14. So Solomon built the houſe, and finiſhed it.] God ſpake the foregoing words, while Solomon was erecting the temple, that he might deſiſt, if he did not intend to perſevere in obedience to the Divine Majeſty: but the words before us import, that notwithſtanding this pre-admonition, the king continued to build the houſe as magnificent and durable as he firſt intended, becauſe he had formed a reſolution to keep God's commandments.

Ver. 15. And he built the walls of the houſe within with boards of cedar.] That is, he wainſcotted the whole houſe with this noble wood.

——— Both the floor of the houſe, and the walls of the cieling.] Or, as it is rendered in the margin, from the floor of the houſe to the walls of the cieling; that is, from the bottom to the top.

——— And he covered them on the inſide with wood.] The word them is not in the Hebrew, and it relates, if we retain it, to the walls of the cieling: That is, to the top of the houſe, which, on the inſide was covered with wood.

——— And covered the floor of the houſe with planks of fir.] Or, with another ſort of cedar, which was much firmer, and more durable than fir.

Ver. 16. And he built twenty cubits on the ſides of the houſe.] The houſe here meant, is the moſt Holy Place, for the Sacred Hiſtorian had ſpoken of the other part of the houſe, called the Sanctuary, in the foregoing words.

——— Both the floor, and the walls with boards of cedar.] Or, as in the preceding verſe, from the floor to the walls of the cieling.

——— He even built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the moſt holy place.] The Divine Writer here explains what he meant by the Houſe, in the beginning of the verſe. And this was moſt properly the Houſe of all the parts of the temple; becauſe here the Divine Glory reſided, and from hence God gave anſwers when he was conſulted.

The Hebrew word, which is here rendered oracle, is Debir, and it imports the ſame as Locutorium, a ſpeaking place; for there the Deity gave his orders or inſtructions to the high prieſt, his firſt miniſter. It was likewiſe called the oracle of the houſe, and moſt holy place, or, as the LXX have rendered it, holies of holies, Exod. xxv. 22. Numb. vii. 89. and, the holieſt of all, Heb. ix, 3.

The Septuagint have kept the Hebrew word, reading it δαβειρ, or δαβιρ, except in one place, where it is tranſlated ναὸς or temple.

Ver. 17. And the houſe.] Namely, the holy place, as the next words explain it.

——— That is, the temple before it.] The part of the houſe, which was before the moſt holy place. In the Hebrew the words are before my face: that is, before the place where the Divine Glory appeared.

——— Was forty cubits long.] This was double the length of the moſt holy place. See ver. 2. and 16.

Ver. 18. And the cedar of the houſe within was carved with knops.] Perhaps of an oblong figure like an egg, as ſome have thought, comparing this place with 2 Kings iv. where the like word occurs, and is there tranſlated Gourds.

——— And open flowers.] Not buds, but flowers, ſpread and full blown.

——— All was cedar, there was no ſtone ſeen.] This, we think, relates to the knops and flowers, which were all of cedar.

Ver 19. And the oracle he prepared in the houſe within, to ſet there the ark of the covenant of the Lord.] In the innermoſt part of the houſe he fitted the moſt holy place to receive the ark of God. It ſeems to be called the innermoſt part, becauſe it was fartheſt from the entrance into the building,

Ver. 20. And the oracle in the fore part was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof.] This oracle, which was a perfect ſquare, is ſaid to be in the fore part, becauſe it was before thoſe who entered into the houſe.

——— And he overlaid it with pure gold.] Not merely gilt it, but covered it with plates of gold; for the gold amounted to ſix hundred talents, 2 Chron. iii. 8.

——— And ſo covered the altar.] Of incenſe, which was before it in the holy place.

——— Which was of cedar.] Or, he covered the altar with cedar, that the gold might the better lie upon it.

Ver. 21. So Solomon overlaid the houſe within with pure gold.] That is the moſt holy place (called the oracle in the foregoing verſe) which he made as magnificent as he could, for the Divine Reſidence.

——— And he made a partition, by the chains of gold before the oracle.] The moſt holy place was ſeparated from the ſanctuary by a partition, before which was a veil alſo, which hung upon golden chains. Thus this paſſage is to be underſtood, for the partition itſelf did not depend upon chains.

——— And

——— And he overlaid it with gold.] That is, overlaid the partition.

Ver. 22. And the whole houſe he overlaid with gold.] This is meant of the ſanctuary, which was overlaid with gold, as well as the oracle.

——— Alſo the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.] That is, the altar of incenſe, thence called the golden altar, which was at the upper end of the ſanctuary, near the entrance into the oracle.

Ver. 23. And within the oracle he made the cherubims of olive-tree, each ten cubits high.] Theſe were different from thoſe made by Moſes, which were of ſolid gold, and roſe out of each end of the mercy-ſeat, being of one piece with it, and looking one upon the other, Exod. xxv. 18, 19. But theſe were made of olive-wood; or, as it is in the Hebrew, of tree of oil; for many ſuch ſorts of wood there were beſide olive; namely, pine, cedar, &c.

Ver. 28. And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.] There were four cherubims in the moſt holy place of Solomon's temple; two leſſer made by Moſes of maſſy gold, and two larger made by Solomon, and overlaid with gold. Thoſe made by Moſes were part of the mercy ſeat, and inſeparable from it; theſe of Solomon ſeem to have ſpread their wings over it, being added only, for the greater honour and glory of God's houſe. Solomon did not make a new ark, which was the only thing made by Moſes, which Solomon did not imitate, and make more glorious. But this he durſt not preſume to open, and take out the book of the law, to depoſite it in an ark of his own making; it being unlawful for him to touch it, and therefore he let it remain, with its cover, the mercy ſeat, and the cherubims belonging to it; and only placed his new cherubims over it, as a covering to it, and for the greater beauty of the houſe.

Ver. 29. And he carved all the walls of the houſe round about with carved figures of cherubims, and palm-trees, &c.] Both in the moſt holy place, and likewiſe in the ſanctuary.

Ver. 30. And the floor of the houſe he overlaid with gold, within and without.] The floor of the whole houſe both the inward and outward part, was overlaid with gold, which made it ſurpriſingly ſplendid and magnificent.

Ver. 31. And for the entring of the oracle he made doors of olive-tree.] Or of ſome tree that was oily.

———The lintel and ſide-poſts were a fifth part of the wall.] This paſſage is very obſcure: for the words, of the wall are not in the Hebrew; but only, a fifth. Which may be underſtood to ſignify, that the lintel and the ſide-poſts held a proportion of a fifth part of the doors. But there are ſome who think the meaning is, that this gate was the fifth in number belonging to the houſe. The firſt, they ſuppoſe, was that which opened into the court of the people: The ſecond, into the court of the prieſts: The third, was the door of the porch: The fourth, of the holy place: And this fifth, of the oracle. And accordingly they interpret thoſe words, ver. 33. the fourth.

Ver. 32. The two doors alſo were of olive-tree.] Or, as it is in the margin, the leaves of the doors, explaining what ſort of doors they were, namely, folding doors.

Ver. 33. So alſo made he for the door of the temple.] That is, of the holy place.

———Poſts of olive-tree a fourth part of the wall.] See the annotation on the latter part of ver. 31.

Ver. 36. And he built the inner court.] Which was that wherein the prieſts officiated, and it bore the name of the inner, with reſpect to another court which ſurrounded it.

———With three rows of hewed ſtone, and a row of cedar beams.] What theſe rows were, is not eaſy to explain. Some indeed, do not ſpare buildings that coſt them nothing, and of theſe rows make ſo many ſtories; but whether the ſingle Hebrew word tur, which ſignifies row, will uphold ſuch a heavy building we very much doubt. To us there appears to have been no more than a kind of parapet wall about four or five feet in height, and conſiſting of three rows of ſtone, one upon another, and a fourth of cedar beams over them. Such a wall as this was ſufficient to keep off the people from creating any obſtruction in the court of the prieſts, and, at the ſame time, was low enough to afford the Iſraelites without, a view of all that was tranſacting by the prieſts within.

CHAP. VII.

1 The building of Solomons houſe. 2 Of the houſe of Lebanon. 6 Of the porch of pillars. 7 Of the porch of judgment. 8 Of the houſe for Pharaohs daughter. 13 Hirams work of the two pillars. 23 Of the molten ſea. 27 Of the ten baſes. 38 Of the ten lavers. 40 And all the veſſels.

BUT Solomon was building his own houſe thirteen years, and he finiſhed all his houſe.

2 ¶ He built alſo the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon; the length thereof was a hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar-pillars, with cedar-beams upon the pillars.

3 And it was covered with cedar above upon the beams, that lay on forty-five pillars, fifteen in a row.

4 And there were windows in three rows, and light was againſt light in three ranks.

5 And all the doors and poſts were ſquare, with the windows: and light was againſt light in three ranks.

6 ¶ And he made a porch of pillars; the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits: and the porch was before them: and the other pillars and the thick beam were before them.

7 ¶ Then he made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment: and it was covered with cedar from one ſide of the floor to the other.

8 ¶ And his houſe where he dwelt, had another court within the porch, which was of the like work. Solomon made alſo an houſe for Pharaohs daughter (whom he had taken to wife) like unto this porch.

9 All theſe were of coſtly ſtones, according to the meaſures of hewed ſtones, ſawed with ſaws, within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping, and ſo on the outſide toward the great court.

10 And the foundation was of coſtly ſtones, even great ſtones; ſtones of ten cubits, and ſtones of eight cubits.

11 And above were coſtly ſtones (after the meaſures of hewed ſtones) and cedars.

12 And the great court round about, was with three rows of hewed ſtones, and a row of cedar-beams, both for the inner court of the houſe of the LORD, and for the porch of the houſe.

13 ¶ And king Solomon ſent and fet Hiram out of Tyre.

14 He was a widows ſon of the tribe of Naphtali, and his father was a man of Tyre, a worker in braſs: and he was filled with wiſdom and underſtanding, and cunning to work all works in braſs; and he came to king Solomon, and wrought all his work.

15 For he caſt two pillars of braſs, of eighteen cubits high a-piece: and a line of twelve cubits did compaſs either of them about.

16 And he made two chapiters of molten braſs, to ſet upon the tops of the pillars: the height of the one chapiter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapiter was five cubits:

17 And nets of checker-work, and wreathes of chain-work, for the chapiters which were upon the top of the pillars; ſeven for the one chapiter, and ſeven for the other chapiter.

18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one net-work, to cover the chapiters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and ſo did he for the other chapiter.

19 And the chapiters that were upon the top of the pillars, were of lily-work in the porch, four cubits.

20 And the chapiters upon the two pillars had pomegranates alſo above, over againſt the belly which was by the net-work: and the pomegranates were two hundred, in rows round about upon the other chapiter.

21 And he ſet up the pillars in the porch of the temple: and he ſet up the right pillar, and called the name thereof Jachin: and he ſet up the left pillar, and called the name thereof Boaz.

22 And upon the top of the pillars was lily-work: ſo was the work of the pillars finiſhed.

23 ¶ And he made a molten ſea, ten cubits from the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compaſs it round about.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were knops compaſſing it, ten in a cubit, compaſſing the ſea round about: the knops were caſt in two rows, when it was caſt.

25 It ſtood upon twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the weſt, and three looking toward the ſouth, and three looking toward the eaſt: and the ſea was ſet above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

26 And it was an hand-breadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies: it contained two thouſand baths.

27 ¶ And he made ten baſes of braſs; four cubits was the length of one baſe, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

28 And the work of the baſes was on this manner: They had borders, and the borders were between the ledges:

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubims: and upon the ledges there was a baſe above: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

30 And every baſe had four braſen wheels, and plates of braſs: and the four corners thereof had underſetters: under the laver were underſetters molten, at the ſide of every addition.

31 And the mouth of it within the chapiter and above was a cubit: but the mouth thereof was round after the work of the baſe, a cubit and an half: and alſo upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, four-ſquare, not round.

32 And under the borders were four wheels: and the axle-trees of the wheels were joined to the baſe, and the height of a wheel was a cubit and half a cubit.

33 And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot-wheel: their axle-trees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their ſpokes were all molten.

34 And there were four underſetters to the four corners of one baſe: and the underſetters were of the very baſe it ſelf.

35 And in the top of the baſe was there a round compaſs of half a cubit high: and on the top of the baſe, the ledges thereof, and the borders thereof were of the ſame.

36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he graved cherubims, lions, and palm-trees, according to the proportion of every one, and additions round about.

37 After this manner he made the ten baſes: all of them had one caſting, one meaſure, and one ſize.

38 ¶ Then made he ten lavers of braſs:

one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten baſes, one laver.

39 And he put five baſes on the right ſide of the houſe, and five on the left ſide of the houſe: and he ſet the ſea on the right ſide of the houſe eaſt-ward, over-againſt the ſouth.

40 ¶ And Hiram made the lavers, and the ſhovels, and the baſons: ſo Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the houſe of the LORD.

41 The two pillars, and the two bowls of the chapiters that were on the top of the two pillars: and the two net-works to cover the two bowls of the chapiters, which were upon the top of the pillars:

42 And four hundred pomegranates for the two net-works, even two rows of pomegranates for one net-work, to cover the two bowls of the chapiters that were upon the pillars:

43 And the ten baſes, and ten lavers on the baſes:

44 And one ſea, and twelve oxen under the ſea:

45 And the pots, and the ſhovels, and the baſons: and all theſe veſſels which Hiram made to king Solomon, for the houſe of the LORD, were of bright braſs.

46 In the plain of Jordan did the king caſt them in the clay-ground, between Succoth and Zarthan.

47 And Solomon left all the veſſels unweighed, becauſe they were exceeding many: neither was the weight of the braſs found out.

48 And Solomon made all the veſſels that pertained unto the houſe of the LORD: the altar of gold, and the table of gold, whereupon the ſhew-bread was,

49 And the candleſticks of pure gold, five on the right ſide, and five on the left, before the oracle, with the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs of gold,

50 And the bowls, and the ſnuffers, and the baſons, and the ſpoons, and the cenſers of pure gold; and the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner houſe, the moſt holy place, and for the doors of the houſe, to wit, of the temple.

51 So was ended all the work that king Solomon made for the houſe of the LORD: and Solomon brought in the things which David his father had dedicated; even the ſilver, and the gold, and the veſſels did he put among the treaſures of the houſe of the LORD.

Ver. 1. But Solomon was building his own houſe thirteen years, &c.] He did not begin his own houſe till he had finiſhed the temple of God; that nothing might obſtruct that holy work.

Ver. 2. He built alſo the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon.] The palace mentioned in the firſt verſe was in Jeruſalem, near to which Solomon built this ſecond houſe in a cool ſhady mountain, which, ſays biſhop Patrick, made it reſemble mount Lebanon. Others think this houſe received its name from its being built in the foreſt of Lebanon, after Solomon had taken the city of Hamath-zobah, (Vid. Jun. in loc. and 2 Chron. viii. 3.) But this is improbable; for Lebanon was in the very extremity of his kingdom, where he would hardly have ſet his throne, as he ſeems to have done in this houſe, ver. 7. for that was too far diſtant from the uſual place of his reſidence; and for the ſame reaſon he would not have there placed the golden ſhields which he made, chap. x. 17. It was therefore in or near Jeruſalem, as appears from chap. xiv. 25, 26. and this houſe, as well as the city of David, had the name of the foreſt of Lebanon, by reaſon of the prodigious quantities of cedar, and other trees which had been brought from that mountain to build the temple, together with this palace, and other ſumptuous edifices; inſomuch that it ſeemed as if Lebanon had been tranſported to Jeruſalem.

——— The length thereof was a hundred cubits.] Which was not longer than the houſe of God, if we take in all the courts belonging to it.

——— And the height thereof thirty cubits.] The height of the firſt ſtory was ſo many cubits: upon which, in all probability, another of the like, or near of the ſame height, was erected.

——— Upon four rows of cedar-pillars, with cedar-beams upon the pillars.] The pillars ſupported the firſt ſtory, and the floor of the next was laid upon the cedar-beams.

Ver. 3. And it was covered with cedar above upon the beams, that lay on forty-five pillars, fifteen in a row.] So there were but three rows of pillars in the ſecond ſtory, which were ſufficient for the ſupport of the roof. And we may gueſs from hence, that there were threeſcore pillars below.

In order to avoid prolixity, we ſhall only take notice of thoſe paſſages in this and other deſcriptions of Solomon's buildings, and works, that may ſeem to require ſome explication.

Ver. 6. And he made a porch of pillars, &c.] This was for his guard, and for other people to walk in, who came about buſineſs; as well as for ſtate and ornament: And was therefore covered, to keep them dry in rainy weather.

——— And the porch was before them.] That is, before the pillars of this palace.

——— And the other pillars, and the thick beam were before them.] That is, they were directly oppoſite one to the other. Or, if we follow the marginal tranſlation, [according to them] the ſenſe is, that this porch had its pillars and beams, juſt like the palace, and, perhaps, rooms built on thoſe beams for ſervants.

Ver. 7. Then he made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment.] It was ſo called, becauſe here Solomon ſat, to hear and determine the cauſes which were brought before him by the people. With whom he would not have his palace cumbred; and therefore built this porch without that palace.

Ver. 8. And his houſe where he dwelt, had another court within the porch, which was of the like work.] There was a court between the porch and the houſe, which may be called the inner court: And then another beyond the porch, which may be ſtyled the outward. So that the porch was ſituated between two courts, which were both alike.

—Solomon made alſo an houſe for Pharaoh's daughter.] Doubtleſs near his houſe, ſhe being a perſon of the higheſt quality, and his firſt wife.

——Like unto this porch.] Not for figure or bigneſs; but for the materials of which it was built.

Ver.

Ver. 9. All these were of costly stones.] That is, all the buildings described here, and in the preceding chapter.

——According to the measures of hewed stones.] Either, first, which were hewed in such measure and proportion, as exact workmen used to hew ordinary stones. Or, secondly, they were as large as common hewed stones, which are sometimes very great.

——Sawed with saws, within and without.] They were polished both on the in-side of the buildings, which were covered with cedar, and on the out-side also.

——Even from the foundation unto the coping.] From the bottom of the building to the top.

——And so on the out-side toward the great court.] Not only on the front of the house, but likewise on the back part of it, toward the great court belonging to the king's house.

Ver. 12. And the great court round about.] Namely, the great court of Solomon's palace.

——Was with three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar-beams.] See the annotation on chap. vi. 36.

——Both for the inner court of the house of the Lord.] Or rather, as for the inner court, &c. for so the particle vau sometimes signifies. That is, as it was in that inner court of which the very same account is given, chap. vi. 36.

——And for the porch of the house.] Of Solomon's own house.

Ver. 13. And king Solomon sent and fet Hiram out of Tyre.] For tho' he was an Israelite by birth, yet he dwelt at Tyre, where he enjoyed the privileges of that city, and so was one of king Hiram's subjects.

Ver. 14. He was a widow's son of the tribe of Naphtali.] She herself was of the tribe of Dan, 2 Chron. ii. 14. but her first husband, by whom she had this son, was of the tribe of Naphtali.

——And his father was a man of Tyre.] When the mother of Hiram was a widow, she married a man of Tyre, who is called Hiram's father, because he bred him up, and was the husband of his mother.

——A worker in brass.] And likewise in gold and silver, iron, stone, and timber, &c. as appears by 2 Chron. ii. 14. But brass is only mentioned here, because the Sacred Historian here intended to speak only of such works.

——And he came to king Solomon, and wrought all his work.] The king soon found him to be an excellent artist, and so employed him in all his works.

Ver. 15. For he cast two pillars of brass, of eighteen cubits high a-piece.] In reckoning the height of these two pillars, there is some difficulty, for in this verse each of them is said to have been eighteen cubits high; but the author of the Chronicles declares, that two pillars were made thirty and five cubits high, 2 Chron. iii. 15. but it is evident, that he there reckons the measure of them both jointly together, and declares they were five and thirty cubits long, that is, both together were of that length, but severally they were seventeen cubits and a half, a-piece, in height. Now the other half cubit, which is reckoned by the author of this book of the Kings, in the verse before us, where it is said, that they were eighteen cubits high a-piece, was taken up within the chapiter, which being a long massy piece of brass, the pillar must needs be let something into it, as a tenon into a mortise, to make it fast; which tenon was half a cubit; so that the pillar was eighteen cubits high, tho' there were only seventeen and a half appearing. It was likewise said of these pillars, that the chapiters were five cubits high, ver. 16. but in 2 Kings xxv. 17. the author declares, that these chapiters were but three cubits in height. But it is to be observed, that it is immediately added in that place, that there was wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapiters, which, in all, made five cubits, and are here comprehended in the word chapiter.

Ver. 17. And nets of checker-work, and wreaths of chain-work, for the chapiters which were upon the tops of the pillars.] This curious work compassed each chapiter, and contained, as it were, the pomegranates afterward mentioned; which might be seen through these nets.

——Seven for the one chapiter, and seven for the other chapiter.] Some think, that each chapiter was adorned with leaves, and flowers, and fruit, in four orders; which were bound about with three chains. But it is extremely difficult to explain this work, which is so very briefly described.

Ver. 18. And he made the pillars.] That is, he finished them in this manner.

——And two rows round about upon the one net-work, to cover the chapiters that were upon the top with pomegranates.] There were two rows of pomegranates; which took up one of the five cubits, of which the chapiter consisted.

Ver. 19. And the chapiters that were upon the top of the pillars were of lily work.] They were ornamented with an artificial foliage, which resembled the leaves of lilies, in the same manner as the Corinthian capital is adorned with the leaves of the acanthus.

——In the porch.] Or rather, "as in the porch," that is, the work was of the same nature with that in the porch of the temple, where these pillars were placed, ver. 21. so that the work of the tops of these pillars might agree with that in the top of the porch.

Ver. 20. And the chapiters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over-against the belly which was by the net-work.] This is very obscure; but we think the meaning is, that the lily work being above and below, at the top and the bottom of the chapiters, the middle cubit, called the belly, was all covered with pomegranates.

——And the pomegranates were two hundred, in rows round about upon the other chapiter.] These pomegranates are variously represented in Scripture. They are said to be "ninety and six on a side of a pillar;" that is, in one row, and in all an hundred, Jer. lii. 23. four great pomegranates between the several checker works being added to the first ninety-six. And it must needs be granted, that there were as many on the other side of the pillar, or in the other row, which make the whole two hundred upon a pillar, as it is said in this verse before us; and four hundred upon both pillars, as they are numbred, 2 Chron. iv. 13.

Ver. 21. And he set up the pillars in the porch of the temple: and he set up the right pillar, and called the name thereof Jachin: and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof Boaz.] It is supposed, that Solomon had respect to the pillar of the cloud, and the pillar of fire, which went before the Israelites, and conducted them in the wilderness; and was the token of the Divine Providence over them: And thus Solomon set them up in the porch of the temple, hoping and praying that the Divine light, and the cloud of God's glory, would vouchsafe to enter in there; and that by them God and his Providence would dwell among them in this house. The pillar on the right-hand represented the pillar of the cloud; and that on the left, the pillar of fire. Their names were Jachin and Boaz; the former of which signifies, he will establish; which intimates God's promise to establish the throne of David, and his people Israel. Boaz signifies, herein is strength; either alluding to the Divine promise, in which was all their strength and settlement; or, rather, to the ark which was within the temple, and was called "the "strength of the Lord," 2 Chron. vi. 42.

Ver. 22. And upon the top of the pillars was lily work.] This seems to have been said before, ver. 19. but the next words, "so was the work of the pillars finished," shew that this was a new addition, to crown all, after the pillars were erected; as Abarbinel observes.

Ver. 23. And he made a molten sea, &c.] The Hebrews call any great collection of waters by the name of a sea. So the lake of Genesaret and others have this appellation in the Gospel. The form of this molten sea is generally represented to us as an hemisphere, or like a round cup or goblet; because the Sacred Historian informs us, that "it "was round all about," and that there were "ten cubits "from the one brim to the other, and its height was five "cubits. It stood upon twelve oxen, three looking to-"ward the north, and three looking toward the west, and "three looking toward the south, and three looking to-"ward the east; and the sea was set above upon them, "and all their hinder parts were inward," ver. 23, 25. Josephus adds, that there was a twisted pillar of one cubit in thickness, under the middle of it, for a supporter: And that the oxen were placed in a position lower behind than before, which was both an easing to the weight, and kept it firm and ſteady. We are likewiſe informed, that it contained two thouſand baths, ver. 26. or about 250 hogſheads of our common meaſure. Now as a cubit is computed, by biſhop Cumberland, at 21 888 inches, (ſee his account of Scripture weights and meaſures, p. 34. to 57.) the diameter therefore muſt be 218.88 inches: And as the ſolid content of a bath is 1747 inches, or about eight gallons of our common meaſure, it is therefore very difficult to find ſufficient room in this ſea for containing ſo much water, or about 3494000 cubical inches. To remove this difficulty, we may ſuppoſe, firſt, that no braſs in this bulk was above an inch thick, and therefore, tho' there was an hand-breadth, or 3 648 inches, for the brim on the top thereof, (Cumberland's weights and meaſures, p. 57.) yet it was not ſo thick throughout; and this brim might be deſigned to prevent the water from running over. This will enlarge the ſea, ſo that the water ſhall be 224.176 inches from ſide to ſide, and conſtitute an hemiſphere of that bigneſs, which will accordingly contain 1684 baths, and no more. For as 7 is to 22, ſo is 224.176, the diameter of the water, to 704.553, the circumference at the brim; the half of which, or 352.276, being multiplied by half the diameter, or 112.088, makes 39485.912, for the area of the plain circumference; this multiplied by 4 makes 157543.648, for the ſurface of the whole ſphere; the third part of which, or 52514.549, being multiplied by half the diameter, or 112 088, gives 5886250.767, for the inches in the whole ſphere; which being divided by 1747, the cubical inches in a bath, the remainder will be 1684 baths in the whole, which fall ſhort of the two thouſand, mentioned ver. 26. by 316. This may be the reaſon why the contents of the ſea are not mention'd, either here, or in the Chronicles, till after the deſcription of the oxen: And thus, as the brazen ſea was of a prodigious bigneſs, ſo might the brazen oxen be of a proportionable ſize.

Theſe 1684 baths falling ſo much ſhort of the two thouſand mentioned ver. 26. in order to make up that deficiency, let us ſuppoſe a cavity in the ſupporter mentioned by Joſephus, which might contain 4 baths, or 32 gallons, and a cavity in each of the twelve oxen ſufficient to contain 26 baths, or three hogſheads and ſixteen gallons; the whole will then contain two thouſand baths; and ſo there might be conveyances with pipes from the feet of the oxen and the bottom of the ſupporter, to ſuch cocks which would let out the water as occaſion ſhould require.

But as there is a difficulty to find, how this ſea could contain two thouſand baths, ſo this difficulty is increaſed in the Chronicles, where we are told, that it received and held three thouſand baths, 2 Chron. iv. 5. In anſwer to which, it is agreed, that this whole maſs conſiſted of two parts, the upper and the lower: The upper part was the ſea itſelf, and the lower part was like a large round baſon, into which the water was convey'd by cocks from the ſea. Thus it was in the tabernacle in the wilderneſs, of which God ſpake to Moſes, "Thou ſhalt alſo make a laver of "braſs, and his foot alſo of braſs, to waſh withal; for "Aaron and his ſons ſhall waſh their hands and their "feet thereat, and it ſhall be a ſtatute for ever unto "him, and to his ſeed throughout their generations." Exod. xxx. 18, 19, 20, 21. As therefore the utenſils in the tabernacle reſembled thoſe in the temple, and the ſame ordinances were to continue; ſo we may be certain, that Solomon had the ſame conveniences, only much larger, becauſe the number of prieſts, who were to officiate therein, was much greater. Eupolemus ſpeaks of this baſon as twenty cubits broad every way. This, father Lamy corrects as an error, but perhaps without ſufficient ground, and would have him to mean but ten cubits; when perhaps the meaning of Eupolemus might be, that there was a ſolid pavement within the baſon of ten cubits, on which the feet of the oxen reſted, and five cubits of water on each ſide round about, ſo that the baſon, comprehending the pavement, was twenty cubits broad on each of its ſides. And the deſign being only for the prieſts to waſh their hands and feet therein, it ought to be ſhallow, to prevent any diſaſter; and broad, that many might come together to perform this act of purification. Maimonides declares, that Ben Catin made twelve cocks to the ſea, through which the water flowed, whereas before there were but two, that the prieſts might waſh together: And he adds, that there was a receptacle round the ſea, in which there was always water, and which was called its baſe. The author of the Chronicles, therefore, ſpeaks both of the upper and lower part together; and declares, that the braſen ſea, of which the baſon was a part, held three thouſand baths, becauſe the baſon contained one thouſand of thoſe three; but the author of this book of Kings ſaith, that it held but two thouſand, becauſe he only ſpeaks of the upper part, and takes no notice of that which was below, as not properly belonging to the braſen ſea, but only to its baſon or baſe.

There is ſtill another difficulty with relation to this molten ſea. For it is ſaid to be ten cubits from the one brim to the other, and round all about, and that a line of thirty cubits did compaſs it round about, ver. 23. Now if it was but a bare ten cubits, the line which compaſſed it about ought to be 31 ½ cubits; and as it was an hand breadth, or the ſixth part of a cubit thick, ver. 26. ſo the outer part of the brim muſt be ten cubits and about ſeven inches, and conſequently the line which compaſſed it about muſt be ſo much the longer. In anſwer to this, it is not ſaid, that a line of thirty cubits did compaſs it round at the brim, but that there was a particular place in the out-ſide of this ſea, where a ring of braſs, thirty cubits round, and caſt at the ſame time with the ſea, did compaſs it. There undoubtedly was ſome curious work round the brim to ſet it off; under this were knops compaſſing it, ten in a cubit, ſo that there were three hundred of them in a row; theſe were ſhaped like an egg, that they might have ſome reſemblance to the back of an ox, and at the lower part of theſe was the figure of an ox head, from the mouth of which the water is ſuppoſed to have guſhed, and therefore it is ſaid to be the ſimilitude of oxen which did compaſs it round about, 2 Chron. iv. 3. Of theſe there were two rows, or ſix hundred of them in all, which were caſt at firſt with the ſea, and under theſe we may ſuppoſe there was a ring, whoſe round contained thirty cubits, caſt in the ſame manner, and dividing the wrought from the plain work: And as the diameter of this veſſel was ten cubits and two ſpans, or about ſeven inches, ſo a line of thirty cubits to compaſs the whole, would be placed at ſuch a diſtance from the top, that if a line from the brim to the loweſt point was divided into four parts, one of thoſe parts would be above it, and three parts below it.

Ver. 27. And he made ten baſes of braſs.] Theſe were ſo many tables or ſtands, upon which the lavers, mentioned ver. 38. were to reſt.

——— Four cubits was the length of one baſe, and four cubits the breath thereof, and three cubits the height of it.] They were made ſo broad, that the lavers might ſtand the firmer, but the height was a cubit leſs than the breadth, that the prieſts might commodiouſly reach, ſo as to waſh the ſacrifices in them.

Ver. 28. And the work of the baſes was on this manner: They had borders.] To keep the lavers from ſliding off.

— And the borders were between the ledges.] The Hebrew words, which we tranſlate between the ledges, are rendered by the LXX ἀναμέσον τῶν ἐξεχομμένων, between the projections, and by the Vulgate, inter junctûras, between the junctures. Theſe ledges, or projections, are ſuppoſed to have been a kind of ſculpture, reſembling the denticles in the Ionic and Corinthian orders of architecture, in the corniſhes of which they formed an ornament bearing ſome reſemblance to teeth.

Ver. 29. And on the borders that were between the ledges were lions, oxen, and cherubims.] Oxen are called cherubims in Ezek. x. 14. Therefore the meaning here is, that beſide oxen, there were other cherubims (the figures of eagles perhaps) which ornamented theſe borders.

——— And upon the ledges there was a baſe above.] This baſe above we take to have been no more than the uppermoſt part of the baſe; for tho' it was above, yet it might be conſidered as a new baſe to the laver which ſtood upon it. This paſſage, however, is ſo darkly expreſſed, that the true meaning of it is very difficult to be apprehended.

——— And beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of this work.] Either as baſes for the feet of thoſe oxen and lions, or only as additional ornaments.

Ver. 30. And every baſe had four brazen wheels.] Theſe wheels were neceſſary, becauſe they rendered the baſes baſes and their lavers moveable from place to place, as the convenience of the prieſt required.

——And plates of braſs.] Between the wheels and the baſes, according to Dr. Lightfoot.

——And the four corners thereof had underſetters.] In the Hebrew, ſhoulders: And they were properly ſo called, becauſe as burdens are born upon the ſhoulders of men, ſo were the lavers upon thoſe, which ſupported them when they were ſet upon the baſes, and prevented them from falling when they were moved from one place to another by the wheels.

——Under the lavers were underſetters molten, at the ſide of every addition.] Theſe were molten with the baſes when they were caſt.

Ver. 31. And the mouth of it.] The baſes ſeem to have been hollow at the top, that the feet of the lavers might enter in and be faſtned there; and this vacuity is called the mouth.

——Within the chapiter.] Nothing of a chapiter is mentioned till now, and therefore it may be difficult to know what is meant by it, unleſs we conſider it as the baſe above, which has been already explained on ver 29. and may be here called the chapiter, becauſe it roſe up from, and ſtood above the great baſe, as the head doth above the reſt of the body.

——And above.] Above the chapiter, for the mouth aſcended and grew wider like a funnel.

——Was a cubit.] In height, ſee ver. 35. where it is ſaid, in the top of the baſe was there a round compaſs of half a cubit high. Which ſeems to be meant of this chapiter, which roſe but half a cubit above the baſe, the other half being within it.

——And alſo upon the mouth of it were gravings with their borders, four ſquare, not round.] So the innermoſt part, called the mouth, was round, but the outward part was ſquare, as when a circle is drawn within a quadrangle. This exterior part had likewiſe borders which were ornamented with engraven work.

Ver. 33. And the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot wheel.] Only the hinder and fore wheels were of an equal height.

Ver. 34. And there were four underſetters to the four corners of one baſe, and the underſetters were of the very baſe itſelf.] Theſe underſetters were mentioned before, ver. 30. but we are now informed of their number, and that they were of the ſame piece with the baſe itſelf, being caſt together with it.

Ver. 35. And on the top of the baſe was there a round compaſs of half a cubit high.] See ver. 31. with the annotation on it.

——And on the top of the baſe, the ledges thereof, and the borders thereof, were of the ſame.] That is, they were all caſt at one and the ſame time.

Ver. 36. For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he graved cherubims, lions and palm trees, according to the proportion of every one.] In the Hebrew it is, according to the nakedneſs of every one, which ſeems to imply, that theſe figures were as large as the void ſpaces in the plates would allow.

Ver. 38. Then made he ten lavers of braſs: one laver contained forty baths; and every laver was four cubits.] If theſe lavers had been made in the form of an hemiſphere, each of them would have contained a hundred baths. For four cubits containing 87.552 inches, as 7 is to 22, ſo is the diameter 87.552 to the circumference 275.163; the half of which being multiplied by the half of the diameter, the total is 6024.1516, the content of the area within the circle, which being multiplied by 4, the total will be 24096.6066, for the circumference of the ſphere, the third part whereof being multiplied by 43.786 the ſemi-diameter, the total is 351698, the half of which is 175849, or the cubical inches contained in a laver, which being divided by 1747, the inches in a bath, the remainder is a hundred baths.

If, on the other hand, theſe lavers were made in the form of a cylinder, whoſe height is not mentioned, forty baths would fill about twelve inches in height in each of theſe cylinders, which were four cubits in diameter. For as there are 1747 cubical inches in a bath, ſo forty baths would contain 69880 inches; and there being 6024 cubical inches in the area of ſuch a cylinder, ſo the ſaid ſum multiplied by 12, produces 72288, which are ſomething more than the inches in 40 baths, and prove the lavers to have been of ſuch a ſhape.

And theſe different ſhapes of the molten ſea and the lavers, might be the reaſon of the different expreſſions in which it is ſaid, that the molten ſea was round all about; and only that every laver was four cubits.

Ver. 40. And Hiram made the lavers, and the ſhovels, and the baſons, &c.] Theſe ſeem to have been the laſt things which he made; and ſo he finiſhed the whole work, which in the ſubſequent verſes is recapitulated with the addition of ſome other articles not mentioned before.

Ver. 46. In the plain of Jordan did the king caſt them in the clay ground, between Succoth and Zarthan.] The words in the Hebrew which are tranſlated clay ground, properly ſignify in the thickneſs of the ground. That is, the earth was ſtiff and glutinous, and therefore more fit to make molds of all kinds. And in a level country, ſuch molds were more eaſily fixed, than on the ſides of hills, or ſteep places.

The plain of Jordan undoubtedly denotes the flat country through which the river Jordan ſhapes its courſe, before it diſcharges itſelf into the body of waters, call'd Lacus Aſphaltites, or the Dead Sea: But by Moſes, the Salt Sea, Gen. xiv. 3. That this ſea is bounded on the north by the plain of Jericho we are aſſured by Mr. Maundrel, who was an eye-witneſs of it, but how much farther the plain of Jordan (in which that of Jericho is comprehended) ſtretches itſelf is not very eaſy to determine. It is evident, however, from the paſſage before us, that it extends as high northward, as the place where Succoth ſtood. And Succoth being by the general agreement of geographers placed not far ſouth of the ſea of Cinnereth or Galilee, hence it appears, that the plain of Jordan comprehended the greateſt part of the flat country, through which the Jordan runs from its flow out of the ſea of Galilee, to its fall into the Dead, or Salt Sea.

Zarthan, or Zaretan, was not far from Succoth, and conſequently at no great diſtance from the ſouthern part of the ſea of Galilee.

Ver. 50. And the bowls, and the ſnuffers, and the baſons, and the ſpoons, and the cenſers, of pure gold.] The firſt of theſe utenſils was to keep oil for the lamps; the next to trim them. The baſons, which were an hundred, as we learn from the book of Chronicles, were to receive the water of ſprinkling, and the blood of the ſacrifices, which was ſometimes brought into the Moſt Holy Place. The ſpoons ſerved to take up the oil; the cenſers were for offering incenſe; tho' ſome tranſlate this word, diſh-pans, wherein the incenſe was kept. There were other cenſers of ſilver, which received the coals from the altar upon all days, but the tenth of Tiſri, which was the great day of expiation, when the golden cenſer received them, and by it the Moſt Holy Place was incenſed. On other days it was not employed, but at the altar of incenſe; where the coals were poured out of the ſilver cenſer (which received them from the altar of burnt-offerings) into the golden, to burn the incenſe as the Talmudiſts ſay, both in Codex Joma, and Tamid. Where they alſo declare, that the foregoing word capoth, which we tranſlate ſpoons, ſignifies a veſſel which contained the incenſe that was to be offered upon the coals in the golden cenſer.

——And the hinges of gold, both for the doors of the inner houſe, the moſt holy place, and for the doors of the houſe, to wit, of the temple.] This ſhews the vaſt riches of Solomon, and his great piety: which made him ſpare no coſt to beautify the houſe of God, and the meaneſt thing belonging to it. Whereby the people, who were ſo much affected with outward ſplendor, were preſerved from idolatry: for they could not ſee any place comparable to the temple of Solomon; there being nothing then in the whole world like it, for riches and glory.

CHAP. VIII.

1 The feaſt of the dedication of the temple. 12 and 54 Solomons bleſſing. 22 Solomons prayer. 62 His ſacrifice of peace-offerings.

THEN Solomon aſſembled the elders of Iſrael, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Iſrael, unto king Solomon, in Jeruſalem, that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD, out of the city of David, which is Zion.

2 And all the men of Iſrael aſſembled themſelves unto king Solomon, at the feaſt in the month Ethanim, which is the ſeventh month.

3 And all the elders of Iſrael came, and the prieſts took up the ark.

4 And they brought up the ark of the LORD, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy veſſels that were in the tabernacle, even thoſe did the prieſts and the Levites bring up.

5 And king Solomon, and all the congregation of Iſrael, that were aſſembled unto him, were with him before the ark, ſacrificing ſheep and oxen that could not be told nor numbred for multitude.

6 And the prieſts brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, into the oracle of the houſe to the moſt holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims.

7 For the cherubims ſpread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark, and the ſtaves thereof above.

8 And they drew out the ſtaves, that the ends of the ſtaves were ſeen out in the holy place before the oracle, and they were not ſeen without: and there they are unto this day.

9 There was nothing in the ark ſave the two tables of ſtone which Moſes put there at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Iſrael, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

10 And it came to paſs when the prieſts were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the houſe of the LORD.

11 So that the prieſts could not ſtand to miniſter, becauſe of the cloud: for the glory of the LORD had filled the houſe of the LORD.

12 ¶ Then ſpake Solomon, The LORD ſaid that he would dwell in the thick darkneſs.

13 I have ſurely built thee an houſe to dwell in, a ſettled place for thee to abide in for ever.

14 And the king turned his face about, and bleſſed all the congregation of Iſrael: (and all the congregation of Iſrael ſtood)

15 And he ſaid, Bleſſed be the LORD God of Iſrael, which ſpake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, ſaying, 16 Since the day that I brought forth my people Iſrael out of Egypt, I choſe no city out of all the tribes of Iſrael to build an houſe, that my name might be therein; but I choſe David to be over my people Iſrael.

17 And it was in the heart of David my father, to build an houſe for the name of the LORD God of Iſrael.

18 And the LORD ſaid unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build an houſe unto my name, thou didſt well that it was in thine heart:

19 Nevertheleſs, thou ſhalt not build the houſe, but thy ſon that ſhall come forth out of thy loyns, he ſhall build the houſe unto my name.

20 And the LORD hath performed his word that he ſpake, and I am riſen up in the room of David my father, and ſit on the throne of Iſrael, as the LORD promiſed, and have built an houſe for the name of the LORD God of Iſrael.

21 And I have ſet there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ And Solomon ſtood before the altar of the LORD in the preſence of all the congregation of Iſrael, and ſpread forth his hands toward heaven:

23 And he ſaid, LORD God of Iſrael, there is no God like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, who keepeſt covenant and mercy with thy ſervants, that walk before thee with all their heart:

24 Who haſt kept with thy ſervant David my father that thou promiſedſt him: thou ſpakeſt alſo with thy mouth, and haſt fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

25 Therefore now, LORD God of Iſrael, keep with thy ſervant David my father that thou promiſedſt him, ſaying, There ſhall not fail thee a man in my ſight to ſit on the throne of Iſrael; ſo that thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou haſt walked before me:

26 And now, O God of Iſrael, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou ſpakeſt unto thy ſervant David my father.

27 But will God in deed dwell on the earth? behold the heaven, and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee, how much leſs this houſe that I have builded?

28 Yet have thou reſpect unto the prayer of thy ſervant, and to his ſupplication, O LORD my God, to hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy ſervant prayeth before thee to day:

29 That thine eyes may be open toward this houſe night and day, even toward the place of which thou haſt ſaid, My name ſhall be there: that thou mayſt hearken unto the prayer which thy ſervant ſhall make towards this place.

30 And hearken thou to the ſupplication of thy ſervant, and of thy people Iſrael, when they ſhall pray towards this place: and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, and when thou heareſt, forgive.

31 ¶ If any man treſpaſs againſt his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him to cauſe him to ſwear, and the oath come before thine altar in this houſe:

32 Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy ſervants, condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head, and juſtifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteouſneſs.

33 ¶ When thy people Iſrael be ſmitten down before the enemy, becauſe they have ſinned againſt thee, and ſhall turn again to thee, and confeſs thy name, and pray, and make ſupplication unto thee in this houſe:

34 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the ſin of thy people Iſrael, and bring them again unto the land which thou gaveſt unto their fathers.

35 ¶ When heaven is ſhut up, and there is no rain, becauſe they have ſinned againſt thee; if they pray towards this place, and confeſs thy name, and turn from their ſin, when thou afflicteſt them:

36 Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the ſin of thy ſervants, and of thy people Iſrael, that thou teach them the good way wherein they ſhould walk, and give rain upon thy land which thou haſt given to thy people for an inheritance.

37 ¶ If there be in the land famine, if there be peſtilence, blaſting, mildew, locuſt, or if there be caterpiller; if their enemy beſiege them in the land of their cities, whatſoever plague, whatſoever ſickneſs there be;

38 What prayer and ſupplication ſoever be made by any man, or by all thy people Iſrael, which ſhall know every man the plague of his own heart, and ſpread forth his hands towards this houſe:

39 Then hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, and forgive, and do, and give to every man according to his ways, whoſe heart thou knoweſt; (for thou, even thou only knoweſt the hearts of all the children of men)

40 That they may fear thee all the days that they live, in the land which thou gaveſt unto our fathers.

41 Moreover, concerning a ſtranger that is not of thy people Iſrael, but cometh out of a far country, for thy names ſake;

42 (For they ſhall hear of thy great name, and of thy ſtrong hand, and of thy ſtretched out arm) when he ſhall come and pray towards this houſe:

43 Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the ſtranger calleth to thee for: that all people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Iſrael, and that they may know that this houſe which I have builded, is called by thy name.

44 ¶ If thy people go out to battle againſt their enemy, whitherſoever thou ſhalt ſend them, and ſhall pray unto the LORD toward the city which thou haſt choſen, and toward the houſe that I have built for thy name:

45 Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their ſupplication, and maintain their cauſe.

46 If they ſin againſt thee (for there is no man that ſinneth not) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, ſo that they carry them away captives unto the land of the enemy, far or near;

47 Yet if they ſhall bethink themſelves in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, and make ſupplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives, ſaying, We have ſinned, and have done perverſly, we have committed wickedneſs;

48 And ſo return unto thee with all their heart, and with all their ſoul, in the land of their enemies which led them away captive, and pray unto thee toward their land, which thou gaveſt unto their fathers, the city which thou haſt choſen, and the houſe which I have built for thy name:

49 Then hear thou their prayer and their ſupplication in heaven thy dwelling-place, and maintain their cauſe,

50 And forgive thy people that have ſinned againſt thee, and all their tranſgreſſions wherein they have tranſgreſſed againſt thee, and give them compaſſion before them who carried them captive, that they may have compaſſion on them:

51 For they be thy people and thine inheritance, which thou broughteſt forth out of Egypt, from the mids of the furnace of iron:

52 That thine eyes may be open unto the ſupplication of thy ſervant, and unto the ſupplication of thy people Iſrael, to hearken unto them in all that they call for unto thee.

53 For thou didſt ſeparate them from among all the people of the earth, to be thine inheritance, as thou ſpakeſt by the hand of Moſes thy ſervant, when thou broughteſt our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord GOD.

54 And it was ſo, that when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and ſupplication unto the LORD, he aroſe from before the altar of the LORD, from kneeling on his knees, with his hands ſpread up to heaven.

55 And he ſtood, and bleſſed all the congregation of Iſrael with a loud voice, ſaying, 56 Bleſſed be the LORD that hath given reſt unto his people Iſrael, according to all that he promiſed: there hath not failed one word of all his good promiſe, which he promiſed by the hand of Moſes his ſervant.

57 The LORD our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forſake us:

58 That he may incline our hearts unto him, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments, and his ſtatutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

59 And let theſe my words wherewith I have made ſupplication before the LORD, be nigh unto the LORD our God day and night, that he maintain the cauſe of his ſervant, and the cauſe of his people Iſrael at all times, as the matter ſhall require:

60 That all the people of the earth may know that the LORD is God, and that there is none elſe.

61 Let your heart therefore be perfect with the LORD our God, to walk in his ſtatutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.

62 ¶ And the king, and all Iſrael with him, offered ſacrifice before the LORD.

63 And Solomon offered a ſacrifice of peace-offerings, which he offered unto the LORD, two and twenty thouſand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thouſand ſheep: ſo the king and all the children of Iſrael dedicated the houſe of the LORD.

64 The ſame day did the king hallow the middle of the court that was before the houſe of the LORD: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings: becauſe the braſen altar that was before the LORD, was too little to receive the burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings.

65 And at that time Solomon held a feaſt, and all Iſrael with him, a great congregation, from the entring in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, ſeven days, and ſeven days, even fourteen days.

66 On the eighth day he ſent the people away: and they bleſſed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart, for all the goodneſs that the LORD had done for David his ſervant, and for Iſrael his people.

Ver. 1. Then Solomon aſſembled the elders of Iſrael, &c.] This great monarch, in order to celebrate the dedication of his new temple with greater magnificence, choſe to defer it till the next year, which was the jubilee, at which ſolemnity there was always a vaſt concourſe of people from all parts of the kingdom. The ceremony began on the third day of the ſeventh month of the Sacred Year, which was the firſt of the civil year, anſwering to the latter end of our October, and it laſted ſeven days; and on the 15th day began the feaſt of the tabernacles, which was one of the three ſolemn feaſts of the Iſraelites, and continued likewiſe ſeven days, ſo that the vaſt concourſe of people who were invited by the king, and flocked to that ſolemnity, ſtayed at leaſt twenty days in Jeruſalem. The ceremony opened with a pompous proceſſion, in which the prieſts carried the ark from the tabernacle which David had erected for its reception, to the temple, and depoſited that Sacred Pledge of the Divine Preſence in the Moſt Holy Place, between the two golden cherubims, which Solomon had cauſed to be made by Hiram, and to be ſet up there, as a kind of covering to the ark, in which the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, that "there was nothing "ſave the two tables of ſtone, which Moſes placed there "at Horeb," &c. Much the ſame words are repeated, 2 Chron. v. 10. but it is obſervable, that both theſe places ſeem to contradict the Apoſtle's words, Heb. ix. 4. For it is there ſaid, that the pot of manna likewiſe, and Aaron's rod, were in the ark. For ſo expoſitors generally tranſlate the words ἐν ᾗ in which, namely, in the ark, στάμνος χρυσῆ, the golden pot containing the manna, &c. But this ſeeming difficulty is ſolved by this eaſy obſervation, namely, that the prepoſition ἐν doth not always ſignify in, but ſometimes by, and ſo the cited paſſage in the Hebrews is to be rendered, not in which, but by which.

The

The king himself, accompanied by all his chief officers, and the elders of Israel, marched before the ark; these were followed by a great number of priests and Levites, who sang some canticles proper to that great occasion, and played upon various instruments, 2 Chron. v. 12. next to the ark followed another number of priests bearing the sacred utensils of the tabernacle, 2 Chron. v. 5. which had been brought from Gibeon. These utensils were not deposited in the sanctuary, because the king had caused a new set of them to be made, which were larger, and more agreeable to the spaciousness of the place, but were laid up in some other repository prepared for that purpose. To add the greater magnificence to the procession, the king ordered the ark to stop at proper distances. and there caused a prodigious number of victims to be offered up before it, till they had reached the sanctuary. While the priests were depositing the ark in the most Holy Place, the air rang with the sound of an hundred and twenty trumpets,and with the voices of the Levites who sang the praises of God, and at proper intervals repeated those words, Give thanks to the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth for ever, 2 Chron. v. 13. It was then that the awful Majesty of Heaven seemed to descend in a visible manner, to take possession, as it were, of his new temple, by filling it with a glorious cloud, as he had formerly done the tabernacle; insomuch that the priests could not stand to offer up the sacrifices, which they had prepared upon that occasion.

Ver. 12. Then spake Solomon.] When the king saw the priests come out of the house of God, in great consternation, he uttered the words which follow, with his face turned toward the altar, to compose and comfort them. This shews that the cloud filled the house before Solomon prayed: Whereas in 2 Chron. vii. 1, 2, 3. the Divine Glory is represented as not filling it till the king had finished his prayer. This seeming contradiction is judiciously reconciled by Abarbinel. "The cloud, says he, in which was "the glory of the Lord, or the fire, came into the tem- "ple before Solomon prayed; which made him say, The "Lord dwelleth in thick darkness, which the king behold- "ing, prayed to God, who gave such a sensible token of "his presence there. When he had made an end of his "prayer, the fire that was in the cloud broke forth, and "consumed the sacrifices on the altar: And the glory of "the Lord filled the house, as it is recorded in the book "of the Chronicles."

——The Lord said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.] Which was as much as to say, Be not terrified; but look upon this cloud as a token of God's presence and protection: And that he owns this for his house where he intends to reside, according to what he declared, Levit. xvi. 2.

Ver. 13. I have surely built thee an house to dwell in.] Here Solomon turns his speech from the people to God; and expresses his hope that he would condescend to continue in this house.

Ver. 14. And the king turned his face about.] From the court of the priests, to the court of the congregation, with his back to the altar.

——And blessed all the congregation of Israel (and all the congregation of Israel stood.)] Both out of reverence to the Divine Majesty, and respect to the king.

Ver. 15. And he said, Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying.] He acknowledges the goodness of God in his gracious promise, and his faithfulness in fulfilling it. Which promise was made by Nathan, to whom the word of the Lord came, 2 Sam. vii. 4.

Ver. 16. Since the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, I chose no city, &c.] God had often told the Israelites, that they should worship him in the place which he would choose; but he never declared his choice of a place till the time of David, 2 Sam. vii. 6.

Ver. 18. And the Lord said unto David my father, Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto my name, thou didst well, &c.] God commended the good intentions of David, but would not let him put them in execution. This honour being reserved for his son, as it follows in ver. 19.

Ver. 22. And Solomon stood before the altar of the Lord.] He, now turned again with his face toward the altar, to make a solemn prayer to God.

Ver. 23. And he said, Lord God of Israel, there is no God like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, &c.] He acknowledges the transcendent excellences of the Divine Majesty; and again commemorates his faithfulness to those who serve him with sincerity.

Ver. 24. Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him.] This relates to that part of God's promise to David, that his son should build him an house.

Ver. 25. Therefore now, Lord God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father, that thou promisedst him, saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel.] Solomon considered that as an earnest that God would accomplish the other part of his promise to David, which he made at the same time concerning his kindness to his posterity, 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13.

——So that thy children take heed to their way, &c.] He here speaks like a wise man, who was fully acquainted with the will of God: Whose promise concerning the inheritance of the kingdom, he acknowledges, depended upon this condition, if they took heed to their way, &c. that is, continued in the faith and worship of God, as David did.

Ver. 26. And now, O God of Israel, let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, &c.] This is not an unnecessary repetition; for God, when he spake to David of building the temple by his son, promised two things; first, the stability of the kingdom in his family, 2 Sam. vii. 16. and secondly, that he would shew the greatest kindness and friendship to them, as a father doth to his son, ver. 13. Solomon, in this prayer, implores God to grant both these blessings; the first in the foregoing verse, and the other in this.

Ver. 27. But will God indeed dwell on the earth? &c.] Solomon would not have the people possessed with such gross imaginations as were formed by the pagans, who fancied their gods were confined to their temples. No, says this great king, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot comprehend his infinite Majesty.

Ver. 28. Yet have thou respect to the prayer of thy servant, &c.] But he would have them know, that God, who could not be confined to any particular place, vouchsafed his special presence there, to grant the requests of those who piously made their supplications to him.

Ver. 29. That thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, &c.] He prays that God would have a gracious regard to all those who should come thither to offer up their petitions to him. For as in the former verse Solomon implores God to hear his own petitions, so in this he begs him to hear those of all pious worshippers.

——That thou mayst hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make toward this place.] He beseeches God to hear him, if he looked toward this place, in his prayer, tho' he should not be present at the temple when he preferred his petition. For thus it was customary for pious men to direct their prayer, when they were far distant from that sacred house; nay, when it was even demolished, Dan. vi. 10. And when they were at the temple, they could only direct their view toward the most Holy Place: For the people came no nearer than into the outward court of the temple, and the priests no farther than to the next court to it; except when they went to order the lamps, and burn incense, morning and evening, and renew the shew-bread. At all other times they stood and officiated at a distance, in the court appointed for them, called the court of the priests. The people, therefore, and priests stood in their several courts, and worshipped with their faces toward the temple, where the ark and mercy-seat were. From whence came the expression of worshipping the Lord "toward his holy temple;" and also of worshipping "toward his foot-stool." For if the glory of the Lord sat upon the cherubims, under which the ark stood, then this was his foot-stool.

Ver. 30. And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, &c.] Here Solomon intreats God to hear prayer, whether it was offered up by one, or by many.

——And hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place.] He directs the minds of the people up to heaven, where God resides in the highest majesty and glory; of which the bright cloud in the temple was a token and resemblance.

——— And when thou heareſt, forgive.] For ſins unpardoned would prevent his bleſſing from deſcending upon them.

Ver. 31. If any man treſpaſs againſt his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him to cauſe him to ſwear.] This ſeems to relate to ſuch as were accuſed of denying that which was ſaid to be depoſited with them by their neighbour; and who were to purge themſelves by oath, there being no witneſs to convict them.

——— And the oath come before thine altar in this houſe.] It was the cuſtom of all nations to touch the altar, when they made an oath; and, by this action, they called God to witneſs the truth of what they ſaid, and to puniſh them if they were guilty of falſhood.

Ver. 32. Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy ſervants, condemning the wicked, &c.] He deſires God to hear the complaint of him who had been defrauded, or unjuſtly accuſed; and ſhew who had right on his ſide, by puniſhing the offender, and acquitting the innocent perſon.

Ver. 33. When thy people Iſrael be ſmitten down before the enemy, becauſe they have ſinned againſt thee, and ſhall turn again to thee, and confeſs thy name, &c.] Acknowledge him to be God alone, and renounce all falſe gods.

Ver. 34. Then hear thou in heaven, and forgive the ſin of thy people Iſrael, &c.] Deliver them out of the captivity into which their enemies had carried them, and reſtore them to their own country.

Ver. 37. If there be in the land famine, if there be peſtilence, blaſting, mildew, locuſt, or if there be caterpiller.] Locuſts and caterpillers made great deſolations where they ſwarmed. Mildew alſo, as the Heathens themſelves were ſenſible, was a puniſhment inflicted from heaven. And therefore Numa Pompilius ordained a ſolemn feſtival call'd Rubigalia, in the beginning of May, to pray for their preſervation from this Rubigo, as they called it, which corrupted their corn.

——— If their enemy beſiege them in the land of their cities.] In their gates; whereby they ſhould be ſo ſtraitned, that none could go in or out.

——— Whatſoever plague, whatſoever ſickneſs there be.] The word plague ſignifies ſome extraordinary ſtroke by the hand of God.

Ver. 38. What prayer and ſupplication ſoever be made by any man, or by all thy people Iſrael.] Who in national calamities were wont to implore the Divine Mercy with public faſting and prayer; which, if they neglected, he intreats God not to reject the ſupplications of any particular perſon, who beſought his favour for himſelf and family.

——— Which ſhall know every man the plague of his own heart.] We are taught by Ezra, in 2 Chron. vi. 29. to underſtand theſe words of any private trouble or grief which any man laboured under. For ſo the words are there, When every one ſhall know his own ſore, and his own grief; that is, ſhall make his ſecret moan for any affliction which lies heavy upon his ſpirit.

Ver. 39. Then hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive, and do, and give to every man according to his ways, whoſe heart thou knoweſt.] Solomon would have the people know that God could not be deceived with words; and that they were to expect an anſwer from him, according to the ſincerity of their hearts, in their profeſſions of repentance.

Ver. 40. That they may fear thee all the days that they live in the land which thou gaveſt unto our fathers.] That the wonderful goodneſs of God might engage them to worſhip him alone, in a truly religious manner, all their days; and in conſequence thereof that they might poſſeſs, in peace and plenty, the good land he had beſtowed upon them.

Ver. 41. Moreover, concerning a ſtranger that is not of thy people Iſrael, but cometh out of a far country for thy name's ſake.] To become a proſelite to the true religion, and to worſhip God alone, tho' that ſtranger was not circumciſed, and conſequently not bound to keep the whole law. Such ſtrangers came to pray at the temple, tho' they were not permitted to offer any ſacrifices, except a burnt-offering. And therefore we may obſerve, that the Greeks are ſaid, in the New Teſtament, to come to a feaſt ἵνα προσκυνήσωσιν, that they might worſhip, not that they might keep the paſſover, John xii. 20. And the like is ſaid of the eunuch, Acts viii. 22.

Ver. 42. (For they ſhall hear of thy great name, and of thy ſtrong hand, and of thy ſtretched out arm)] They ſhould be informed of all the ſtupendious wonders God had wrought, and which declared him to be infinitely above all gods, the Moſt High, and Holy One.

——— When he ſhall come and pray towards this houſe.] Namely, in the court behind that of the Iſraelites, which was made on purpoſe for the religious uncircumciſed Gentiles; by which means, and likewiſe by the diſperſion of the Jews among other nations, many Heathens were brought to the acknowledgement of the only true God.

Ver. 43. Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the ſtranger calleth to thee for.] Solomon entertained the ſame ſentiments as St. Peter expreſſed; namely, "That God is no reſpecter of perſons, "but in every nation he that feareth God, and worketh "righteouſneſs, is accepted with him," Acts x. 35.

——— That all the people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Iſrael.] It is evident from hence, that truly good men, in ancient times, deſired all the Gentile world might be incorporated with them; unto which the Jews, in the time of our bleſſed Saviour, were unaccountably averſe.

——— And that they may know that this houſe which I have builded, is called by thy name.] May be convinced that this temple is honoured with thy glorious preſence.

Ver. 44. If thy people go out to battle againſt their enemy, whitherſoever thou ſhalt ſend them, and ſhall pray unto the Lord toward the city which thou haſt choſen, &c.] Some of the Jews are ſurpriſed that Solomon ſhould intermix his prayer for ſtrangers, with thoſe for the people of Iſrael, and not rather finiſh what he had to deſire for the Iſraelites, before he prayed for the Gentiles. If there be any thing in this, it was to ſhew that God made no difference between them and pious people of other nations.

Ver. 45. Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their ſupplication, and maintain their cauſe.] Give teſtimony to the juſtice of it, by crowning their arms with victory.

Ver. 46. If they ſin againſt thee, (for there is no man that ſinneth not) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy.] The infirmity of human nature, and its propenſity to ſin, will not excuſe wilful offences againſt God, eſpecially apoſtacy from him, which was the cauſe of all their calamities.

——— So that they carry them away captives, &c.] A good cauſe ſometimes miſcarries, for the iniquity of thoſe who are engaged in it.

Ver. 47. Yet if they ſhall bethink themſelves in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, &c.] This verſe and the next contain a full deſcription of true repentance; which begins to operate in the ſerious reflection which men make upon their paſt conduct, and the preſent miſeries in which their ſins have involved them; and begets an unfeigned ſorrow and reſolution of amendment, with earneſt ſupplication for mercy and grace; confeſſing themſelves unworthy of either, and condemning themſelves for their tranſgreſſions, and the provoking aggravations with which they are attended; which laſt concludes in their quitting that iniquitous courſe of life, and in their ſincere converſion to the ſervice of God.

Ver. 48. ——— And pray unto thee toward their land, which thou gaveſt unto their fathers, the city which thou haſt choſen, and the houſe which I have built for thy name.] The very looking toward this place with earneſt ſupplications for the mercy of God, and a fervent deſire of his gracious aid, was in effect to own him who dwelt there, and acknowledge him alone for their God; and was likewiſe a means to preſerve them from idolatry; all the other nations in the world turning their faces toward the eaſt, when they worſhipped, but the Jews to the weſt, where the holy temple was: And for this cauſe, when the temple and the holy city were deſtroyed, and the ark of the teſtimony was gone, yet good men looked and prayed toward the place where it was wont to be, as appears by the prophet Daniel; and therefore Solomon much more ſuppoſes they would do ſo, while the city and temple were ſtanding.

Ver.

Ver. 49. Then hear thou their prayer and their ſupplication in heaven thy dwelling place, and maintain their cauſe.] In the Hebrew it is, their right, which they had forfeited by their diſobedience, and unto which he prayed they might be reſtored upon their repentance.

Ver. 50. And forgive thy people that have ſinned againſt thee, and all their tranſgreſſions wherein they have tranſgreſſed againſt thee, and give them compaſſion before them who carried them captive, &c.] Cauſe their enemies to treat them with humanity, during the continuance of their captivity; and at laſt permit them to return to their own land. Solomon enlarges much upon this in the following verſes, as a matter of the greateſt importance; becauſe he knew the Iſraelites, as well as all other people, had a fatal propenſity to offend God, and might provoke him to expel them from the land he had beſtowed upon them.

Ver. 51. For they be thy people and thine inheritance.] For tho' they ſhould be ſo unhappy as to ſin againſt thee, and ſuffer by the ſevere treatment of other men, yet ſtill remember that they are thy peculiar people, and therefore condeſcend to pity and pardon, and ſave them.

——— Which thou broughteſt forth out of Egypt from the mids of the furnace of iron.] Whom thou didſt deliver from the cruel ſervitude of Egypt, where they ſuſtained the moſt rigorous oppreſſions.

Ver. 52. That thine eyes may be open unto the ſupplication of thy ſervant, and unto the ſupplication of thy people Iſrael, &c.] That it may appear that thou dwelleſt in this houſe, and haſt a regard to the penitent prayers that ſhall be here made unto thee.

Ver. 53. For thou didſt ſeparate them from among all the people of the earth to be thine inheritance.] Solomon here implores the Divine Mercy to Iſrael, in conſideration of the peculiar laws he had given them, in the obſervance of which, he beſeeches God to preſerve them.

——— As thou ſpakeſt by the hand of Moſes thy ſervant, when thou broughteſt our fathers out of Egypt, O Lord God.] It was not a mere angel who brought them out of Egypt, but they were conducted by the Divine Λόγος, to whom therefore this prayer of Solomon was addreſſed. For the SHECHINAH, or Divine Glory that ſettled in the temple, was this Divine Perſon, and not an angel perſonating God.

Ver. 56. Bleſſed be the Lord, that hath given reſt unto his people Iſrael according to all that he promiſed, &c.] The king having finiſhed his prayer to God, turned about again with his face the other way, from the altar to the people, and bleſſed them in a moſt ſolemn manner, ver. 54, 55. And he here celebrates again the faithfulneſs of God, which continued now as it had done in the days of Joſhua.

Ver. 57. The Lord God be with us as he was with our fathers, &c.] There could be no doubt of the Divine Bleſſing upon them, if they perſevered in their duty to God.

Ver. 58. That he may incline our hearts unto him, &c.] This was the greateſt bleſſing Solomon could ask for them, ſince it was the means to preſerve them in the favour of God.

Ver. 59. And let theſe my words wherewith I have made ſupplication before the Lord, be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night.] May this my prayer be ever acceptable to him.

——— That he maintain the cauſe of his ſervant, and the cauſe of his people Iſrael, at all times, as the matter ſhall require.] That is, according to the circumſtances of their condition, and the various exigences and neceſſities to which they might be reduced.

Ver. 60. That all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, &c.] That by his ſignal favours to the Iſraelites, the whole race of mankind might be invited to acknowledge him to be God alone.

Ver. 61. Let your heart therefore be perfect with the Lord our God, to walk in his ſtatutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.] When they were perfectly free from all falſe worſhip, and ſerved God alone; and Solomon exhorted them to perſevere in that amiable conduct with ſincerity of heart.

Ver. 62. And the king, and all Iſrael with him, offered ſacrifices before the Lord.] The prieſts had covered the ſpacious altar with proper victims, which aſſoon as Solomon had ended his prayer, and likewiſe his exhortation to the people, were conſumed by a miraculous fire, as a token of the Divine favour and acceptance, 2 Chron. vii. 1.

Ver. 63. And Solomon offered a ſacrifice of peace-offerings.] Beſide the burnt-offerings before-mentioned.

——— Two and twenty thouſand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thouſand ſheep.] Which could not be all offered upon that day, but during the continuance of that feſtival, which laſted fourteen days, ver. 65.

——— And all the children of Iſrael dedicated the houſe of the Lord.] This houſe was ſet apart for God's worſhip and ſervice, by the prayer of Solomon, and likewiſe by the ſacrifices, whereby all the people rendered thanks to God, and ſupplicated his future favours. For a place is properly ſaid to be dedicated, when it is firſt employed to that uſe for which it is thereafter intended.

Ver. 64. The ſame day did the king hallow the middle of the court that was before the houſe of the Lord.] That is, the court of the prieſts, which he did not conſecrate, for that was done before, but employed it to holy uſes: And ſo the name of God is ſaid to be hallowed or ſanctified by us, when we uſe it in a holy and reverential manner. The Gemara explains it thus, he hallowed it, that is, he ſet up another altar there.

——— For there he offered burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings.] Several altars were erected in the middle of the court, and indeed the whole court was little enough upon this occaſion.

——— Becauſe the brazen altar that was before the Lord.] Near the door of this court.

———Was too little to receive the burnt-offerings, &c.] Therefore, by a ſpecial licence from God, Solomon erected other altars, which were to ſerve no longer than the duration of this preſent ſolemnity, when ſuch a vaſt number of ſacrifices were to be offered. But afterward no other altar was to be allowed, but that one brazen altar, where God by Moſes appointed all ſacrifices to be offered, that the people might be preſerved in the worſhip of one God alone.

Ver. 65. And at that time Solomon held a feaſt, and all Iſrael with him.] Such feſtivals were uſual among the Heathens, when they celebrated the preſence of any of their gods; and it is very probable, that they derived that cuſtom from this famous feſtival of king Solomon.

——— A great congregation, from the entring in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt.] Hamath was a celebrated city of Syria, which we take to be Emeſa, upon the Orontes. The entring in of Hamath is the narrow paſs leading from the land of Canaan to Syria, through the valley which lies between Libanus and Antilibanus: and it was the northern boundary of the land of Canaan. Joſephus, and St. Jerom after him, believed Hamath to be Epiphania; but Theodoret, and many other good geographers, maintain it to be Emeſa in Syria.

Concerning the river of Egypt, ſee our annotation on Gen. xv. 18.

——— Before the Lord our God, ſeven days and ſeven days, even fourteen days.] Seven days were devoted to the feaſt of the dedication of the altar, and the other ſeven days were comprehended in the feaſt of tabernacles, which ſucceeded the other.

Ver. 66. On the eighth day he ſent the people away.] So Ezra likewiſe ſaith, 2 Chron. vii. 10. but adds, that it was the 23d day of the 7th month. Whereas the laſt day of the feaſt of tabernacles was the 22d day of the month. Solomon therefore took his leave of the people on the laſt day of that feſtival, and they ſet out for their reſpective habitations the next day. By this alſo it appears, that theſe fourteen days of feaſting were not all kept together, without intermiſſion: for the great day of expiation was on the tenth of this month; ſeven days before which, we ſuppoſe, the feaſt of dedication was kept, and then they reſted till the fifteenth, when the feaſt of tabernacles began.

——— And they bleſſed the king.] Prayed God to grant him a proſperous reign.

———And went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart, for all the goodneſs that the Lord had done for David his ſervant, and for Iſrael his people.] In the book of Chronicles it is added, and unto Solomon; but that is here included in the goodneſs of God to David, on whom he beſtowed ſuch a ſucceſſor. With whoſe magnificent entertainment tainment they were abundantly ſatisfied; and rejoiced exceedingly that God had accompliſhed ſuch great things for David and his family; and rendered all Iſrael happy in the great peace and plenty which they enjoyed, together with God's holy religion, which was now eſtabliſhed among them, in ſo glorious a manner.

CHAP. IX.

1 Gods covenant in a viſion with Solomon. 10 The mutual preſents of Solomon and Hiram. 15 In Solomons works the Gentiles were his bond-men, the Iſraelites honourable ſervants. 24 Pharaohs daughter removeth to her houſe. 25 Solomons yearly ſolemn ſacrifices. 26 His navy fetcheth gold from Ophir.

AND it came to paſs when Solomon had finiſhed the building of the houſe of the LORD, and the kings houſe, and all Solomons deſire which he was pleaſed to do,

2 That the LORD appeared to Solomon the ſecond time, as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.

3 And the LORD ſaid unto him, I have heard thy prayer and thy ſupplication that thou haſt made before me: I have hallowed this houſe which thou haſt built, to put my name there for ever, and mine eyes and mine heart ſhall be there perpetually.

4 And if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprightneſs, to do according to all that I have commanded thee, and wilt keep my ſtatutes and my judgments:

5 Then I will eſtabliſh the throne of thy kingdom upon Iſrael for ever, as I promiſed to David thy father, ſaying, There ſhall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Iſrael.

6 But if you ſhall at-all turn from following me, you or your children, and will not keep my commandments and my ſtatutes, which I have ſet before you, but go and ſerve other gods, and worſhip them:

7 Then will I cut off Iſrael out of the land which I have given them; and this houſe which I have hallowed for my name will I caſt out of my ſight, and Iſrael ſhall be a proverb, and a by-word among all people:

8 And at this houſe, which is high, every one that paſſeth by it ſhall be aſtoniſhed, and ſhall hiſs; and they ſhall ſay, Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and to this houſe?

9 And they ſhall anſwer, Becauſe they forſook the LORD their God, who brought forth their fathers out of the land of Egypt, and have taken hold upon other gods, and have worſhipped them, and ſerved them: therefore hath the LORD brought upon them all this evil.

10 ¶ And it came to paſs at the end of twenty years, when Solomon had built the two houſes, the houſe of the LORD, and the kings houſe, 11 (Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furniſhed Solomon with cedar-trees, and fir-trees, and with gold, according to all his deſire) that then king Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.

12 And Hiram came out from Tyre to ſee the cities which Solomon had given him, and they pleaſed him not.

13 And he ſaid, What cities are theſe which thou haſt given me, my brother? And he called them the land of Cabul unto this day.

14 And Hiram ſent to the king ſix ſcore talents of gold.

15 ¶ And this is the reaſon of the levy which king Solomon raiſed for to build the houſe of the LORD, and his own houſe, and Millo, and the wall of Jeruſalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer.

16 For Pharaoh king of Egypt had gone up, and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and ſlain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a preſent unto his daughter, Solomons wife.

17 And Solomon built Gezer, and Bethhoron the nether,

18 And Baalath, and Tadmor in the wilderneſs, in the land,

19 And all the cities of ſtore that Solomon had, and cities for his chariots, and cities for his horſemen, and that which Solomon deſired to build in Jeruſalem and in Lebanon, and in all the land of his dominion.

20 And all the people that were left of the Amorites, Hittites, Perizzites, Hivites, and Jebuſites, which were not of the children of Iſrael, 21 Their children that were left after them in the land, whom the children of Iſrael alſo were not able utterly to deſtroy, upon thoſe did Solomon levy a tribute of bond-ſervice unto this day.

22 But of the children of Iſrael did Solomon make no bond-men: but they were men of war, and his ſervants, and his princes, and his captains, and rulers of his chariots, and his horſemen.

23 Theſe

23 These were the chief of the officers that were over Solomons work, five hundred and fifty, which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

24 ¶ But Pharaohs daughter came up out of the city of David, unto her house which Solomon had built for her: then did he build Millo.

25 ¶ And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, upon the altar which he built unto the LORD, and he burnt incense upon the altar that was before the LORD: so he finished the house.

26 ¶ And king Solomon made a navy of ships in Ezion-geber, which is beside Eloth on the shore of the Red-sea, in the land of Edom.

27 And Hiram sent in the navy his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon.

28 And they came to Ophir, and fet from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.

Ver. 1, 2. And it came to pass when Solomon had finished the building of the house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all Solomon's desire which he was pleased to do, That the Lord appeared to Solomon the second time, as he had appeared unto him at Gibeon.] There are two very different opinions with relation to the time when this Divine vision was imparted to Solomon. Some think it was after he had finished his several buildings, and had attained to the utmost height of human grandeur and prosperity, by succeeding in all his enterprizes: and they alledge the words of the Sacred Text before us, to corroborate that opinion. If it be objected to them, that it seems strange that the Divine Majesty should not reveal this purpose and sentence of his concerning the temple, till so many years after its completion; they tell you, it must be considered, First, that as all revelations from God to mankind, are acts of his singular grace, so it is but fit that he should choose his own time for them. Secondly, that God had already, at the dedication of the temple, manifested his approbation of it, by the glorious cloud which filled that sacred structure, and by the celestial fire, which consumed the sacrifices on the altar; and therefore the revelation contained in the former part of this chapter was not then necessary. Thirdly, that God might choose this as the fittest time for giving Solomon the following admonition, when his heart began to be elated by his extraordinary grandeur and prosperity; and when he, therefore, most needed such an awakening oracle. Others, on the contrary, maintain, that God appeared to Solomon, either on the first night of the dedication, or on the very next night after he had dismissed the people; as may be naturally concluded from the matter of this revelation, which seems best to suit with that time, when the temple was newly built, and when Solomon's prayer, mentioned in this revelation, was newly made. To which it may be added, that as this revelation contains an answer to that prayer, it seems improbable that such an answer should be made so many years after the prayer had been offered up by Solomon. This opinion, therefore, appears to us most consonant to reason; and if it be objected, that it seems contradictory to the express declaration of the Sacred Text, which informs us, that God did not appear to Solomon this second time, till he had finished the house of the Lord, and the king's house, &c. we think the proper answer will be, that the second verse of this chapter, and those that follow, to verse 11. are to be considered as a parenthesis; and our translators, instead of rendering the beginning of the second verse, "That the Lord appeared to Solomon," should have translated it, "For the Lord had appeared "to Solomon," &c. for the Hebrew particle vau is frequently expounded for. This parenthesis seems to have a foundation in ver. 10. where the first verse of this chapter is repeated in substance, as is usual after long digressions. Nor is a parenthesis of this length without example in the Sacred Scriptures; see Poole's Latin Synopsis, on Rom. v. 12, &c. Ephesians iii. 1, &c. Revel. xxii. 7. The sense then of the passage before us is this, "And it came to "pass when Solomon had finished the building of the "house of the Lord, and the king's house, and all Solo-"mon's desire which he was pleased to do: (For the "Lord had appeared to Solomon the second time, and "acquainted him, that he had heard his prayer; and "promised to establish his throne, and grant him the "accomplishment of his desires, if he would continue "obedient to the Divine Laws, &c.")

Ver. 3. And the Lord said unto him, I have heard thy prayer and supplication that thou hast made before me, &c.] I have heard the prayer thou hast so lately offered up, and have hallowed this house which thou hast built, by the glorious cloud which filled it; and by the fire which descended from heaven to consume the sacrifices, I have testified my acceptance of them. "Mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually:" by which thou art to understand, that my watchful and gracious providence, my tender love and affection, shall be manifested to this place and people. "And if thou wilt walk before me", in all things relating to religion and civil government, after the example of David thy father, then will I establish thy throne, with an intention to accomplish my former promise to David; and the regal power shall be perpetuated to the successors of thy race. But if you and your children shall at any time apostatize from my service to idolatry, and introduce by your example a general corruption of manners among the people committed to your care, be assured, that I will extirpate Israel out of the land which I have given them; and this house, which I have hallowed for my name, shall no longer be honoured with my gracious presence; but shall be rendered a subject of astonishment and mockery to all nations, because of the destruction which I will then bring upon it. And when the Heathen shall ask, out of scorn and derision, Why is this famous place, which was once so distinguished by the favour of God, now laid in ruins? The answer shall be, Because they had the ingratitude to forsake the God of all their mercies, who delivered their forefathers from the inglorious bondage and captivity under which they groaned in Egypt: and tho' they have been so highly distinguished by a series of innumerable blessings, they have basely rejected their Divine Benefactor, as if they had been satiated with his tender mercies; and have been so stupid as to embrace the worship of such gods as were as senseless as themselves. Therefore has the Lord abandoned them to the ignominious calamities they now sustain, and has justly render'd them the scorn of all the nations around them.

Ver. 11. (Now Hiram the king of Tyre had furnished Solomon with cedar-trees, and fir-trees, and with gold, according to all his desire) that then king Solomon gave Hiram twenty cities in the land of Galilee.] Solomon having now compleated his buildings, resolved to shew himself grateful to the king of Tyre, who had been so assistant to him in those sumptuous works; and he accordingly offered him twenty cities in the land of Galilee, or rather near or adjoining to that country, as the particle beth frequently signifies. These cities were adjacent to the territories of Hiram, and were not comprehended in the land of Canaan, as it was divided among the Israelites; for that being God's peculiar heritage could not be alienated. They were therefore cities out of the dominions of Israel, and had been conquered partly by Pharaoh, who gave them to Solomon as part of his daughter's portion, and partly by Solomon himself, who therefore had power to dispose of them, especially as they were not then inhabited by the Israelites. Some think, that Solomon never intended to give Hiram a perpetual right and property in them, but only the possession and enjoyment of them, till the debt was satisfied, which Solomon had contracted, by the assistance which Hiram afforded him in building the temple and his palaces. Hiram coming to ſee theſe cities, found them not to be ſuch as were agreeable to his purpoſe, and the genius of his people. For the Tyrians were chiefly addicted to merchandize, being moſt commodiouſly ſituated for that purpoſe, and therefore they would not remove from the ſea-coaſts, to live in a ſoil which was very fat and deep, and required great labour to manure it, which they had not been accuſtomed to. For this reaſon Hiram ſaid to Solomon, What cities are theſe which thou haſt given me, my brother? ver. 13. Not that theſe were words of contempt; for it is not likely, that Solomon, who had been greatly obliged to the Tyrian king, and was of a very generous diſpoſition, would offer him that which was inconſiderable in value; but the meaning is, that theſe cities were not proper for his purpoſe; for which reaſon Hiram reſtored them to Solomon, who undoubtedly made him ſome other recompence, more adequate to his occaſions.

Hiram expreſſed his diſlike of theſe cities, by calling them the land of Cabul, ver. 13. which, according to ſome, ſignifies a dirty country. Joſephus derives Cabul from a Phœnician word, which ſignifies diſlike, or diſpleaſing, as it is tranſlated in the margin of our Bibles; for Chabulon, according to that author, ſignifies as much as οὐκ ἀρέσκον, that which doth not pleaſe, (Archæol. lib. 8. cap. 2.) But the LXX ſeem to have underſtood the word better, and tranſlate it ὅριον, the term or bound: as if Cabul were the ſame with Gebul, the Hebrew letters caph and gimel being frequently changed for each other, as has been obſerved by Bochart, who approves of this ſignification of the word.

Ver. 14. And Hiram ſent to the king ſix ſcore talents of gold.] It may be better tranſlated, "and Hiram had ſent," &c. See ver. 11. where the reaſon is given why Solomon offered him ſo rich a country. Six ſcore talents of gold are equal to 15000 l. ſterling.

Ver. 15. And this is the reaſon of the levy which king Solomon raiſed.] That the raiſing a great tribute upon the people, and employing ſo many men in his works, might not ſeem ſtrange, the Sacred Hiſtorian here declares the great and numerous buildings of Solomon to be the cauſe of the levy he raiſed. But Mr. Selden hath ſhewn, by many inſtances, that the word mas is uſed not only for pecuniary tribute, but likewiſe for corporeal labour. And therefore he interprets this paſſage thus, This is the cauſe of requiring the labour and work of ſo many men. Which cauſe when the Holy Writer of this book had declared, namely, Solomon's great buildings, he then proceeds, ver. 20. to relate, who the perſons were whom the king employ'd in his ſervice.

——— For to build the houſe of the Lord, and his own houſe.] Of which we have already given an account.

——— And Millo.] The Hebrew word millo, or mello, ſignifies filled up, and Abarbinel thinks this name was given to a large and beautiful place near mount Sion, where the Iſraelites uſually aſſembled for their recreation; and which, becauſe it was full of people, was called Millo. David had built round about Sion, from Millo inward, as we read, 2 Sam. v. 9. but had left Millo itſelf unfiniſhed; and it was now compleated by Solomon. But then this Millo is, by many learned men, thought to be the deep valley between mount Sion, on which the city of David was built, and mount Moriah, on which the temple was erected; and that David began to cauſe this valley to be filled up, but dying before he had finiſhed that work, Solomon was at the charge of compleating it, that there might be a convenient paſſage from the king's palace to the temple. The probability of this opinion inclines us to adhere to it.

——— And the wall of Jeruſalem.] Which comprehended a large quantity of building, for there were three walls one within another, as Abarbinel and Joſephus explain it. The inner wall incloſed the temple and the king's palace; the middle wall ſurrounded the habitations of the prophets, and great perſons; and the third compaſſed the houſes of the inferior people.

——— And Hazor.] Which had been an eminent city, and the head of ſome kingdoms, before the conqueſt of Canaan, Joſh. xi. 10. and was given to the tribe of Naphtali, Joſh. xix. 36. Solomon either rebuilt, or fortified this city, and it was ſeated on the lake Semechon.

——— And Megiddo.] Megiddo, or Magedo, was a city in the tribe of Manaſſeh, famous for the defeat of king Joſiah, who was overcome and ſlain by Pharaoh-Nechoh, king of Egypt, 2 Kings xxiii. 29. Herodotus takes notice of this victory, and declares that Nechoh obtained it at Magdolos, (Lib. ii. cap. 159.)

——— And Gezer.] This was an ancient town in Canaan, and was under the dominion of a king when Joſhua conquered the country. In the diviſion of the land, it was allotted to the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 3. It border'd upon the northern part of the country of the Philiſtines, and was not far from the Mediterranean ſhore: It was likewiſe one of the forty-eight cities, which with their ſuburbs were conſigned to the Levites, Joſh. xxi. 21. It is called Gazera, in the firſt book of the Maccabees, chap. iv. ver. 15. and is mentioned as not far from Joppa, Azotus, and Jamnia.

Ver. 16. For Pharaoh, king of Egypt, had gone up and taken Gezer, and burnt it with fire, and ſlain the Canaanites that dwelt in the city, and given it for a preſent unto his daughter, Solomon's wife.] What provocation Pharaoh had to deſtroy this city is not recorded; but he laid it aſhes, and utterly extirpated the Canaanites, by whom it was inhabited. This expedition is thought to have been before the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, and was the firſt which the Egyptians made out of their own country, as Sir John Marſham thinks, in his Can. Chron. Seculum. 14.

Pharaoh perhaps had begun to repair this city, and upon the marriage of his daughter, made a preſent of it to Solomon, who compleated the reparation of it.

Ver. 17. And Solomon built Gezer, and Beth-horon the nether.] That is, having finiſhed the building of Gezer, he built the lower Beth-horon, which was in the tribe of Benjamin, Joſh. xviii. 13, 14. Ezra informs us, that Soloman likewiſe built Beth-horon the upper, 2 Chron. viii. 5. which was in the tribe of Ephraim, Joſh. xvi. 5. but is not mentioned here, either becauſe it was not a place of ſo great conſequence as the other, or did not need ſo much reparation.

Ver. 18. And Baalath.] There was a city of this name in the tribe of Dan, Joſh. xix. 44. But the Baalath here mentioned is ſuppoſed by ſome to have been a city near Tadmor, where Baal had been formerly worſhipped by the inhabitants; for Baal was one of the gods of that people.

——— And Tadmor in the wilderneſs, in the land.] Of Hamath-Zoba, a part of Syria, as Ezra ſeems to expound it, 2 Chron. viii. 3, 4. which country Solomon had conquered.

The city of Tadmor, whoſe venerable and ſtately ruins demonſtrate with ſo much evidence the once happy ſtate thereof, ſufficiently diſcovers itſelf to be the ſame city, which Solomon, the great king of Iſrael, is ſaid to have founded, under that name, in the deſert. Mr. Hallifax, in his deſcription of Tadmor, calls it Palmyra, which he derives from the plants about it, and ſuppoſes it to be the tranſlation of a Hebrew word, importing a palm. The very learned Dr. Edmund Halley derives it from Παλμυὸς, or, Πάλμυς, which Heſychius interprets βασιλεὺς πατὴρ, king father; or rather, as the Doctor adds, from Παλμύτης, Palmytes, which, according to the ſame Heſychius, was the name of an Egyptian god. Seller is of another mind, and cannot think of deducing the word Palmyra from Πάλμυς, and much leſs from Παλμύτης, an Egyptian god; for what, ſays he, had the gods of Egypt to do ſo near the banks of Euphrates? He derives it therefore, from πάλμη, palme, a Perſian ſhield, or parma, as the Latins render it. But we prefer the opinion of Shultens, in his geographical commentary on the two names, Tadmor, and Palmyra. He obſerves, that the former of theſe names is written Tamor, in the Sacred Text, and Tadmor in the margin. He ſuppoſes, that this renowned city was uſually called Tamor, for ſoftneſs ſake, and he will have it refer to Tamor, the palm, with which this part of the country abounded. He likewiſe thinks, that the Arabians did not originally ſpell it Tadmor, but Tatmor, and thus he accordingly finds it, in his Arabic geographical Lexicon; as if you ſhould ſay palmiferous, or palm-bearing, the t, for ſound-ſake, being changed into d. The alteration of this name he aſcribes wholly to the Romans, who, upon finding the place called Tadmor, or Tadmur, may at firſt have corrupted it into Talmura; but, ſoon after, underſtanding ſtanding the city received its name from its palm-trees, they converted Talmura, into Palmura, whence Palmyra.

Hiſtory is ſilent as to the fate of this city, during the great revolutions of the ſeveral empires of the eaſt; but it may well be ſuppoſed, as the above-mentioned Dr. Halley obſerves, that ſo advanced a gariſon as this was, being above three hundred miles from Jeruſalem, continued not long in the poſſeſſion of the Jews, who, immediately after the death of Solomon, fell into civil diſſentions, and divided their force: So that it is not to be doubted, but that it ſubmitted to the Babylonian and Perſian monarchies, and afterward to the Macedonians, under Alexander, and the Seleucidæ. But when the Romans got footing in theſe parts, and the Parthians ſeemed to put a ſtop to their farther conqueſts in the eaſt, then was this city of Tadmor, or Palmyra, by reaſon of its ſituation, it being a frontier, and in the midſt of a vaſt ſandy deſert, where armies could not well ſubſiſt, ſo as to reduce it by force, courted and careſſed by the contending princes, and permitted to continue a free ſtate, a mart, or ſtaple for trade, for the convenience of both empires; as is abundantly made out from the words of Appian and Pliny. [Appian De Bell. Civil. lib. v. Plin. Nat. Hiſt. lib. v.]

With theſe advantages of freedom, neutrality, and trade, for near two centuries, it is not ſtrange that Tadmor acquired the ſtate and wealth anſwerable to the magnificence of its noble ſtructures, whoſe ſuperb ruins are ſtill to be ſeen. But when the Romans, under Trajan, had made it appear, that there was no compariſon between the Parthian power and their own, Trajan having taken Babylon and Cteſiphon, the then ſeat of the Parthian empire, the Palmyreni were at length determined to declare for the Romans; which they did, by ſubmitting themſelves to the emperor Adrian, about the year of our Lord 130, when Adrian made his progreſs through Syria into Egypt. And that magnificent emperor, being exceedingly delighted with the native ſtrength and ſituation of the place, was pleaſed to adorn it with many glorious ſtructures; and probably beſtowed upon it, at the ſame time, the privileges of a colony Juris Italici, which it enjoyed, as Ulpian aſſures us; and the inhabitants of the city, in gratitude, were willing to call themſelves Hadrianopolitæ. Nor is it unlikely, that many of thoſe marble pillars, which are ſtill to be ſeen there, were the gift of that emperor, and particularly thoſe of the long portico; for none of the numerous inſcriptions there are before that date; and it was uſual for the Cæſars to preſent cities that had obliged them, with marble columns to adorn their public buildings. The materials of thoſe at Tadmor were not far to fetch, the neighbouring mountains affording the marble quarries: But the magnitude of the porphyry colums is indeed very remarkable, conſidering how far thoſe vaſt ſtones muſt have been brought by land-carriage to this place; it being not known that any other quarries yield it, except thoſe of Egypt, which lie about mid-way between al Kâhira (commonly called Cairo) and Syene, between the Nile and the Red-ſea; the ſtone being very valuable for its colour and hardneſs, and likewiſe for its riſing in blocks of any magnitude required. And it is a great miſtake of thoſe who ſuppoſe it factitious.

From the time of Adrian to that of Aurelian, which comprehends about 140 years, this city continued to flouriſh, and increaſe in opulence and power, to ſuch a degree, that when the emperor Valerian was taken priſoner by Sapores, king of Perſia, Odænathus, one of the lords of this town (which name occurs in ſeveral of the inſcriptions at Tadmor) was able, whilſt Gallienus, the ſon of Valerian, neglected his duty, both to his father and country, to bring a powerful army into the field, and to recover Meſopotamia from the Perſians, and likewiſe to penetrate as far as Cteſiphon, their capital city; thereby rendring ſuch conſiderable ſervice to the Roman ſtate, that Gallienus thought himſelf obliged to give him a ſhare in the empire. But by a ſtrange reverſe of fortune, this honour and reſpect to Odænathus occaſioned the ſudden ruin and ſubverſion of this noble city. For he, and his ſon Herodes, being murdered by Mæonius, their kinſman, and Odænathus dying with the title of Auguſtus, his wife Zenobia, in right of her ſon Waballathus, then a minor, pretended to take upon her the government of the eaſt; and ſhe really adminiſtred it to admiration; and when Gallienus was ſoon after murdered by his ſoldiers, ſhe graſped the government of Egypt, and held it during the ſhort reign of the emperor Claudius Gothicus. But Aurelian coming to the imperial dignity, would not ſuffer the title of Auguſtus in this family, tho' he was contented they ſhould hold under him as Vice-Cæſars, as plainly appears by the Latin coins of Aurelian on the one ſide, and Waballathus, (whoſe name is often found in the inſcriptions at Tadmor) on the other, with theſe letttes, V. C. R. IM. OR. which father Harduin has moſt judiciouſly interpreted, Vice Cæſaris Rector Imperii Orientis; but without the title of Cæſar, or Auguſtus, and with a laurel inſtead of a diadem. But both Waballathus, and Zenobia, are ſtiled CEBACTOI, Auguſti, in the Greek coins, which, it is probable, were made within their own juriſdiction.

But nothing leſs than a participation of the empire contenting Zenobia, and Aurelian perſiſting not to have it diſmember'd, marched againſt her; and having in two battles defeated her forces, he ſhut her up, and beſieged her in Palmyra; and the beſieged finding that the great reſiſtance they made was all unavailing, yielded up the city; and Zenobia flying from thence with her ſon, was purſued and taken. Aurelian being contented with this ſucceſs, ſpared the city, and leaving a ſmall gariſon there, marched for Rome with this captive lady. But the inhabitants believing he would not return, ſet up again for themſelves, and (as Voſpiſcus has it) ſlew the gariſon he had left in the place. Aurelian was ſoon informed of this proceeding; and tho' he had then advanced into Europe, he ſpeedily returned with his uſual fierceneſs and impetuoſity; and collecting a ſufficient army by the way, he again took the city without any great oppoſition, and put the inhabitants to the ſword with uncommon cruelty, (as he himſelf confeſſes in a letter which is ſtill extant in Voſpiſcus) and delivered the city to the pillage of his ſoldiers. And it is remarkable, that none of the Greek inſcriptions there are after the date of this calamity, which befel this unfortunate city in or about the year of our Lord 272, as far as may be collected; and after it had been the ſeat of the empire of the eaſt, for the ſpace of nine or ten years, and not without glory.

Having thus traced the fate of this city, from its foundation by Solomon, to its ſubverſion by Aurelian, we ſhall now preſent our readers with a ſhort account of the noble ruins of it, which are ſtill remaining. The city itſelf was ſeated in a fertile iſland, if we may ſo call it, ſurrounded on all ſides by a thirſty and barren deſert. The firſt object, that now occurs to travellers who approach this deſolate tract, is a caſtle of mean architecture, and uncertain foundation, but impregnably ſituated, about half an hour's journey from the city, on the north ſide of which this caſtle ſtands; and from hence you have the beſt proſpect of all the country around. You there ſee Tadmor under you, incloſed on three ſides with long ridges of mountains, which gradually open toward the eaſt, to the diſtance of half an hour's riding; but to the ſouth, a vaſt plain ſtretches out beyond the command of the eye. In this plain appears a large valley of ſalt, affording great quantities of it, and lying about the diſtance of an hour's journey from the city. Some think this is the valley of ſalt, mentioned, 2 Sam. viii. 13. where David ſmote the Syrians, and ſlew 18000 men. The air is exceeding good, but the ſoil unfertile, affording nothing green, but a thin growth of palm-trees in the gardens, and a few more ſcattered up and down. Not that it had always the ſame ſterile appearance; for Abulfeda writes, that Palmyrene for the moſt part abounded in ſalt, and that the palm and olive flouriſhed there; to which he adds, that it had perpetual ſprings, and yielded fruits and corn. The city muſt have been of large extent, by the ſpace now taken up by the ruins; but there are no traces of the walls, whereby to judge of its ancient form. It is now a deplorable ſpectacle, being only inhabited by thirty or forty miſerable families, who have built themſelves poor huts of earth, within a ſpacious court, which once incloſed a magnificent Heathen temple. Such is the viciſſitude of all earthly grandeur!

This court, which is ſituated toward the ſouth-end of the city, has an extent of two hundred and twenty yards on each ſide, with a high and ſtately wall of large ſquare ſtone, ornamented with pilaſters both within and without, to the number, as near as Mr. Hallifax could judge, of ſixty-two on a ſide. And had not the barbarity of the

Turks,

Turks, who are enemies to all works of art that are ſplendid and noble, purpoſely beat down the beautiful corniſhes both here and in other places, travellers might ſtill have ſeen the moſt curious and exquiſite carvings in ſtone, which, perhaps, the world could ever boaſt of; as is evident here and there, by ſome ſmall remains which have eſcaped the fury of thoſe infidels. Moſt of the weſt-ſide of this court, by which you enter it, is broken down, and toward the middle of it are the remains of an old caſtle built by the Mamlûks, as is ſuppoſed, out of part of the ruins which are here in ſuch abundance. This caſtle ſhrouds the remains of an ancient fabric of exquiſite beauty, as appears by that part of its entrance which is undemoliſh'd; and conſiſts of two ſtones, each of which is thirty-five feet in length, and artificially carved with vines and cluſters of grapes, exceeding bold, and to the life. They are both in their right places, and by them it appears that the gate was fifteen feet wide. In this great court are the remains of two rows of very noble marble pillars, thirty-ſeven feet high, with capitals of the fineſt carv'd work; and the corniſhes, which are now deſtroyed by the unrelenting ſuperſtition of the Mohammedans, muſt have been of equal beauty. Of theſe pillars, fifty-eight are ſtill entire, but there muſt have been many more; ſince, by what appears, they went round the whole court, and ſupported a moſt ſpacious double piazza, or cloiſter. The walks on the weſt-ſide of this piazza, and which face the front of the temple, ſeem to have been the moſt ſpacious and ſtately of all; and at each end thereof, are two niches for ſtatues at their full length, with their pedeſtals, borders, ſupporters, and canopies, carved with the greateſt artifice and curioſity. The ſpace within this once beautiful incloſure is conceived to have been an open court, in the midſt of which ſtands the temple, which was incompaſſed with another row of pillars of a different order, and far exceeding the former in dimenſions, being fifty feet high. Sixteen of theſe are now ſtanding, but there muſt have been double that number; but whether they formed an inner court, or ſupported the roof of a cloiſter, is uncertain. One great ſtone lies down, which ſeems to have reach'd from theſe pillars to the walls of the temple, ſo that the latter conjecture may naturally enough take place. The whole ſpace comprehended within theſe pillars, is one hundred and ſeventy-ſeven feet in length, and eighty-four in breadth: In the midſt of this ſpace is the temple, extending ninety-nine feet in length, and in breadth about forty. It has a ſumptuous entrance on the weſt, exactly in the middle of the building, which, by the ſmall remains yet to be ſeen, ſeems to have been one of the moſt glorious ſtructures in the world. Never were vines and cluſters of grapes cut in ſtone in a bolder manner, or more lively and natural, than thoſe which are ſtill viſible among theſe ſtately ruins. Over the door may be juſt traced out a large ſpread-eagle, with his wings expanded over the whole width of that portal; and the largeneſs of it hath made ſome imagine that it might rather have been a cherub overſhadowing the entrance, there being nothing of the body remaining, to guide the ſpectator's judgment; and ſome little angels or Cupids are ſtill viſible in the corner of the ſame ſtone. But as other eagles are to be ſeen on ſtones that are fallen down, this is concluded to be one likewiſe, only of a much larger ſize. Nothing of this auguſt temple is now ſtanding but the walls, in which it is obſervable, that the windows, tho' not large, are narrower at top than at bottom, but vaſtly enriched with admirable ſculpture. Within the walls, the Turks, or more probably the Mamlûks, have built a roof, which is ſupported by ſmall pillars and arches; but much lower, and in all other reſpects diſproportionate and inferior to what the ancient covering muſt have been. And they have converted the place into a moſch, having added to the ſouth end thereof new ornaments, after their manner, with Arabic inſcriptions, and ſentences out of the Korân of Mohammed, wrote in rude flouriſhes and wreaths. But at the north end of the building, which is ſhut out of the moſch, are reliques of much greater artifice and beauty. Whether theſe were in the nature of canopies over ſome altars placed there, or to what other uſe they ſerved, cannot be determined. They are beautified with the moſt curious fret-work, and carvings; in the midſt of which is a dome, or cupola, above ſix feet in diameter, all of one piece; but whether hewn out of a rock, or made of ſome artificial cement or compoſition, by time hardened into a lapideous ſubſtance, ſeems doubtful, tho' ſome are rather inclined to believe the latter. In a word, it is a moſt exquiſite piece of workmanſhip.

Leaving this court and temple, the eyes of the ſpectator are accoſted with an amazing proſpect of ſuch magnificent ruins, that if it be lawful to frame a conjecture of the original beauty of that place, by what is ſtill remaining, it may be queſtioned, whether any city in the world could have challenged precedence of this in its glory.

Advancing from the temple toward the north, a tall and ſtately obeliſk, or pillar, preſents it ſelf to view, conſiſting of ſeven large ſtones, beſide its capital, and the wreathed work about it; the carvings here, as in all other places, being executed in the moſt maſterly manner that can poſſibly be conceived. This obeliſk riſes above fifty feet high, is twelve feet and a half in circumference, juſt above the pedeſtal, and it is thought that a ſtatue once ſtood upon it. On each ſide of this, toward the eaſt and weſt, are two other large pillars, each at the diſtance of a quarter of a mile from the obeliſk; and they ſeem to have ſome correſpondence one with the other. There is likewiſe a fragment of another, near that of the eaſt, which would incline one to think there was once a continued row of thoſe ſtately columns. The height of this eaſtern pillar, as taken by a quadrant, exceeds forty-two feet; its circumference is proportionable, and on the body of it is a Greek inſcription, in commemoration of two patriots, by a grateful order of the ſenate and people. The weſtern pillar has another inſcription of the like nature, but not quite ſo perfect as the former.

Proceeding forward, directly from the obeliſk, about 100 paces, you come to a magnificent entrance, vaſtly large and loſty, and for the exquiſite perfection of the workmanſhip, not inferior to any thing before deſcribed. This entrance leads you into a noble piazza, above half a mile in length, and forty feet in breadth, incloſed with two rows of ſtately marble pillars, twenty-ſix feet high, and eight or nine in circumference. Of theſe pillars, one hundred and twenty are yet ſtanding, and entire; but, by a moderate calculation, there could not have been leſs than 560. There is no covering remaining, nor any pavement at the bottom, unleſs it be buried under the rubbiſh. Upon moſt of theſe pillars are inſcriptions in Greek and Palmyrene characters; ſo that it ſeems to have been a much frequented, and moſt conſpicuous part of the city, and beſt adapted for the daily and honourable commemoration of ſuch who had deſerved well of their fellow-citizens, friends and relations. And, as if inſcriptions were not thought ſufficient, it ſeems as if the ſtatues alſo of the perſons celebrated were erected here, there being pedeſtals jetting out from theſe pillars, and which muſt have ſupported ſtatues which have, long ſince, fallen victims to the barbarous zeal of the Mohammedans.

The upper end of this ſpacious piazza was ſhut in by a row of pillars ſtanding ſomewhat cloſer than thoſe on each ſide; and perhaps there might have been a kind of banquetting-houſe above, tho' no certain footſteps thereof are now remaining. But a little farther to the left-hand lie the ruins of a very ſtately pile, which poſſibly might have been for ſuch a uſe. It is built of a finer marble, and with an air of delicacy through the whole, far ſurpaſſing what is diſcernable in the piazza. The pillars, which ſupported this ſtructure, are all of one ſtone, twenty two feet in length, and eight feet nine inches round.

On the weſt ſide of the great piazza are ſeveral openings for gates, leading into the court of the palace. Two of them ſeem as if they had been the moſt glorious and magnificent gates in the world, both for the elegancy of the work in general, and particularly for thoſe ſtately porphyry pillars, with which they were adorn'd. Each gate had four, not ſtanding in a line with thoſe of the wall, but placed by couples in the front of the gate, facing the palace; two on the one hand, and two on the other. Of theſe porphyry pillars, there are but two entire, and only one of them ſtanding in its proper place. They are about 30 feet in length, and nine in circumference, and of a ſubſtance ſo exceeding hard, that travellers find it very difficult to break off a few ſhivers, to bring home with them for a pattern of the ſtone. Theſe, of all the porphyry works here found, are by much the moſt beautiful and compleat. The palace itſelf is ſo entirely tirely ruined, that there is no forming a judgment of what it was in its ancient ſplendor, either for the figure or workmanſhip thereof. There is only here and there a broken piece of a wall, ſhattered by violence, and conſumed by length of time to ſuch a degree, that without the help of tradition it could hardly be gueſſed that a royal palace did once fill that ſpace. In all probability it fronted the famous piazza above mentioned, and was ſurrounded with rows of pillars of different orders, many of which are ſtill ſtanding, ſome plain, and others wrought and channelled, as thoſe immediately encompaſſing the temple.

On the eaſt-ſide of the long piazza, riſes, if we may uſe the expreſſion, a foreſt of marble pillars, ſome perfect, and others deprived of their beautiful capitals, but ſo ſcattered and confuſed, that there is no reducing them to order, ſo as to conjecture the uſe to which they formerly ſerved. In one place are eleven together forming a ſquare paved at the bottom with broad flat ſtone, but without any manner of roof.

At a little diſtance from hence is a ſmall ruined temple, which, by what remains of it, muſt have been a very curious ſtructure; but the roof is entirely demoliſhed, and the walls very much defaced by time. Before the entrance, which fronts the ſouth, is a piazza ſupported by ſix pillars, two on one ſide of the door, and two on the other, and one at each end.

But of all the venerable remains of this deſolate place, none more attract the admiration of the curious than the coſtly ſepulchres, which are ſquare towers, four or five ſtories high, and ſtanding on each ſide of a hollow way, toward the north-end of the city. They ſtretch out in length, the ſpace of a mile, and may anciently have extended farther. At a diſtance they appear like decay'd ſteeples, or the ruined baſtions of a fortification; many of them, tho' built of marble, have proved faithleſs to their charge, having ſunk under the weight of years, or ſubmitted to the inexorable malice of barbarous hand. They are all of one form, but of different ſplendor and dimenſions, in proportion to the circumſtances of their founders. In the ruins of one of them, which is entirely marble, were found the fragments of two ſtatues, the one of a man, the other of a woman, in a leaning poſture. By theſe it is diſcovered, that their habit was very noble, rather agreeing with the European, than the preſent eaſtern faſhions. To judge of the conſtruction of theſe ſepulchres in general, by what is obſerved in one of them, they had a walk which croſſed them from north to ſouth, and exactly in the middle, by which they were entered. The vault below was divided in the ſame manner, and the diviſion on each hand ſubdivided by thick walls into ſix, or more or leſs partitions, each ſpacious enough to receive the largeſt corpſe, and of a depth ſufficient to contain at leaſt ſix or ſeven piled upon one another. In the loweſt, ſecond, and third ſtories, their partitions were the ſame, excepting that the ſecond had a partition anſwering to the main entrance, for the convenience of a ſtair-caſe. Higher up this method was diſcontinued, becauſe the building growing narrower toward the top, could no longer admit of it. In the uppermoſt room it is likely that no bodies were depoſited, except that of the founder, whoſe ſtatue is in one of theſe ſepulchres, wrapped up in funeral apparel, and it lies in a nich, or rather window, in the front of the monument, ſo as to be viſible both within and without.

Such at this time are the once magnificent abodes, and ſuch the noble ſepulchres of the inhabitants of Tadmor; and they demonſtrate, even in ruins, that the world never ſaw a more glorious city: the pride of ancient times, and the unrivaled glory of Syria. A city not more remarkable for the ſtate of her buildings, and the bold peculiarity of her ſituation, than for the extraordinary perſonages who once flouriſhed here, among whom, the renowned Zenobia, and the incomparable Longinus, will for ever be remember'd with admiration and regret.

The nobleſt palaces, and the moſt ſtately cities are buried in their own ruins by the inevitable devaſtation of time; the mighty fabric of the earth itſelf will at laſt be deſtroyed in a red ſea of fire; but thou, O Lord, who inhabiteſt eternity, art the ſame yeſterday, to day, and for ever, without beginning of days, or end of time, God bleſſed for ever more!

No. XLVIII.

Ver. 23. Theſe were the chief of the officers that were over Solomon's work, five hundred and fifty, &c.] Their number is diminiſh'd to two hundred and fifty, 2 Chron. viii. 10. but this ſeeming contradiction is reconciled by Abarbinel, who declares, that there were only two hundred and fifty ſet over thoſe who wrought in the temple, the reſt being diſtributed into other places to look after Solomon's public works. And it muſt be obſerved alſo, that far greater numbers were employed when the work of the temple was carried on with great expedition, as we read before, chap. v. ver. 16.

Ver. 24. But Pharaoh's daughter came up out of the city of David, unto her houſe which Solomon had built for her: then did he build Millo.] There was not the ſame neceſſity for building Millo as there was for raiſing the walls of Jeruſalem, and the cities before-named. But Solomon did it, as Abarbinel obſerves, in honour, and for the pleaſure of Pharaoh's daughter, who was to remove to a palace near that place; and we are informed, in 2 Chron. viii. 11. that the reaſon of her not continuing in the houſe where David had dwelt, was becauſe it was a holy place, where it was not fit for her to remain, the ark of God having been depoſited there.

Ver. 25. And three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, upon the altar which he had built unto the Lord.] The meaning is not that he offered ſacrifices no oftner, but that he never failed to keep the three ſolemn feſtivals, which God commanded every individual to obſerve: at which time Solomon offered ſacrifices ſuitable to thoſe great mercies which were then commemorated, and to the extraordinary bleſſings which God had beſtowed upon his family.

Ver. 26. And king Solomon made a navy of ſhips in Ezion-geber, which is beſide Eloth, on the ſhore of the Red-ſea, in the land of Edom.] It is evident, from this verſe, that Ezion-geber, and Eloth, were neighbouring places, and both ſituated in the land of Edom, and conſequently that this land extended to the ſhore of the Red-ſea. And this corroborates the opinion that the Red-ſea was ſo called, as lying on the coaſt of Edom; which word ſignifies red, and was a name by which Eſau was called. That Ezion-geber was a ſea-port town is apparent, from the paſſage before us, and what is ſaid of Solomon's going to Eloth, as well as to Ezion-geber, 2 Chron. viii. 17. ſeems a proof that Eloth was a ſea-port or haven. Particular notice is taken, 2 Kings xiv. 22. of Azariah's reſtoring Eloth to Judah; and again, 2 Kings xvi. 6. of Rezin king of Syria recovering Eloth to Syria, which ſhews that it was a place of more than ordinary importance, and moſt probably on account of its being a commodious haven, ſince Eloth, as well as Ezion-geber, is expreſly ſaid to be ſituated on the Red-ſea, 2 Chron. viii. 17. And this is farther confirmed, by our finding a bay of the Red-ſea, called in heathen writers, the Elamitic, or Elanitic bay, which undoubtedly derived its name from a port thereon, named Elama, or Elana, which very probably might be the ſame which is denoted in ſcripture by Elath or Eloth; eſpecially ſince Euſebius and Jerom tell us, that it was in their days called Ælа; and that from thence it was cuſtomary to ſail for the Indies and Egypt; and that the tenth Roman legion was placed there, which farther ſhews it to have been a place of great conſequence. As for Ezion-geber, Joſephus ſays it was the ſame as Berenice, a famous city upon the coaſt of the Red-ſea, Antiq. lib. 8. cap. 2. p. 269. But it is very probable, that he has confounded Berenice, which lies on the weſtern ſhore of the Red-ſea, inclining toward Ethiopia, with the city of Ezion-geber, which is ſituated on the oppoſite ſhore. The name Ezion-geber ſignifies Spina Viri; it lying on a rocky, ragged ſhore, running out into the ſea, in the form of the back bone of a man. Arianus, in his Periplus, deſcribes the inmoſt part of the Arabian gulph, or Red-ſea, as very dangerous, on account of the rocks and ſhelves: which circumſtance makes it not at all ſurpriſing, that the ſhips of Jehoſhaphat were ſhattered to pieces there, in the very port, before they put out to ſea, 2 Kings xxii. 48. inſomuch that in after-times this port was forſaken, and they frequented Eloth.

Ver. 27. And Hiram ſent in the navy his ſervants, ſhipmen that had knowledge of the ſea, with the ſervants of Solomon. Ver. 28. And they came to Ophir.] One would hardly think that the diſcovery of the true ſituation of Ophir ſhould be ſo difficult as it has proved, conſidering the various intimations by which the Scriptures ſeem to point it out to us. Such as thoſe which follow, 1. That Moſes ſpeaks of Ophir, the ſon of Joktan, who went with his brethren, and dwelt from Meſha toward Separ, a mount of the eaſt, Gen. x. 29. 30. 2. That the ſame fleet went both to Ophir and Tharſhiſh, (as appears from this verſe in conjunction with chap. x. 22. xxii. 49. and 2 Chron. xx. 36.) and ſet out from Ezion-geber, a ſea-port near Eloth, in the land of Edom, upon the Red-ſea. 3. That the voyage took them up three years, and that the fleet brought gold, precious ſtones, ſpices, ivory, and algum-trees, apes and peacocks, chap. x. 22. 2 Chron. ix. 10, 21. 5. That Ophir not only afforded the greateſt quantity of gold, but that it alſo exceeded all other gold in fineneſs and value, (ibid. & alib. Paſſ.) And laſtly, that according to Eupolemus, an ancient author cited by Euſebius, (Præp. Evang. l. 9.) the Urphe, or Ophir, from whence this metal was brought, was an iſland in the Red-ſea, not the Arabian gulph, but the great ſouthern ocean, which extends itſelf between India and Africa, and waſheth up to the coaſt of Arabia and Perſia; and which, according to ſome authors, was called the Red-ſea, from the colour which the perpendicular ſun-beams give it in thoſe hot climes. To this we may add, what Joſephus ſays, namely, that Ophir was in India, or was ſince called India, or the land of gold, (Antiq. l. viii. c. 2.) which may probably mean the Aurea Cherſoneſus, now called the Peninſula of Malacca, oppoſite to Sumatra. Theſe hints, one would be apt to think, might have furniſhed out ſuch a chart, as would have directed us, if not to the very ſpot of ground, yet at leaſt to the region whence all theſe riches came; and yet there are ſcarce any two authors who have ſteered the ſame courſe.

Among thoſe whoſe conjectures, with relation to Ophir, ſeem to have more probability than thoſe of other writers, we may reckon ſuch who place it, with Joſephus, in ſome part of the Eaſt Indies, tho' without adhering too ſtrictly to the particular ſituation which each of them has choſen: whether in the kingdom of Malabar, or the iſles of Seylan, or Tapobrana; or in Siam, or any of thoſe neighbouring iſlands or kingdoms beyond the Ganges; or in the kingdom of Pegu, whoſe inhabitants pretend to be deſcended from the Jews, whom Solomon ſent thither to work in the golden mines; for we think it labour loſt, to ſeek for a country that produced all the different kinds of merchandizes which the fleet brought into Judæa, when they had time enough to fetch ſome from one place, and ſome from another; or, which is equally probable, when they might be all brought by Indian merchants from ſeveral parts of India, into ſome common emporium.

Dean Prideaux obſerves, that it was the voyage to Tharſhiſh, and the return from it, which took up three years; from whence he conjectures, that Ophir might be much nearer Judæa, and the voyage performed in leſs time, if they had not been obliged to go to Tharſhiſh for ſome commodities which Ophir did not afford; and conſequently, that any place in the great Indian ſea, at the diſtance of three years voyage, and which yielded gold, ſilver, ivory, apes and peacocks, might be the Tharſhiſh; and any other, tho' much nearer, where they could have gold, almug-trees, and precious ſtones, might be the Ophir mentioned in the Scripture. So that if the ſouthern part of Arabia produced the greateſt quantities of the beſt gold, then that might be the land of Ophir, Prid. Connect. book 1.

But tho' it be granted, that Tharſhiſh and Ophir might be diſtinct places, and at ſome conſiderable diſtance from each other, yet if the latter had been ſo near as South Arabia, and had yielded ſuch plenty of the fineſt gold, almug-trees, and precious ſtones, it is ſcarce credible that the fleet would have ſailed ſo much farther, for ſuch inferior triſles as ſilver, ivory, apes and peacocks; and it is much more probable, that they went fartheſt for the fineſt gold, and things of greateſt value.

Upon the whole then, the moſt probable conjecture, and beyond that it is impoſſible to go, is, that Ophir was in ſome of thoſe remote and rich countries of India beyond the Ganges; and perhaps as far as China or Japan; which laſt ſtill abounds with the fineſt gold, and with ſeveral other commodities in which the fleet of Solomon dealt; as ſilver, precious ſtones, ebony, and other valuable ſorts of wood; to ſay nothing of ſpices, peacocks, parrots, apes, and ſuch other creatures; and its diſtance makes it correſpond beſt with the length of the voyage.

——And ſet from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.] It is ſaid, 2 Chron. viii. 18. that they brought four hundred and fifty talents; but Abarbinel thinks, with reaſon, that Solomon gave the ſervants of Hiram, who managed the ſhips, thirty talents for a gratuity. According to dean Prideaux, the four hundred and fifty talents, mentioned in the Chronicles, amount to three millions two hundred and forty thouſand pounds of our preſent ſterling money.

CHAP. X.

1 The queen of Sheba admireth the wiſdom of Solomon. 14 Solomons gold. 16 His targets. 18 The throne of Ivory. 21 His veſſels. 24 His preſents. 26 His chariots and horſe. 28 His tribute.

AND when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the LORD, ſhe came to prove him with hard queſtions.

2 And ſhe came to Jeruſalem, with a very great train, with camels that bare ſpices, and very much gold, and precious ſtones: and when ſhe was come to Solomon, ſhe communed with him of all that was in her heart.

3 And Solomon told her all her queſtions: there was not any thing hid from the king, which he told her not.

4 And when the queen of Sheba had ſeen all Solomons wiſdom, and the houſe that he had built,

5 And the meat of his table, and the ſitting of his ſervants, and the attendance of his miniſters, and their apparel, and his cup-bearers, and his aſcent by which he went up unto the houſe of the LORD: there was no more ſpirit in her.

6 And ſhe ſaid to the king, It was a true report that I heard in mine own land, of thy acts, and of thy wiſdom.

7 Howbeit, I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had ſeen it: and behold, the half was not told me: thy wiſdom and proſperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

8 Happy are thy men, happy are theſe thy ſervants, which ſtand continually before thee, and that hear thy wiſdom.

9 Bleſſed be the LORD thy God which delighted in thee, to ſet thee on the throne of Iſrael; becauſe the LORD loved Iſrael for ever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and juſtice.

10 And ſhe gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of ſpices very great ſtore, and precious ſtones: there came no more ſuch abundance of ſpices, as theſe.

theſe, which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 And the navy alſo of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug-trees, and precious ſtones.

12 And the king made of the almug-trees, pillars for the houſe of the LORD, and for the kings houſe, harps alſo and pſalteries for ſingers: there came no ſuch almug-trees, nor were ſeen unto this day.

13 And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba, all her deſire whatſoever ſhe asked, beſides that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty: ſo ſhe turned and went to her own country, ſhe and her ſervants.

14 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year, was ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix talents of gold,

15 Beſides that he had of the merchantmen, and of the traffick of the ſpice-merchants, and of all the kings of Arabia, and of the governors of the country.

16 ¶ And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: ſix hundred ſhekels of gold went to one target.

17 And he made three hundred ſhields of beaten gold; three pound of gold went to one ſhield: and the king put them in the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon.

18 ¶ Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the beſt gold.

19 The throne had ſix ſteps, and the top of the throne was round behind: and there were ſtays on either ſide on the place of the ſeat, and two lions ſtood beſide the ſtays.

20 And twelve lions ſtood there on the one ſide and on the other upon the ſix ſteps: there was not the like made in any kingdom.

21 ¶ And all king Solomons drinking-veſſels were of gold, and all the veſſels of the houſe of the foreſt of Lebanon were of pure gold, none were of ſilver; it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

22 For the king had at ſea a navy of Tharſhiſh, with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tharſhiſh, bringing gold and ſilver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks.

23 So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth, for riches and for wiſdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth ſought to Solomon, to hear his wiſdom which God had put in his heart.

25 And they brought every man his preſent, veſſels of ſilver, and veſſels of gold, and garments, and armour, and ſpices, horſes, and mules, a rate year by year.

26 ¶ And Solomon gathered together chariots and horſemen: and he had a thouſand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thouſand horſemen, whom he beſtowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jeruſalem.

27 And the king made ſilver to be in Jeruſalem as ſtones, and cedars made he to be as the ſycamore-trees, that are in the vale, for abundance.

28 ¶ And Solomon had horſes brought out of Egypt, and linen yarn: the kings merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

29 And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for ſix hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and an horſe for an hundred and fifty: and ſo for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria did they bring them out by their means.

Ver. 1. And when the queen of Sheba heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the Lord.] Among the great perſons whom the fame of Solomon's wiſdom and grandeur brought to Jeruſalem, the moſt conſiderable was the queen of Sheba, a princeſs of ſuch excellent knowledge, and extraordinary opulence, that ſhe ſeemed to come with an intention to vie with the Jewiſh monarch, by the ſplendor of her equipage, the richneſs and magnificence of her preſents, and the number of obſcure queſtions ſhe put to him. Joſephus calls her Nicaulis, and ſays ſhe was queen of Egypt and Ethiopia, (Antiq. l. viii. c. 2.) and elſewhere, that Saba was the metropolis of Ethiopia, till Cambyſes called it by his ſiſter's name, Meroes, (ibid. l. 2. c. 10.) The Ethiopians, accordingly, pretend, that ſhe was queen of that country, and ſtill preſerve a liſt of her ſucceſſors, (Vid. Hier. Almeid. & Ludolph. Hiſt. Æthiop.) They add, that ſhe had a ſon by Solomon, whom ſhe ſent to be brought up by him; they call him Meilik, or Menilehek, and affirm, that twenty-four of their kings are deſcended from that prince ſucceſſively down to Baſilides. Some ancient writers likewiſe acknowledge, that this country was ſometime governed by women. Strabo, lib. xvi. c. 17. Plin. lib. vi. c. 26.

The Arabians, on the other hand, claim this queen as their own: they call her Balkiſh, and affirm, that ſhe was queen of Arabia, and had her reſidence in the city of Mareb, which they make the metropolis of the province of Saba. They have alſo preſerved her genealogy, as well as the hiſtory of her journey to Judæa, which they have crowded with fables, one of which is, that ſhe was married to Solomon, and that after her return into Arabia, that king uſed to maintain an epiſtolary correſpondence with her, by means of a bird which they called hudhud, a king of lapwing or puet, which uſed to carry letters between them. Vid. Herbelot. Bibliot. Orient. ſub. voc. Balkiſh.

The opinion of thoſe who think that this princeſs came from Arabia, ſeems certainly the moſt probable of the two; among many other reaſons, becauſe ſhe is called in the Goſpel, the queen of the ſouth, and is ſaid to have come from the uttermoſt parts of the earth, Matth. xii. 42. which anſwers exactly to Arabia Felix, which lies ſouth ſouth of Judæa, and is bounded by the ocean. To which we may add, that it was productive of gold, precious ſtones, and exquiſite perfumes, more than any other country thereabout.

———And ſhe came to prove him with hard queſtions.] It was part of the diverſion of princes in thoſe times to puzzle one another with riddles and obſcure queſtions. An annaliſt tells us, that among other methods this princeſs tried, in order to poſe the king, ſhe took a number of boys and girls, whom ſhe had brought with her, and having arrayed them all alike, ſhe preſented them to him, that ſhe might know what expedient he would uſe to diſtinguiſh the different ſexes. Upon which, the king order'd them to waſh their faces in his preſence, and eaſily diſcovered the difference, by the robuſtneſs of the boys, and the effeminacy of the girls, in their manner of performing his command. Mich. Glycas. Annal. p. 182.

This great queen brought with her a vaſt number of camels laden with gold and precious ſtones; and with ſuch rich ſpices and perfumes, as had not till then been known even in the court of Solomon. By all theſe one may gueſs at the ſplendidneſs of her equipage and retinue; and it is not to be ſuppoſed, that ſhe would have engaged with a prince ſo univerſally renowned for wiſdom, if ſhe had not enjoyed ſome conſiderable ſhare of that Divine Accompliſhment herſelf. But when ſhe had tried him with all the ſubtil and enigmatic queſtions ſhe had prepared for him, ſhe found in him ſuch a facility in ſolving them, and ſuch a ſagacity in explaining his anſwers, that he ſeemed even to prevent her thoughts; inſomuch, that ſhe owned herſelf fully ſatisfied that he was not without juſt reaſon eſteemed the wiſeſt prince of his time. The king then entertained her with a view of the temple; of his palaces and gardens; of his court and tables, and the richneſs of their furniture; the great number and excellent order of his ſervants, ſtables, chariots, guards, and, in a word, of all the magnificence that reign'd, both in his court, and in the city. Joſephus mentions a grove belonging to the houſe of Lebanon, which was ſuch a maſter-piece of art, that it raiſed the admiration of that princeſs above all the reſt of Solomon's ſtately works, Antiq. lib. viii. c. 2. So many ſurpriſing inſtances of his wiſdom and grandeur ſtruck that princeſs with the utmoſt aſtoniſhment, inſomuch that ſhe cried out, amidſt the extaſy of her admiration, Happy are thy men, happy are theſe thy ſervants, which ſtand continually before thee, and hear thy wiſdom. Bleſſed be thy God which delighted in thee, to ſet thee on the throne of Iſrael: becauſe the Lord loved Iſrael for ever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and juſtice, ver. 8, 9. She then preſented the king with 120 talents of gold, together with a great number of precious ſtones, and rich perfumes. Joſephus adds, that ſhe brought with her the firſt branch of that precious balm-tree, or balm of Gilead, which Judæa was afterward ſo much famed for. Solomon, on the other hand, was too generous not to make her ſuitable returns, and to diſmiſs her with the nobleſt proofs of his munificence.

Ver. 11. And the navy alſo of Hiram that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug trees.] It is very uncertain what theſe almug, or algum trees were (as they are called by a tranſpoſition of the letters g and m, 2 Chron. ii. 8.) Dr. Caſtell thinks it was the wood called ſanctulum; which is proper for the uſes mentioned in the next verſe, and is ſtill a product of India. Kimchi, upon that place in the Chronicles ſaith it was a red wood, which is now called Brezil; which cannot be meant the wood which comes from Brazil, for that country was not known in the days of Solomon, but probably he calls it Brezil from the Hebrew word Barzel, which ſignifies iron, it being of ſuch a dark colour; and ſuch a wood there is now in the kingdom of Java.

Ver. 16. And king Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold, ſix hundred ſhekels of gold went to one target.] Theſe targets, and the ſhields mentioned ver. 17. ſeem to have been made for ſtate and pomp, to be carried before him upon ſome ſpecial occaſions; but we muſt not think that the ſhields weighed but ſix hundred ſhekels (for then they would have been too ſmall for uſe) but that each coſt ſix hundred ſhekels of gold.

Ver. 18. Moreover, the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the beſt gold.] This throne, which was in the faſhion of a niche, was covered with ivory, inlaid and intermixed with curious ornaments in gold; the aſcent to it was by ſix ſteps, every ſtep being ſupported on each ſide with a ſmall lion, and the arms of the ſeat with two large ones as big as the life. All theſe, and even the ſteps themſelves, were likewiſe covered with gold and ivory.

Ver. 22. For the king had at ſea a navy of Tharſhiſh, with the navy of Hiram] Theſe words are added to give a farther account how Solomon came to have gold in ſuch abundance; for he trafficked for it in another fleet, beſide that which went to Ophir. That fleet was Solomon's, and ſailed out of his own port Ezion-geber, tho' it was man'd by Tyrians, becauſe they underſtood the ſea; whereas the navy here ſpoken of belonged to Hiram, and went out of his port of Tyre, and Solomon only had liberty to trade in it to Tarſhiſh, where the Tyrians had very ancient commerce, and therefore Hiram was the chief in this voyage, as Solomon was in that to Ophir.

—Once in three years came the navy of Tharſhiſh, bringing gold and ſilver.] Tharſhiſh was not ſo far off, that they could not return in leſs than three years; but as Abarbinel ſuppoſes, they went thither in the end of one year, and continued there all the next, in order to vend and buy their commodities, and then returned in the beginning of the third year.

There is a multitude of different opinions concerning the country of Tharſhiſh. Joſephus, together with the Chaldee and Arabic paraphraſts, explain it of Tarſus, the capital city of Cilicia. The Septuagint, St. Jerome, and Theodoret, underſtand it of Carthage, which is ſomething extraordinary, that city not being then built. The Arabian geographer will have it to be Tunis in Africa. Bochart affirms it to be Tarteſſus, an iſland in the ſtreights of Gades. By Tharſhiſh, Le Clerc underſtands Thaſſus, an iſland and city in the Ægean-ſea. Grotius thinks the whole ocean was called Tharſhiſh, from the famous city of Tarteſſus juſt mentioned. Sanctius believes the ſea in general was called Tharſhiſh, and that the ſhips of Tharſhiſh are thoſe which were employed in long voyages at ſea, in oppoſition to the ſmall veſſels which were uſed only on ſome navigable river. The Seventy ſometimes tranſlate Tharſhiſh, the ſea; and the ſcripture gives alike the name of ſhips of Tharſhiſh to thoſe which were fitted out at Ezion-geber, on the Arabian gulph, and which ſailed upon the ocean, as to thoſe which were fitted out at Joppa, and in the ports of the Mediterranean. We cannot apprehend any other way than this, to explain all the paſſages wherein mention is made of the ſhips of Tharſhiſh.

For, on the one ſide, we ſee plain enough, that Tharſhiſh ſignifies the city of Tarſus, and the country of Cilicia; and on the other ſide, we obſerve, that they fitted out ſhips of Tharſhiſh, or ſhips to go to Tharſhiſh, in places from whence we cannot ſuppoſe that they went to Tarſus in Cilicia. For example, the author of the book of Judith, deſcribing the conqueſts of Holofernes, ſays, he went into Cilicia, and deſtroyed all the children of Tharſhiſh, or Tharſis, [Judith ii. 22, 23. Vulgat,] Jonah flying from the preſence of the Lord, took ſhipping at Joppa, to go to Tharſhiſh, probably to Tarſus in Cilicia. The prophets Iſaiah and Ezekiel, among the merchants ſhips which came to traffic at Tyre, reckon thoſe of Tharſhiſh. [Iſaiah xxiii. 1, 14. lx. 19. Ezek. xxvii. 12, 25. xxxviii. 13.] Now Cilicia was altogether within reach from Tyre; and there is but little probability, that ſhips ſhould come from the coaſts of the ocean to trade there. Laſtly, the Pſalmiſt ranks the kings of Tharſhiſh with thoſe of the iſles: The kings of Tharſhiſh and of the iſles ſhall bring preſents. Pſalm lxxii. 10. But by the iſles are generally meant thoſe of the Mediterranean.

From all theſe paſſages it may be concluded, that the country of Tharſhiſh was upon the Mediterranean, and that probably it was no other than Cilicia.

Therefore when we read of ſhips fitted out upon the red ſea, or at Ezion-geber, in order to go to Tharſhiſh, we muſt conclude one of theſe two things; either that there were two countries called Tharſhiſh, one upon the ocean, and another upon the Mediterranean, which, however, ſeems very improbable, or that ſhips of Tharſhiſh in general, ſignifies nothing elſe but veſſels able to bear a long voyage, namely large merchant ſhips, in oppoſition to the ſmall craft intended for a home trade in navigable rivers.

Ver.

Ver. 23. So king Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth, for riches and for wiſdom.] The latter of which he begged of God, who graciouſly promiſed to add the former, which he did to admiration.

Ver. 24. And all the earth ſought to Solomon to hear his wiſdom.] That is, the great men of many nations, came, as the queen of Sheba did, to be acquainted with his wiſdom, which they heard was a Divine gift.

Ver. 25. And they brought every man his preſent, veſſels of ſilver, and veſſels of gold, and garments, and armour, and ſpices, horſes and mules, a rate year by year.] This ſeems to ſignify that they ſo highly prized his wiſdom, that they not only courted his friendſhip, but voluntarily ſent him a certain yearly preſent, to teſtify their deſire of its continuance.

Ver. 26. And Solomon gathered together chariots and horſemen.] In a time of profound peace, he thought it prudent to be prepared for war, as a certain method to preſerve the public tranquility: Tho' the ſureſt means to ſecure the happineſs he then enjoyed, had been to obſerve ſtrictly the commands of God.

——And he had a thouſand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thouſand horſemen.] Four hundred of theſe chariots, Joſephus ſays, were preſented to Solomon by the princes and great men before-mentioned; and he had a thouſand of his own before. But what need was there for ſo many ſtables for his horſes, as ſeem to be mentioned, chap. iv. 26. namely, forty thouſand? But the word is not ſtables, but ſtalls, every horſe having a ſtall, not a ſtable to himſelf. And ſome chariots had two, ſome four horſes belonging to them; and yet, even thus, there were too many ſtalls. We therefore muſt ſuppoſe, that the horſes did not always ſtand in one place, but ſometimes in one country, ſometimes in another. Where it was neceſſary there ſhould be ſtalls for them, when the king removed from city to city.

———Whom he beſtowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jeruſalem.] Part of theſe words relates to the chariots, which were kept in the cities Solomon had built for them in the country, chap. ix. 19. and the latter to the horſemen, who were always with the king at Jeruſalem, as Abarbinel underſtands theſe words. Thus Solomon took care they ſhould not be burthenſome to his people, by being kept all in one place.

Ver. 28. And king Solomon had horſes brought out of Egypt.] Herein he ſeems to have tranſgreſſed the law of God, which prohibited the perſon who ſhould be king of Iſrael from multiplying horſes, and from cauſing the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he ſhould multiply horſes, Deut. xvii. 16. unleſs we underſtand that law to ſignify, that the king ſhould not multiply horſes, merely for oſtentation, and unneceſſary grandeur, and to a number beyond what was requiſite for his own uſe and the ſecurity of his dominions.

——And linnen yarn.] Moſt think byſſus, fine linnen, is here meant; which was a great commodity in Egypt.

———The king's merchants received the linnen yarn at a price.] It is acknowledged by all interpreters, that theſe, and the following words in the next verſe, are very obſcure.

Ver. 29. And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt for ſix hundred ſhekels of ſilver, and an horſe for an hundred and fifty: and ſo for all the kings of the Hittites, &c.] Bochart ſeems to have cleared up theſe words with the greateſt perſpicuity, by taking the Hebrew word mikveh, not for linnen yarn, or fine linnen; but for the toll or cuſtom that was taken for the horſes brought out of Egypt. And thus he tranſlates the whole; "horſes were brought "up to Solomon out of Egypt; and as for the toll or cuſ- "tom, the merchants of king Solomon hired it at a price" (that is, redeemed it of the king of Egypt for a certain ſum which was conſtantly paid) "and a chariot coming "out of Egypt, went out for ſix hundred ſhekels of ſilver, "and an horſe for an hundred and fifty, and ſo for all the "kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did "they bring by their hands." The ſenſe of which words is plain, namely, that noble horſes being found at thoſe times in few countries but Egypt, Pharaoh would not ſuffer them to be carried from thence without a great tribute, which he exacted for them, which was ſix hundred ſhekels for a chariot, and a hundred and fifty for a horſe. This muſt not be underſtood to be the price at which they were bought, but the cuſtom paid for them; otherwiſe, every horſe would have been of the ſame value, which is abſurd to ſuppoſe. Solomon therefore, ſending for many thouſand horſes out of Egypt, prevailed with Pharaoh, his father-in-law, to free him from the expenſive tribute, and to accept of a certain ſum of money to be paid him every year inſtead of it. Thus being freed from the cuſtom, which was demanded of all others; all the kings of the Hittites, and Syrians, bought their chariots and horſes of Solomon's merchants, who could afford to ſell them cheaper than they could purchaſe them in Egypt. This explication of the paſſage before us, we think diſcharges Solomon from the imputation of multiplying horſes in oppoſition to the Moſaic law, ſince many of them were ſold to the princes who were his neighbours.

By the kings of the Hittites are meant the rulers of ſome of that nation, who were driven out by the Iſraelites, and lived in the north-eaſt of the land of Canaan, or in ſome part of Arabia.

CHAP. XI.

1 Solomons wives and concubines. 4 In his old age they draw him to idolatry. 9 God threatneth him. 14 Solomons adverſaries were Hadad, who was entertained in Egypt. 23 Rezon who reigned in Damaſcus. 26 And Jeroboam, to whom Ahijah propheſieth. 41 Solomons acts, reign, and death: Rehoboam ſucceedeth him.

BUT king Solomon loved many ſtrange women (together with the daughter of Pharaoh) women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites:

2 Of the nations concerning which the LORD ſaid unto the children of Iſrael, Ye ſhall not go in to them, neither ſhall they come in unto you, for ſurely they will turn away your heart after their gods: Solomon clave unto theſe in love.

3 And he had ſeven hundred wives, princeſſes, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart.

4 For it came to paſs when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father.

5 For Solomon went after Aſhtoreth the goddeſs of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites.

6 And Solomon did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and went not fully after the LORD, as did David his father.

7 Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemoſh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jeruſalem; and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon.

8 And likewiſe did he for all his ſtrange wives, which burnt incenſe, and ſacrificed unto their gods.

9 ¶ And the LORD was angry with Solomon, becauſe his heart was turned from the LORD God of Iſrael, which had appeared unto him twice,

10 And had commanded him concerning this thing, that he ſhould not go after other gods: but he kept not that which the LORD commanded.

11 Wherefore the LORD ſaid unto Solomon, Foraſmuch as this is done of thee, and thou haſt not kept my covenant and my ſtatutes which I have commanded thee, I will ſurely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy ſervant.

12 Notwithſtanding in thy days I will not do it, for David thy fathers ſake: but I will rend it out of the hand of thy ſon.

13 Howbeit, I will not rend away all the kingdom: but I will give one tribe to thy ſon, for David my ſervants ſake, and for Jeruſalems ſake which I have choſen.

14 ¶ And the LORD ſtirred up an adverſary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite; he was of the kings ſeed in Edom.

15 For it came to paſs when David was in Edom, and Joab the captain of the hoſt was gone up to bury the ſlain, after he had ſmitten every male in Edom:

16 (For ſix months did Joab remain there with all Iſrael, until he had cut off every male in Edom)

17 That Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites of his fathers ſervants with him, to go into Egypt; Hadad being yet a little child.

18 And they aroſe out of Midian, and came to Paran, and they took men with them out of Paran, and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, which gave him an houſe, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land.

19 And Hadad found great favour in the ſight of Pharaoh, ſo that he gave him to wife the ſiſter of his own wife, the ſiſter of Tahpenes the queen.

20 And the ſiſter of Tahpenes bare him Genubath his ſon, whom Tahpenes weaned in Pharaohs houſe: and Genubath was in Pharaohs houſhold among the ſons of Pharaoh.

21 And when Hadad heard in Egypt that David ſlept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the hoſt was dead, Hadad ſaid to Pharaoh, Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.

22 Then Pharaoh ſaid unto him, But what haſt thou lacked with me, that behold, thou ſeekeſt to go to thine own country? And he anſwered, Nothing: howbeit let me go in any wiſe.

23 ¶ And God ſtirred him up another adverſary, Rezon the ſon of Eliadah, which fled from his lord Hadadezer king of Zobah.

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, when David ſlew them of Zobah: and they went to Damaſcus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damaſcus.

25 And he was an adverſary to Iſrael all the days of Solomon, beſide the miſchief that Hadad did: and he abhorred Iſrael, and reigned over Syria.

26 ¶ And Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda, Solomons ſervant (whoſe mothers name was Zeruah, a widow woman) even he lift up his hand againſt the king.

27 And this was the cauſe that he lift up his hand againſt the king: Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breaches of the city of David his father.

28 And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour: and Solomon ſeeing the young man that he was induſtrious, he made him ruler over all the charge of the houſe of Joſeph.

29 And it came to paſs at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jeruſalem, that the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite found him in the way: and he had clad himſelf with a new garment; and they two were alone in the field.

30 And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it in twelve pieces.

31 And he ſaid to Jeroboam, Take thee ten pieces: for thus ſaith the LORD, the God of Iſrael, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee:

32 (But he ſhall have one tribe for my ſervant Davids ſake, and for Jeruſalems ſake, the city which I have choſen out of all the tribes of Iſrael)

33 Becauſe that they have forſaken me, and have worſhipped Aſhtoreth the goddeſs of the Zidonians, Chemoſh the god of the Moabites, and Milcom the god of the children of Ammon, and have not walked in my ways, to do that which is right in mine eyes, and to keep my ſtatutes and my judgments, as did David his father.

34 Howbeit, I will not take the whole kingdom out of his hand: but I will make him prince all the days of his life, for David my ſervants ſake, whom I choſe, becauſe cauſe he kept my commandments and my ſtatutes:

35 But I will take the kingdom out of his ſons hand, and will give it unto thee, even ten tribes.

36 And unto his ſon will I give one tribe, that David my ſervant may have a light alway before me in Jeruſalem, the city which I have choſen me to put my name there.

37 And I will take thee, and thou ſhalt reign according to all that thy ſoul deſireth, and ſhalt be king over Iſrael.

38 And it ſhall be, if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, and wilt walk in my ways, and do that is right in my ſight, to keep my ſtatutes and my commandments, as David my ſervant did; that I will be with thee, and build thee a ſure houſe, as I built for David, and will give Iſrael unto thee.

39 And I will for this afflict the ſeed of David, but not for ever.

40 Solomon ſought therefore to kill Jeroboam: and Jeroboam aroſe, and fled into Egypt, unto Shiſhak king of Egypt, and was in Egypt until the death of Solomon.

41 ¶ And the reſt of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wiſdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?

42 And the time that Solomon reigned in Jeruſalem, over all Iſrael, was forty years.

43 And Solomon ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. But king Solomon loved many ſtrange women (together with the daughter of Pharaoh.)] Hitherto we have ſeen nothing in the life of this prince but what gives us the higheſt idea of his wiſdom, piety, and magnificence; but the remainder of his reign will preſent a very different ſcene to our view: for Solomon, emphatically called the wiſe, the beloved of God, and who was admired by all the world for ſo many excellent virtues, became ſuch a ſlave to the paſſion of love in his old age, that he married an amazing multitude of ſtrange women, without diſtinction of nation, or religion, and without the leaſt regard of God's expreſs commands to the contrary; till at length he too ſadly verified the Divine Warning, Deut. vii. 3, &c. by ſuffering himſelf to be ſeduced into all manner of idolatry. The number of his wives amounted to 700, beſide 300 concubines, or wives of the ſecond rank; and his complaiſance for them went ſo far as to build altars and temples to all their falſe deities; inſomuch, that the neighbourhood of Jeruſalem, if not the city itſelf, was filled with idols and temples, and the mount of Olives, which was over-againſt it, was defiled with two altars, one to Chemoſh the god of Moab, and the other to Moloch, the god of the Ammonites.

Such a ſhameful defection could not but be highly diſpleaſing to God; and Solomon was ſoon made ſenſible of it, when the Divine Majeſty appeared the third time to him in a dream, and told him, that his ingratitude ſhould cauſe every part of the kingdom to be rent from his ſon, except the ſingle tribe of Judah. And tho' God was ſo gracious as to promiſe Solomon that the kingdom ſhould continue entire during his days, yet he humbled him at the ſame time, by letting him know, that this mitigation of the puniſhment was not granted for his ſake, but for that of David, who had faithfully ſerved his Divine Benefactor.

Ver. 14. And the Lord ſtirred up an adverſary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite.] Tho' God did not execute the threatning he had denounced, till after the death of Solomon, yet he began to afflict him, by raiſing up adverſaries againſt him, who diſturbed his repoſe, in the declining period of his life, when he was moſt deſirous of tranquility. The firſt mentioned of theſe adverſaries was Hadad, who had conceived a mortal hatred to Solomon, ever ſince the death of David, who had endeavoured to deſtroy him with every male in the country of Edom.

For tho' the troops of David had ſlain eighteen thouſand of the Edomites in the battle that was fought in the valley of Salt, 2 Sam. viii. 13. and tho' this battle ſeems to have decided the fate of their kingdom, yet the Edomites were not ſuffered to live, but were maſſacred where ever they could be found for the ſpace of ſix months, by Joab, who ſlew all the males that fell into his hands; ſo that happy were they who could eſcape into foreign countries. Hadad being then a child, was conveyed away by a ſmall party of his father's ſervants, and they took the way of Midian, thinking, perhaps, to croſs the Red-ſea: And having received information that they and their young king would be favourably treated by Pharaoh, they carried him to the court of that monarch, who received and ſupported Hadad with all the dignity becoming his royal rank; and to compleat the favours which were unſparingly heaped upon him, the ſiſter of Tahpenes, Pharaoh's queen, was given to him in marriage.

Hadad, tho' he lived in great eaſe and ſplendor in the Egyptian court, yet being conſcious of his birth, unwilling to live in dependance, thirſting after his kingdom, and bitterly remembring the ſeverity of the conqueror, meditated revenge, and eſpecially when he heard that David and the terrible Joab were dead. The favourable time for his purpoſe at length appeared, when Solomon was immerſed in all kinds of impurity; and Hadad thinking this to be a proper opportunity for the gratification of his revenge, addreſſed himſelf to his brother-in-law, Pharaoh, and intreated this prince to diſmiſs him. The wiſe king of Egypt, perceiving the great troubles and dangers to which Hadad muſt be expoſed in executing his deſign, would have prevailed upon him to lay aſide all thoughts of ſo tumultuous an undertaking; but Hadad repeating his importunity, obtained the diſmiſſion he deſired, and not only proved a very troubleſome enemy to Solomon, but ſhewed the way to others, as it is thought, to be the ſame: He however, did not recover his own kingdom. He had a ſon, whoſe name was Genubath, by his Egyptian wife, and he was educated in a princely manner, in the palace of Pharaoh; but Hadad failing in his view upon his own kingdom, eſtabliſhed himſelf, as it is thought, in Syria, where we find the royal family bore the name of Hadad.

Ver. 23. And God ſtirred him up another adverſary, Rezon, the ſon of Eliadah, which fled from his lord Hadadezer, king of Zobah.] Hadadezer, or Haderezer, the ſon of Rehob (whom we take to have been the firſt ſole king of Zobah, and to have laid the foundations of his ſon Hadarezers grandeur) was a great and ambitious prince, and remarkable for his unfortunate wars with king David, He had warred with advantage againſt the king of Hamath; aiming, as we imagine, at the univerſal monarchy of Syria; but when he oppoſed the progreſs of David toward the reduction of the land which had been promiſed to Abraham and his ſeed, his good fortune forſook him; for in the firſt battle he fought with David he loſt a thouſand chariots, ſeven thouſand horſe, and twenty thouſand foot. The Syrians of Damaſcus then ſent their army to reinforce him, upon which he ventured upon a ſecond battle, in which he was again defeated, with the loſs of twenty-two thouſand men. But, it is likely, nothing perplexed him more than the defection of Rezon, afterward king of Damaſcus, who who leading either the auxiliaries that were ſent from that province, or Hadadezer's own troops, uncertain which, deſerted him in the midſt of his adverſe fortune, and putting himſelf at the head of a band of robbers, began to make excurſions into the country about Damaſcus, till he at laſt made himſelf maſter of that city, and became the founder of the noble kingdom of Damaſcus, which roſe upon the ruins of the kingdom of Zobah.

The Sacred Text declares, that this Rezon was an adverſary to Iſrael, all the days of Solomon; but this is not to be underſtood of the whole reign of Solomon, which, for the moſt part, was peaceable; but of all the days which remained of his life, from the time when his wives publickly exerciſed their idolatry, unto the day of his death.

Ver. 29. And Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, an Ephrathite of Zereda, Solomon's ſervant, (whoſe mother's name was Zeruah, a widow woman) even he lift up his hand againſt the king.] He created a diſaffection to the king, in the minds of the people, by his ſeditious inſinuations.

Ver. 27. And this was the cauſe that he lift up his hand againſt the king: Solomon built Millo, and repaired the breaches of David his father.] Theſe works of Solomon were the occaſion of Jereboam's advancement, as appears by the next verſe. For the king being engaged in many buildings, choſe qualified perſons to overſee his works; among whom Jeroboam was one, and he took this opportunity to infuſe into the people a diſaffection to Solomon and his government, as Abarbinel and other of the Jews imagine. For he repreſented, ſay they, the building of Millo, as a work of vanity, and intended only for the gratification of Pharaoh's daughter. And the breaches of the city of David, they take to have been only open places, at which the people might enter, and eaſily come many ways to the king's palace; but when they were ſtopped up by Solomon, acceſs was not ſo eaſy and commodious, ſince the people were obliged to go about. This was repreſented by Jeroboam, as a grievance, eſpecially ſince ſuch heavy burdens were laid upon the people to maintain theſe expenſive works.

Ver. 28. And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour: and Solomon ſeeing the young man that he was induſtrious, he made him ruler over all the charge of the houſe of Joſeph.] He was a bold enterprizing man, and likewiſe very induſtrious in what he undertook. This latter qualification recommended him to the favour of Solomon, who commiſſioned him to levy the taxes throughout the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, the two branches of Joſeph's houſe. One day, when Jeroboam went out of Jeruſalem, clad with a new garment, he was met by the prophet Ahijah the Shilonite, at which time there were only theſe two in the field. Ahijah then ſeizing Jeroboam's new garment, cut it in twelve pieces, and ſaid to Jeroboam, take ten of them to thyſelf, for thus ſaith the Lord, I will divide and rend the kingdom of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee. "But one "tribe (that is, one tribe beſide his own, or Benjamin, may "be conſidered but as one tribe, both of them having a "ſhare in Jeruſalem and lying near one to the other) ſhall "remain to him, for my ſervant David's ſake, and for "Jeruſalem's ſake, which I have choſen among all the "tribes of Iſrael; becauſe they have forſaken me and "have worſhipped Aſhtoreth the goddeſs of the Zidonians, Chemoſh the God of the Moabites, and Milcom "the god of the children of Ammon: Notwithſtanding, "I will not deprive him of the kingdom, for he ſhall "enjoy it to his death; but I will diſpoſſeſs his ſon of "it; and will give thee ten tribes belonging to it. And "unto his ſon will I give one tribe, that David my ſervant may have a light always before me in Jeruſalem," (or a ſucceſſion of kings who are called the light of the people, becauſe they chear them by their comfortable influence when they govern well) "If therefore thou "obeyeſt my orders, and walkeſt in my ways like David "my ſervant, I will eſtabliſh thy houſe for ever, and put "thee in poſſeſſion of the kingdom of Iſrael."

Jeroboam, who was already ill inclined to Solomon, being now encouraged by Ahijah's promiſe, began to ſtir and ſollicit the people to revolt. The king having received intelligence of his deſigns, reſolved to have his perſon ſeized; but he eluded the danger, by flying to the court of Shiſhak king of Egypt, where he continued till the death of Solomon.

Shiſhak is the firſt Egyptian king who is called by his proper name in ſcripture, and according to the great Sir Iſaac Newton, he was the Seſoſtris and Oſiris of the Egyptians, and the Bacchus of the Greeks; but we ſhall reſerve the proofs of this opinion for a more proper place.

Ver. 41. And the reſt of the acts of Solomon, and all that he did, and his wiſdom, are they not written in the book of the acts of Solomon?] Abarbinel thinks the kings of Iſrael maintained ſome wiſe man who recorded all the tranſactions of their reign. Perhaps this cuſtom was begun by Solomon, for we read not of any book of the acts of David, and out of theſe annals the Sacred Writer of this book extracted what he thought moſt uſeful.

Ver. 42. And the time that Solomon reigned in Jeruſalem, over all Iſrael, was forty years.] There ſeems to have been no need to ſay he reigned in Jeruſalem, ſince he reigned over all Iſrael; if it had not been to ſhew the great tranquility of his reign, which was ſuch, that he did not go out to war like other kings, but lived quietly in his royal city.

Ver. 43. And Solomon ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in the city of David his father, &c.] Solomon died about the fifty eighth year of his age, and was buried in the ſtately ſepulchre of his father David. Joſephus affirms, that he reigned eighty years, and lived ninety-four. Were that indeed true, his impieties might be reaſonably attributed to his extreme dotage; and perhaps this was the motive which induced the Jewiſh hiſtorian to ſpin out his life ſo far beyond the Sacred Text.

The Chriſtians, both ancient and modern, who have embraced the notion, that Solomon repented before his death, are too numerous to be quoted here. Many of them have followed the probable opinion of ſome of the fathers, that the book of Eccleſiaſtes was the reſult of his penitent meditations; and there are, indeed, a number of expreſſions in that book, which are very like thoſe of a perſon who feels a ſincere remorſe for his great extravagancies, and is deſirous of warning others againſt them.

Another argument for his repentance is taken from the promiſe made by God to his father, where, ſpeaking of Solomon, whom he had choſen to build his temple, he adds, "I will eſtabliſh his kingdom for ever: I will be to "him a father, and he ſhall be a ſon to me: If he com-"mit iniquity I will chaſtiſe him with the rod of men: — "But my mercy will I not cauſe to depart from him as I "did from Saul," 2 Sam. vii. 13, &c.

It is likewiſe ſaid in 2 Chron. xi. 17. that Rehoboam and his ſubjects walked in the way of David and Solomon but three years; and afterward that he did evil in the ſight of the Lord. Solomon's way, therefore, being mentioned with that of David, and oppoſed to that of his wicked ſon, ſeems to imply that it was right; which could not have been ſaid of it had he died impenitent.

But, as ſolid as theſe charitable reaſons may appear to ſome, ſeveral of the ancient fathers, as well as modern authors, have not ſcrupled to call his repentance in queſtion; and ſome of them have poſitively denied it. We ſhall jubjoin ſome of their reaſons, 1. Solomon's ſins of idolatry, and love of ſtrange women, are recorded in the ſtrongeſt terms, but not a word is mentioned in the whole Scripture, with relation to his forſaking them. 2. God being highly offended with him, actually cut off ten tribes from his poſterity, which it is imagined he would hardly have done if this prince had been a real penitent. 3. David and others, who repented of their tranſgreſſions, had not only a part of the puniſhment abated, but their converſion is particularly recorded; and it is then asked why Solomon ſhould be the only perſon whoſe repentance is omitted? It is likewiſe thought extraordinary, that he could write the book of Eccleſiaſtes after his converſion, and yet ſuffer all the monuments of his idolatry to continue: which monuments are ſaid to have remained till the time of Joſiah, 2 Kings xxiii 13.

We think the ſilence of the Sacred Scripture, with reſpect to Solomon's repentance, is but a weak and raſh argument againſt it. We read nothing of the repentance of Adam after his fatal fall, nor of that of Noah after his criminal intemperance; but are we therefore to conclude, that thoſe great patriarchs were damned? God forbid.

As

As to Solomon's not causing the monuments of his idolatry to be destroyed, it ought to be considered, that as he was seduced into an apostacy from God in his old age, we may therefore suppose, that if he became a penitent, it was but a short time before his death, when his bodily infirmities, and the disorders which had been created in the kingdom by his enemies, might not afford him a sufficient opportunity to destroy those opprobrious memorials of his idolatry.

As we think therefore, upon the whole, that the silence of the Scripture, with respect to Solomon's conversion, is no solid proof of his impenitency, we conceive it to be but decent to entertain that opinion of him which is most consistent with charity, and is not repugnant to any particulars recorded of him in the Sacred Scriptures. We must observe, however, that the dreadful example of his apostacy ought to inspire us with the greatest diseteem of all temporal grandeur and prosperity; since Solomon himself was unable to defend himself against their fatal ensnarements, tho' he possessed the highest degree of wisdom that was ever bestowed upon a mortal.

Of all the excellent works which Solomon composed, we have nothing now remaining but his Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Canticles. Several other books have, indeed, been ascribed to him, especially those of Ecclesiasticus, the Wisdom and the Psalter of Solomon; but they are now universally acknowledged to be of a more modern date. The latter consists of eighteen Psalms, artfully collected out of the canonical Psalms, and of some of the Prophets. A copy of this Psalter is in the Vienna library, and is placed between the books of Ecclesiasticus, and the Wisdom of Solomon. It seems also to have been inserted into our Alexandrian manuscript, by its being mentioned in the index; but how it came either to be lost or torn out of that manuscript, is unknown to us.

Some of the orientals impute to Solomon the invention of the Syriac and Arabic letters; and the Syrians have a tradition, that Solomon communicated the characters of their alphabet to Hiram king of Tyre, and, at the request of that prince, translated not only his own books, but all the other parts of Scripture, into the Syrian language. But this tradition deserves no credit.

Josephus assures us, that Solomon composed books of inchantment, and prescribed several manners of exorcism, or driving away dæmons, so that they should return no more. He likewise adds, that he had seen experiments of it by one Eleazar a Jew, who, in the presence of the emperor Vespasian and his sons, and of the officers in the army, cured several who were possessed. The exorcist, it seems, placed a ring under the nose of the dæmoniac, in which ring was inclosed a certain root, prescribed by Solomon; and, at the meer smell of it, the malignant spirit came forth, overset the patient, and left him as if he were dead. For a farther proof of this cure, they placed, at some distance from the patient, a glass of water, which was overturned by the dæmon as he passed away, (Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2.) Origen also relates several particulars of the conjuration used by the Jews in his time, to drive out devils, by making use of some writings which they pretended to have received from Solomon, (Orig. in Matth. xxvi. tract. 35. p. 63.) The Greeks tell us, that this prince composed several treatises of physic, and likewise wrote upon the nature of stones, and vegetables, and simples, (Psell. apud Glycam. parte 2. Annal. p. 182, 183. Suidas in Ezechia. Syncell. p. 200. Cedren. p. 77, 89. Anastas. q. 41. Justin. seu al. qu. 55. ad Orthodox. Procop. Gazæ ad 3 Reg. iv. 33.)

The Orientals have entertained such a grand idea of the merit and extraordinary qualifications of this prince, that they give the name of Solomon, or Soliman, to all the kings whom they thought had possessed the universal empire of the whole earth, and say, that, like Solomon, they had a familiar spirit or Genius, which, in the shape of a bird, delivered all their messages, and performed all their orders. But leaving these dreams to those who are credulous enough to believe them, let us return to the Sacred Historian before us, who best deserves our attention.

CHAP. XII.

1 The Israelites assembled at Shechem to crown Rehoboam, by Jeroboam make a suit of relaxation unto him. 6 Rehoboam refusing the old mens counsel, by the advice of young men, answereth them roughly. 16 Ten tribes revolting, kill Adoram, and make Rehoboam to flee. 21 Rehoboam raising an army, is forbidden by Shemaiah. 25 Jeroboam strengtheneth himself by cities, 26 And by the idolatry of the two calves.

AND Rehoboam went to Shechem: for all Israel were come to Shechem to make him king.

2 And it came to pass when Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was yet in Egypt, heard of it (for he was fled from the presence of king Solomon, and Jeroboam dwelt in Egypt)

3 That they sent and called him: and Jeroboam, and all the congregation of Israel came and spake unto Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy father made our yoke grievous: now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam consulted with the old men that stood before Solomon his father, while he yet lived, and said, How do you advise, that I may answer this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day, and wilt serve them, and answer them, and speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him:

9 And he said unto them, What counsel give ye, that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us, lighter?

10 And the young men that were grown up with him, spake unto him, saying, Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, My little finger shall be thicker than my fathers loins.

11 And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father hath chaſtiſed you with whips, but I will chaſtiſe you with ſcorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, ſaying, Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king anſwered the people roughly, and forſook the old mens counſel that they gave him;

14 And ſpake to them after the counſel of the young men, ſaying, My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke; my father alſo chaſtiſed you with whips, but I will chaſtiſe you with ſcorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for the cauſe was from the LORD, that he might perform his ſaying, which the LORD ſpake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat.

16 ¶ So when all Iſrael ſaw that the king hearkned not unto them, the people anſwered the king, ſaying, What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the ſon of Jeſſe: to your tents, O Iſrael: now ſee to thine own houſe, David. So Iſrael departed unto their tents.

17 But as for the children of Iſrael which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam ſent Adoram, who was over the tribute; and all Iſrael ſtoned him with ſtones, that he died: therefore king Rehoboam made ſpeed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jeruſalem.

19 So Iſrael rebelled againſt the houſe of David unto this day.

20 And it came to paſs when all Iſrael heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they ſent and called him unto the congregation, and made him king over all Iſrael: there was none that followed the houſe of David, but the tribe of Judah only.

21 ¶ And when Rehoboam was come to Jeruſalem, he aſſembled all the houſe of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, an hundred and fourſcore thouſand choſen men, which were warriors, to fight againſt the houſe of Iſrael, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon.

22 But the word of God came unto Shemaiah the man of God, ſaying,

23 Speak unto Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon king of Judah, and unto all the houſe of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, ſaying,

24 Thus ſaith the LORD, Ye ſhall not go up, nor fight againſt your brethren the children of Iſrael: return every man to his houſe, for this thing is from me. They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart according to the word of the LORD.

25 ¶ Then Jeroboam built Shechem, in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein, and went out from thence, and built Penuel.

26 And Jeroboam ſaid in his heart, Now ſhall the kingdom return to the houſe of David:

27 If this people go up to do ſacrifice in the houſe of the LORD at Jeruſalem, then ſhall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, and they ſhall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king took counſel, and made two calves of gold, and ſaid unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jeruſalem: behold thy gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he ſet the one in Beth-el, and the other put he in Dan.

30 And this thing became a ſin: for the people went to worſhip before the one, even unto Dan.

31 And he made an houſe of high places, and made prieſts of the loweſt of the people, which were not of the ſons of Levi.

32 And Jeroboam ordained a feaſt in the eighth month, on the fifteenth day of the month, like unto the feaſt that is in Judah, and he offered upon the altar (ſo did he in Beth-el) ſacrificing unto the calves that he had made: and he placed in Beth-el the prieſts of the high places which he had made.

33 So he offered upon the altar which he had made in Beth-el, the fifteenth day of the eighth month, even in the month which he had deviſed of his own heart: and ordained a feaſt unto the children of Iſrael, and he offered upon the altar, and burnt incenſe.

Ver. 1. And Rehoboam went to Shechem: for all Iſrael were come to Shechem to make him king.] As Rehoboam was the eldeſt, if not the only ſon of Solomon, he accordingly claimed the kingdom by right of birth; in which circumſtance he had no competitor; but as it was neceſſary for him to have his title acknowledged by all the people, an aſſembly was held for that purpoſe at Shechem, an an ancient city in the mountains of Ephraim: perhaps thoſe who eſpouſed the intereſt of Jeroboam, whoſe diſaffection to Solomon has been already repreſented, might prevail upon the people to aſſemble at a place ſo diſtant from Jeruſalem as Shechem was, and amidſt thoſe tribes, where the creatures of Jeroboam were moſt numerous. But however that fact may be, the people in general ſeemed inclinable to acknowledge Rehoboam for their king, and only intreated him to lighten their yoke, and grant them a diminution of thoſe taxes and exactions under which they had groaned for a conſiderable part of his father's reign. The king took three days to conſider of what anſwer he ſhould return; and as he had then attained to the fortieth year of his age, it was reaſonable to imagine, that he would have ſuffered himſelf to be guided by the ſalutary advice of his grave counſellors, who recommended to him a conduct of moderation and lenity, as the beſt expedient to render himſelf popular, and to eſtabliſh his authority over his ſubjects. Rehoboam, inſtead of complying with this advice, was ſo ſtrangely infatuated, as to prefer the counſels of ſome raſh and unexperienced youths, who had been brought up at court with him, and inſtead of ſoothing the people the third day, he anſwered them, in a haughty tone, that he intended to govern them with much greater ſeverity than his father had ever practiſed; and that if they preſumed to murmur, he would uſe ſcorpions inſtead of whips to chaſtiſe their inſolence. This inconſiderate anſwer had all the effects that Jeroboam, and his adherents, could poſſibly deſire; for it immediately provoked the people to renounce all future allegiance to the houſe of David; and having murdered Adoram, whom the king had ſent to appeaſe the tumult, when he grew ſenſible of the error he had committed; ten of the tribes choſe Jeroboam to be their head. The inſpired writer informs us that "the king hearkened "not unto the people: for the cauſe was from the Lord, "that he might perform his ſaying, which the Lord ſpake "by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the ſon of Ne"bat," ver. 15. That is, God infatuated the mind of Rehoboam, in order to accompliſh the purpoſe he had predetermined; otherwiſe that prince could never have been ſo blinded as not to ſee how baſely he reflected upon his father, and how unlikely it was that the people would ſubmit to ſuch a tyrannic power as he intended to exerciſe over them.

This defection, however, was not general, for the tribes of Judah and Benjamin continued faithful to their prince, and conveyed him with all ſpeed to Jeruſalem, to ſecure him from the inſults of the revolters. Aſſoon as he arrived at that city, he cauſed an army to be raiſed out of the two tribes who adhered to him, and they accordingly muſtered an hundred and fourſcore thouſand choſen warriors, in order to reduce the other tribes to their obedience; but whilſt they were preparing for a battle, the prophet Shemaiah came and acquainted Jeroboam that this alienation of the people was from God, and perſuaded him to deſiſt, which he accordingly did for the preſent. Jeroboam, on the other hand, thought on nothing but how to ſecure his new kingdom, and took the advantage of that peaceful interval, to rebuild Shechem and Penuel, the former of which he made the ſeat of his reſidence. Theſe two places had been in a manner deſtroyed, the former by Abimelech, Judges ix. 45. and the latter by Gideon, Judges viii. 17. This laſt was a very important place on the other ſide Jordan, and very proper to keep the two tribes and a half in awe. Shechem was alſo a ſtrong place by nature, about forty miles from Jeruſalem, and ſo conveniently ſituated as to become the metropolis of this new kingdom; and ſuch it continued to be, till the building of Samaria by Omri, and it reſumed that dignity after this latter had been deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians. We find it called Sychar, John iv. 4. which is a term of contempt, given to it by the tribe of Judah, for it ſignifies drunkard.

There was ſtill one circumſtance which Jeroboam feared might in time reconcile the ten tribes to the houſe of David, namely, their going three times a year to Jeruſalem, ver. 16, 17. to celebrate the paſſover, the pentecoſt, and the feaſt of tabernacles, to which all Iſrael was obliged to reſort, in order to worſhip God in the ſolemn manner preſcribed by the Moſaic law; and Jeroboam did not ſo far rely on the promiſe made to him by the prophet Ahijah, as to run the riſk of becoming the victim of the people's inconſtancy. This apprehenſion, therefore, made him ſacrifice religion to his ſafety, and to ſet up a couple of golden calves, the one at Dan, and the other at Bethel, which were at the two extremities of his kingdom; to which places he commanded the people to repair, for the worſhip of God, without going to Jeruſalem.

As criminal as Jeroboam's intention was, he yet acted judiciouſly in the choice of theſe two cities, which, beſide the commodiouſneſs of their ſituation, were rendred venerable by ancient events. Bethel was in the tribe of Ephraim, on the confines of that of Benjamin, and Euſebius ſays it was twelve miles from Jeruſalem. It was called Luz, at the time when Jacob fled from the rage of his brother Eſau: But the Divine Viſion with which he was honoured in the plains of Luz, when he beheld that myſterious ladder which reached from earth to heaven, cauſed him to cry out when he awaked, "how dreadful is this "place! This is none other but the houſe of God, and "this is the gate of heaven." He therefore called that place Bethel, which ſignifies the houſe of God, Gen. xxviii. 11, &c. It was eaſy therefore for Jeroboam to make the people believe, that this place would prove auſpicious to them, and that God would there be favourable to the poſterity of that patriarch, to whom he had teſtified ſo much goodneſs.

Bethel was ſeated at the ſouthern extremity of Jeroboam's dominions, and Dan at the northern. This latter was ſituated in a pleaſant and fertile country, near the ſprings of Jordan, and was called Leſhem, at the time when the Iſraelites made themſelves maſters of Paleſtine, Joſh. xix. 47. The Danites took the city of Leſhem, deſtroyed all the inhabitants, and then gave it the name of their own tribe. In proceſs of time, this tribe eſtabliſhed in that city, a form of public worſhip, intermixed with idolatry, Judges xviii. 30, 31. and which perhaps, ſubſiſted there to the time of Jeroboam. This place therefore, ſeemed very proper for the new kind of worſhip, which Jeroboam intended to eſtabliſh there, ſince a conſiderable part of the people looked upon that city as ſacred.

The uſe of images in the Divine Worſhip, was expreſly prohibited by the law of Moſes, and yet this impious prince had the preſumption to cauſe two golden calves to be made, and ſet up as proper objects of the people's veneration.

Learned men are much divided in their opinions of the motive which induced Jeroboam to repreſent the God of Iſrael by thoſe odious figures. Voſſius is poſitive that the Apis of the Egyptians was the ſymbol of the patriarch Joſeph, who had preſerved their country from famine, and that this was the reaſon why Jeroboam, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, preferred this figure to all others, as thinking it would be more agreeable to thoſe tribes who were the immediate poſterity of Joſeph. [Voſſius de origine & progreſſu idolatriæ, l. i. p. 215.] Grotius entertained the ſame opinion, and repreſents this proceeding of Jeroboam, as a political expedient to make the people ſenſible that the crown belonged in a peculiar manner to the tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, who deſcended from the great patriarch whoſe wiſdom and abilities had preſerved the anceſtors of their nation, But as much as we eſteem the authority of theſe two very learned men, we think the hypotheſis they have advanced is not to be ſupported. For, in the firſt place, if Joſeph had been worſhipped by all the Egyptians as their moſt favourite Divinity, how was it poſſible for a king of that country to be ignorant who Joſeph was, and not to know the obligations he had conferred upon the Egyptians? How could he be unacquainted with the motives to the public worſhip of Apis, if this pretended deity had been the ſymbol of Joſeph? And yet Moſes informs us, "that there aroſe a new king "over Egypt, which knew not Joſeph," Exod. i. 8.

Secondly, this king was not only ignorant who Joſeph was, and that he had formerly preſerved Egypt from periſhing by famine, but he even determined to deſtroy the Iſraelites, and the Egyptians teſtified their approbation of that deſign. But can any one imagine, that this people would adore Joſeph under the ſhape of Apis, and yet form a reſolution to perſecute and deſtroy the poſterity of that god?

Thirdly,

Thirdly, if the Egyptians had paid ſo much veneration to the memory of Joſeph, would they have neglected his bones as they did, and have ever ſuffered the Iſraelites to carry away thoſe precious remains of the benefactor they adored? And yet we read, that "Moſes took the bones "of Joſeph with him," Exod. xiii. 19. in obedience tothe injunction of that illuſtrious patriarch, before his death.

Plutarch expreſly declares, in his Treatiſe de Iſide, that the ſoul of Oſiris is finely adumbrated by the image of Apis. And Herodotus informs us, that Oſiris was Bacchus. Now as the moſt learned Sir Iſaac Newton has made it evident, that Oſiris, and Bacchus, were only different names of the great king Seſoſtris, and that Seſoſtris is the Shiſhak mentioned in Scripture: And as this Shiſhak reigned in Egypt in the time of Jeroboam, who took ſanctuary in his court, before he was elected king by the ten tribes, it is evident to a demonſtration, that the Egyptian Apis, could not be the ſymbol of Joſeph, and even that the worſhip of that pretended deity was not eſtabliſhed in Egypt, when Jeroboam ſet up his golden calves; ſince Seſoſtris, or Shiſhak, was ſtill living, and was not worſhipped as the Egyptian Apis, till after his death.

We ſhall have occaſion in the courſe of this work, to offer ſome curious particulars with relation to Seſoſtris, and the Divine Worſhip which the Egyptians rendered to him, after his deceaſe.

From hence, therefore, we conclude, that the Egyptians never conſidered their Apis as the ſymbol of Joſeph, and therefore, that Jeroboam, when he ſet up his golden calves, could not have recourſe to any circumſtance relating to that patriarch, in order to give a ſanction to the innovations he was then making in the worſhip of God.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Jeroboams hand, that offered violence to him that propheſied againſt his altar at Bethel, withereth, 6 and at the prayer of the prophet, is reſtored. 7 The prophet, refuſing the kings entertainment, departeth from Bethel. 11 An old prophet ſeducing him, bringeth him back. 20 He is reproved by God, 23 ſlain by a lyon, 26 buried by the old prophet, 31 who confirmeth his propheſy. 33 Jeroboams obſtinacy.

AND behold, there came a man of God out of Judah, by the word of the LORD unto Beth-el: and Jeroboam ſtood by the altar to burn incenſe.

2 And he cried againſt the altar in the word of the LORD, and ſaid, O altar, altar, thus ſaith the LORD, Behold, a child ſhall be born unto the houſe of David, Joſiah by name, and upon thee ſhall he offer the prieſts of the high places that burn incenſe upon thee, and mens bones ſhall be burnt upon thee.

3 And he gave a ſign the ſame day, ſaying, This is the ſign which the LORD hath ſpoken; Behold, the altar ſhall be rent, and the aſhes that are upon it ſhall be poured out.

4 And it came to paſs when king Jeroboam heard the ſaying of the man of God, which had cried againſt the altar in Beth-el, that he put forth his hand from the altar, ſaying, Lay hold on him. And his hand which he put forth againſt him, dried up, ſo that he could not pull it in again to him.

5 The altar alſo was rent, and the aſhes poured out from the altar, according to the ſign which the man of God had given by the word of the LORD.

6 And the king anſwered and ſaid unto the man of God, Intreat now the face of the LORD thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be reſtored me again. And the man of God beſought the LORD, and the kings hand was reſtored him again, and became as it was before.

7 And the king ſaid unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refreſh thyſelf, and I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God ſaid unto the king, If thou wilt give me half thine houſe, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread, nor drink water in this place:

9 For ſo was it charged me by the word of the LORD, ſaying, Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the ſame way that thou cameſt.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el.

11 ¶ Now there dwelt an old prophet in Beth-el, and his ſons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Beth-el: the words which he had ſpoken unto the king, them they told alſo to their father.

12 And their father ſaid unto them, What way went he? for his ſons had ſeen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.

13 And he ſaid unto his ſons, Saddle me the aſs. So they ſaddled him the aſs, and he rode thereon.

14 And went after the man of God, and found him ſitting under an oak; and he ſaid unto him, Art thou the man of God that cameſt from Judah? And he ſaid, I am.

15 Then he ſaid unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.

16 And he ſaid, I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread, nor drink water with thee in this place:

17 For it was ſaid to me by the word of the LORD, Thou ſhalt eat no bread, nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou cameſt.

18 He ſaid unto him, I am a prophet alſo as thou art, and an angel ſpake unto me by the word of the LORD, ſaying, Bring him back with thee into thine houſe, that that he may eat bread, and drink water. But he lied unto him.

19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his houſe, and drank water.

20 ¶ And it came to paſs as they ſat at the table, that the word of the LORD came unto the prophet that brought him back:

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD, For as much as thou haſt diſobeyed the mouth of the LORD, and haſt not kept the commandment which the LORD thy God commanded thee,

22 But cameſt back, and haſt eaten bread, and drunk water in the place of the which the LORD did ſay to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water; thy carcaſe ſhall not come unto the ſepulchre of thy fathers.

23 ¶ And it came to paſs after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he ſaddled for him the aſs, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and ſlew him: and his carcaſe was caſt in the way, and the aſs ſtood by it, the lion alſo ſtood by the carcaſe.

25 And behold, men paſſed by, and ſaw the carcaſe caſt in the way, and the lion ſtanding by the carcaſe: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.

26 And when the prophet that brought him back from the way, heard thereof, he ſaid, It is the man of God, who was diſobedient unto the word of the LORD: therefore the LORD hath delivered him unto the lion which hath torn him, and ſlain him, according to the word of the LORD, which he ſpake unto him.

27 And he ſpake to his ſons, ſaying, Saddle me the aſs. And they ſaddled him.

28 And he went and found his carcaſe caſt in the way, and the aſs and the lion ſtanding by the carcaſe: the lion had not eaten the carcaſe, nor torn the aſs.

29 And the prophet took up the carcaſe of the man of God, and laid it upon the aſs, and brought it back: and the old prophet came to the city, to mourn, and to bury him.

30 And he laid his carcaſe in his own grave, and they mourned over him, ſaying, Alas my brother.

31 And it came to paſs after he had buried him, that he ſpake to his ſons, ſaying, When I am dead, then bury me in the ſepulchre wherein the man of God is buried, lay my bones beſide his bones.

32 For the ſaying which he cried by the word of the LORD againſt the altar in Beth-el, and againſt all the houſes of the high places which are in the cities of Samaria, ſhall ſurely come to paſs.

33 ¶ After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way, but made again of the loweſt of the people, prieſts of the high places: whoſoever would, he conſecrated him, and he became one of the prieſts of the high places.

34 And this thing became ſin unto the houſe of Jeroboam, even to cut it off, and to deſtroy it from off the face of the earth.

Ver. 1. And behold there came a man of God out of Judah, by the word of the Lord unto Bethel.] This prophet is thought by the Jews to be Iddo, whoſe viſion againſt Jeroboam is mentioned, 2 Chron. ix. 29. But this is an evident miſtake; for Iddo was alive in the days of Ahijah, the ſon of Rehoboam, 2 Chron. xiii. 22. whereas the prophet here ſpoken of was killed within a few hours after he had uttered his prophecy.

——And Jeroboam ſtood by the altar to burn incenſe.] It ſeems probable from hence, that Jeroboam intended to unite the prieſthood and the regal dignity in his own perſon; and as his main deſign was to alienate the people from the ſervice at Jeruſalem, he thought it proper to give his own idolatrous inſtitutions an air of grandeur, by officiating himſelf at the altar.

Ver. 2. And he cried againſt the altar in the word of the Lord, and ſaid, O altar, altar.] Some think the prophet mentioned the altar twice, to ſignify that he prophecied againſt that in Dan, as well as againſt this in Bethel.

——Thus ſaith the Lord, Behold a child ſhall be born unto the houſe of David, Joſiah by name.] This prediction, which was accompliſh'd above three hundred years after it had been uttered by the prophet, is a demonſtration that he was inſpired by God, whoſe providence rules, and whoſe fore-knowledge reaches even to the moſt contingent things, as the birth of Joſiah and his name, which depended upon his parents will, certainly were.

——And upon thee ſhall he offer the prieſts of the high places that burn incenſe upon thee, and mens bones ſhall be burnt upon thee.] The meaning is not, that Joſiah ſhould burn the prieſts alive, but that he would ſlay the prieſts of the high places, and then burn their bones, in order to defile this altar.

——And he gave a ſign the ſame day, ſaying, This is the ſign which the Lord hath ſpoken; behold the altar ſhall be rent, &c.] This could not be done, but by the power of God, who thereby demonſtrated, that he had commiſſion'd the prophet to ſpeak theſe words, which were verified immediately.

When Jeroboam heard the prophet's threatning, he was fired with indignation, and ſtretched out his hand to cauſe him to be apprehended, but to his unſpeakable ſurprize, felt it ſtruck by an inviſible power, which wither'd it in an inſtant, and ſhrunk up all the inſtruments of motion. The people, as well as the king, were undoubtedly ſtruck with horror at this ſudden judgement from heaven; and to increaſe the general conſternation, the altar was ſplit aſunder in a miraculous manner, and the aſhes of the impure victims were ſcattered in the air. Jeroboam was now ſenſible, that the terrors of God were ſet in rray againſt him, and became an humble ſupplicant to the man of God, whom a moment before he had threatned with death. "Intreat now the face of the "Lord thy God, ſaid he, and pray for me, that my hand "may be reſtored me again." He was convinced that the cure he needed, muſt come from the ſame hand which inflicted the wound, and that it was in vain to ask aſſiſtance from the brutal gods he had ſo lately ſet up as objects of adoration. The prophet, inſtead of reſenting the indignity with which he had been intreated, immediately had recourſe to prayer, upon which the king's hand was inſtantly reſtored to its former vigour: A new miracle was hereby wrought for his converſion.

Ver. 7. And the king ſaid unto the man of God, Come home with me, and refreſh thyſelf, and I will give thee a reward.] A ſtrange inſenſibility! He deſires to requite the inſtrument, but takes no notice of the great author of the mercy he had experienced. His hand was reſtored, but his heart was as corrupt as ever.

Ver. 8. And the man of God ſaid unto the king, If thou wilt give me half thine houſe, I will not go in with thee.] He was commanded by God, as it follows in the next verſe, not to have any communication with thoſe who had apoſtatiſed from their religion; and if he had ate or drank with them, he would have entered into a familiar ſociety with idolaters. But why he ſhould not return the ſame way he came, as he declares at the cloſe of the next verſe, is not ſo evident. Le Clerc conjectures, that God laid this injunction on his prophet, in order to prevent his being overtaken and brought back by thoſe whom Jeroboam might happen to ſend after him; but if that had been the caſe, we think the prophet would hardly have diſcovered that order to the king, who then might have defeated its intended effect. Some think this prohibition was to repreſent, that even the way to Bethel was abominable, and therefore not to be frequented: Or, to ſhew, how much we ought to abhor that which leads to evil. But it ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion, ſignifying that he ſhould be conſtant and ſtedfaſt in executing the charge committed to him. For a perſon who acts in any particular without ſucceſs, is ſaid to return by the way he went, Iſaiah xxxvii. 29, 34. And therefore, not to return by the way one went, is effectually to accompliſh a buſineſs.

Ver. 11. Now there dwelt an old prophet in Bethel.] The Jews ſay his name was Micah, and that he was a worſhipper of the true God, tho' he dwelt among this idolatrous people. But whether he was a holy man may juſtly be doubted, for we find him guilty of a premeditated falſhood ver. 18. where it is expreſly ſaid that he lied. And tho' a holy prophet might poſſibly have continued in the dominions of Jeroboam, yet he never would have quitted his habitation at Samaria, as this man did, 2 Kings xxiii. 18. to go and dwell at Bethel, the chief ſeat of idolatry, unleſs with a deſign to preach againſt it, which it is evident he did not; for his ſons ſeem to have been preſent at, and to have joined with others in the idolatrous worſhip Jeroboam had eſtabliſhed, and that not without their fathers connivance. This old prophet therefore may be ſuppoſed to have taken up his reſidence at Bethel, in expectation of ſome great advantages from Jeroboam.

——— And his ſons came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Bethel, &c.] It appears from hence, that they were preſent when Jeroboam ſtood at the altar, and therefore joined in that deteſtable worſhip.

Ver. 12. And their father ſaid unto them, What way went he! for his ſons had ſeen what way the man of God went.] They had a curioſity to obſerve what way ſuch a remarkable perſon went to his own country; imagining perhaps, their father would be deſirous to have ſome diſcourſe with him.

When his ſons had informed him of the way the prophet had taken, the old man rode after him, and ſoon found him repoſing himſelf under a ſhady oak; where he accoſted him in a very obliging manner, and deſired he would return with him, in order to take ſome refreſhment at his houſe. The man of God declined the invitation for ſome time, alledging the Divine prohibition which reſtrained him from taking any ſuſtenance at Bethel, upon which the old prophet aſſured him, that he was inſpired by the Spirit of God as well as himſelf, and was ordered by an angel to bring him back, and entertain him at his houſe. In this laſt particular he was guilty of a great falſhood, notwithſtanding which, Le Clerc ſuppoſes he did not act from any malicious motive, but merely from a principle of humanity, which made him apprehenſive that the man of God would periſh with hunger and fatigue, if ſome charitable perſon did not afford him a hoſpitable refreſhment. But it ſeems to us, that this old man intended to diſcredit the prophet of the Lord, by prevailing upon him to diſobey the order he had received; in conſequence of which it would be evident, that he was unable to diſtinguiſh truth from falſhood, which would be repreſented as an imperfection that no way comported with the quality of a prophet of God.

Ver. 19 So he went back with him, and did eat bread in his houſe, and drink water.] He thought it poſſible that God might, in pity to him, revoke his prohibition, becauſe he was hungry and weary. This was a weakneſs in him, for he ought to have believed the revelation he had received, and of which he was certain, and not have truſted to what another pretended was revealed to him, which he could not be ſure was true. If God, in compaſſion to him, had thought fit to recal his command, he would have made that declaration to the prophet himſelf, and as plainly allowed him to refreſh himſelf, as before he had forbidden it.

Ver. 20. And it came to paſs as they ſat at the table that the word of the Lord came unto the prophet that brought him back.] God would not vouchſafe to ſpeak to him who had diſobeyed his command, but rather to the other, tho' in his name he had feigned an untruth.

Ver. 21. And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, ſaying.] He ſeems to have been in a great agony, from the conſideration of what he had done, and of what the prophet from Judah was to ſuffer.

———Thus ſaith the Lord, Foraſmuch as thou haſt diſobeyed the mouth of the Lord, &c.] To diſobey the mouth of God, is to diſobey the command utter'd by him.

Ver. 22. But cameſt back, and haſt eaten bread, and drunk water in the place of the which the Lord did ſay to thee, eat no bread and drink no water; thy carcaſe ſhall not come unto the ſepulchre of thy fathers.] Thou ſhalt not die a natural, but a violent death, and thy carcaſe ſhall not be buried in the proper ſepulchre. Tho' this was all the puniſhment that was to be inflicted upon him, yet it was to be eſteemed a kind of curſe, and a note of infamy, as the contrary was counted an honour and a bleſſing.

Ver. 23. And it came to paſs after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he ſaddled for him the aſs, &c.] The old prophet did not offer to accompany him part of the way; his guilty conſcience making him fear, perhaps, to be involved in the ſame judgment with him.

Ver. 24. And when he was gone, a lion met him by the way, and ſlew him.] Not far from Bethel was a wood, out of which came the two ſhe-bears that deſtroyed forty-two children, 2 Kings ii. 24. And it is probable that this lion iſſued out of that wood, and ſlew the prophet.

———And his carcaſe was caſt in the way, and the aſs ſtood by it; the lion alſo ſtood by the carcaſe.] This was to admoniſh all the prophets to be ſtrict in the obſervance of God's commands, and to ſhew Jeroboam what he might expect, ſince the Divine Majeſty had not ſpared a leſſer offender. But as God ſhewed his ſeverity in taking away this prophet's life, ſo he remarkably teſtified his approbation of him, in that the lion ſtood quietly by his carcaſe, and did not devour the beaſt on which he rode: as if he was merely ſent by a Divine appointment, to execute what God had threaten'd; but could not move one ſtep beyond that commiſſion. For when the prophet had ſuffered what God intended, he takes even his dead body into his protection, and would not ſuffer it to be violated.

Ver. 25. And behold, men paſſed by, and ſaw the carcaſe caſt in the way, and the lion ſtanding by the carcaſe: and they came and told it in the city where the old prophet dwelt.] They related it as a wonderful thing, that the lion ſhould neither fall upon his prey, nor hurt them who paſſed by.

Ver. 26. And when the prophet that brought him back from the way, heard thereof, he ſaid, It is the man of God who was diſobedient unto the word of the Lord.] Diſobedience dience in great caſes hath been capitally puniſhed by men in authority. For the Athenians put their ambaſſadors to death, whom they had ſent into Arcadia, (tho' they had performed their buſineſs very well to their content) ἐπεὶ ἑτέρου ὁδοῦ ἦλθον, καὶ ἃ τοῖς προστεταγμένον, becauſe they came another way, and not that which had been preſcribed to them. Which is the very caſe before us. Ælian, lib. vi. Var. Hiſtor. cap. 5.

Ver. 28. And he went and found his carcaſe caſt in the way, and the aſs and the lion ſtanding by the carcaſe, &c.] It was altogether miraculous, that the lion, contrary to his nature, did not eat the carcaſe, nor kill the aſs, nor aſſault the travellers who paſſed by; nor ſpring upon the old prophet and his beaſt. And that the aſs ſtood ſo quietly, and was not terrified at the ſight of a lion. And, more than this, the lion ſtood by the carcaſe a long time, till theſe ſtrange particulars were related in the city; as a faithful defender of the prophet's body from other wild beaſts, which rendred the miracle more illuſtrious, and was a demonſtration that all this did not happen by chance. And that although God, for wiſe and juſt reaſons, thought fit to take away the propher's life, yet his remains were precious to him, and his ſoul lived in his ſight.

Ver. 29. And the prophet took up the carcaſe of the man of God, &c.] His intention being to make a ſolemn funeral for him.

Ver. 30. And he laid his carcaſe in his own grave.] Which was the greateſt honour that he could render to his memory.

Ver. 31. And it came to paſs after he had buried him, that he ſpake to his ſons, ſaying, When I am dead, then bury me in the ſepulchre wherein the man of God is buried, &c.] This he ordered, not merely out of affection to the prophet, but to ſecure himſelf from the judgment he had threatned, ver. 2.

Ver. 33. After this thing Jeroboam returned not from his evil way.] All theſe wonderful works created no change in him, and he perſiſted in his idolatrous courſe, which ſhews him to have been infatuated to a ſurpriſing degree.

CHAP. XIV.

1 Abijah being ſick, Jeroboam ſendeth his wife diſguiſed with preſents to the prophet Ahijah at Shiloh. 5 Ahijah forewarned by God, denounceth Gods judgment. 17 Abijah dieth and is buried. 19 Nadab ſucceedeth Jeroboam. 21 Rehoboams wicked reign. 25 Shiſhak ſpoileth Jeruſalem. 29 Abijam ſucceedeth Rehoboam.

AT that time Abijah the ſon of Jeroboam fell ſick.

2 And Jeroboam ſaid to his wife, Ariſe, I pray thee, and diſguiſe thyſelf, that thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam: and get thee to Shiloh; behold, there is Ahijah the prophet, which told me that I ſhould be king over this people.

3 And take with thee ten loaves, and cracknels, and a cruſe of honey, and go to him: he ſhall tell thee what ſhall become of the child.

4 And Jeroboams wife did ſo, and aroſe, and went to Shiloh, and came to the houſe of Ahijah: but Ahijah could not ſee, for his eyes were ſet by reaſon of his age.

5 ¶ And the LORD ſaid unto Ahijah, Behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to ask a thing of thee for her ſon, for he is ſick: thus and thus ſhalt thou ſay unto her: for it ſhall be when ſhe cometh in, that ſhe ſhall feign herſelf to be another woman.

6 And it was ſo, when Ahijah heard the ſound of her feet, as ſhe came in at the door, that he ſaid, Come in, thou wife of Jeroboam, why feigneſt thou thyſelf to be another? for I am ſent to thee with heavy tidings.

7 Go, tell Jeroboam, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Foraſmuch as I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee prince over my people Iſrael,

8 And rent the kingdom away from the houſe of David, and gave it thee; and yet thou haſt not been as my ſervant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes.

9 But haſt done evil above all that were before thee: for thou haſt gone and made thee other gods, and molten images to provoke me to anger, and haſt caſt me behind thy back:

10 Therefore behold, I will bring evil upon the houſe of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam him that piſſeth againſt the wall, and him that is ſhut up and left in Iſrael, and will take away the remnant of the houſe of Jeroboam, as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

11 Him that dieth of Jeroboam in the city, ſhall the dogs eat: and him that dieth in the field, ſhall the fowls of the air eat: for the LORD hath ſpoken it.

12 Ariſe thou therefore, get thee to thine own houſe: and when thy feet enter into the city, the child ſhall die.

13 And all Iſrael ſhall mourn for him, and bury him: for he only of Jeroboam ſhall come to the grave, becauſe in him there is found ſome good thing toward the LORD God of Iſrael, in the houſe of Jeroboam.

14 Moreover, the LORD ſhall raiſe him up a king over Iſrael, who ſhall cut off the houſe of Jeroboam that day: but what? even now.

15 For the LORD ſhall ſmite Iſrael, as a reed is ſhaken in the water, and he ſhall root up Iſrael out of this good land, which he gave to their fathers, and ſhall ſcatter them beyond the river, becauſe they have made their groves, provoking the LORD to anger.

16 And he ſhall give Iſrael up, becauſe of the ſins of Jeroboam, who did ſin, and who made Iſrael to ſin.

17 ¶ And

17 ¶ And Jeroboams wife aroſe, and departed, and came to Tirzah: and when ſhe came to the threſhold of the door, the child died.

18 And they buried him, and all Iſrael mourned for him, according to the word of the LORD, which he ſpake by the hand of his ſervant Ahijah the prophet.

19 And the reſt of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred, and how he reigned, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.

20 And the days which Jeroboam reigned, were two and twenty years: and he ſlept with his fathers, and Nadab his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

21 ¶ And Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon reigned in Judah: Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned ſeventeen years in Jeruſalem, the city which the LORD did chooſe out of all the tribes of Iſrael, to put his name there: and his mothers name was Naamah an Ammoniteſs.

22 And Judah did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and they provoked him to jealouſy with their ſins which they had committed, above all that their fathers had done.

23 For they alſo built them high places, and images, and groves on every high hill, and under every green tree.

24 And there were alſo ſodomites in the land, and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the LORD caſt out before the children of Iſrael.

25 ¶ And it came to paſs in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shiſhak king of Egypt came up againſt Jeruſalem:

26 And he took away the treaſures of the houſe of the LORD, and the treaſures of the kings houſe, he even took away all; and he took away all the ſhields of gold which Solomon had made.

27 And king Rehoboam made in their ſtead braſen ſhields, and committed them unto the hands of the chief of the guard, which kept the door of the kings houſe.

28 And it was ſo, when the king went into the houſe of the LORD, that the guard bare them, and brought them back into the guard-chamber.

29 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

30 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.

31 And Rehoboam ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and his mothers name was Naamah an Ammoniteſs. And Abijam his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. At that time Abijah the ſon of Jeroboam fell ſick.] This apoſtate prince perſiſted in his contempt of God and religion, and therefore God proceeded in his controverſy againſt him. His ſon Abijah, who perhaps was the eldeſt, fell ſick; and Jeroboam ſent his wife to enquire what ſhould become of the child, of Ahijah the prophet, who lived little noticed at Shiloh, blind with age, but bleſſed with the viſions of the Almighty. God gave the prophet notice of her approach; which enabled him, ſo ſoon as ſhe entred the door, to ſay, "Come in "thou wife of Jeroboam; why feigneſt thou thy ſelf to be "another?" ver. 6. To her he delivered the meſſage of God with great boldneſs, upbraiding Jeroboam with ingratitude to his Divine Benefactor, who had made him king; charging him with impiety, idolatry, and apoſtacy, in ſetting up other gods, and molten images, to provoke the Lord to anger; foretelling the utter ruin of all the males of his houſe; that the child then ſick ſhould die, in mercy to his ſoul. "He only of Jeroboam ſhall come to "the grave, becauſe in him there is found ſome good thing "toward the Lord God of Iſrael, in the houſe of Jero-"boam," ver. 13. The prophet then added, that another family ſhould be ſet up to rule over Iſrael, (which was fulfilled in Baaſha, of the tribe of Iſſacchar) and that judgments ſhould be inflicted upon the people of Iſrael for conforming to the idolatrous worſhip which Jeroboam had eſtabliſhed. After hearing this dreadful meſſage, the wife of Jeroboam retired with an anxious heart, and went to Tirzah, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, which had been famous in ancient times, and as Jeroboam found it more commodious than Shechem, where he firſt ſettled, it became the royal ſeat from his time, to the reign of Omri, who purchaſed the mountain of Shimron, and there built the city of Samaria, which then became the capital of this kingdom. Aſſoon as the wife of Jeroboam came to the door of her houſe, the child died, and all Iſrael mourned for him.

Ver. 19. And the reſt of the acts of Jeroboam, how he warred, and how he reigned, behold, they are written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.] Not in that book in the Bible, which is called Chronicles; but in ſuch a book as that wherein the acts of Solomon were recorded day by day, chap. xi. 41.

Ver. 20. And the days which Jeroboam reigned, were two and twenty years: and he ſlept with his fathers.] His ſleeping with his fathers ſeems to be a phraſe ſignifying only that he died, as all before him did; not that he was buried with them, for they were private men, and he a king, who, without doubt, was magnificently interred by Nadab, his ſon, and ſucceſſor.

Ver. 21. And Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon reigned in Judah: Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign.] And therefore was born a year before Solomon came to the crown, for he reigned but forty years.

———And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammoniteſs.] It is much that David ſhould ſuffer Solomon to marry one of this country, unleſs ſhe was proſelyted, as the daughter of Pharaoh is ſuppoſed to have been. He himſelf indeed, had eſpouſed the daughter of Talmai, king of Geſhur; but the ſon he had by her proved ſo wicked, that it might have been a caution to him not to marry Solomon to a ſtranger, eſpecially as he intended him for the heir of his crown. And if ſhe was proſelyted, yet many think ſhe did not ſo change her religion, but that ſhe inſtilled ill principles into her ſon, and corrupted him. Nay, ſhe was one of thoſe women who ſeduced Solomon himſelf into idolatry, women of Ammon being reckoned among his ſtrange wives.

Ver. 22. And Judah did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and they provoked him to jealouſy, &c.] By joining other gods together with him. It is amazing that Rehoboam, at the beginning of his reign, ſhould act well for three years, 2 Chron. xi. 17. and then forſake the law of God,

2 Chron.

2 Chron. xii. 1. and degenerate from his worſhip, into ſuch groſs idolatry as exceeded that of Jeroboam.

Ver. 23. For they alſo built them high places, and images, and groves on every high hill, and under every green tree.] They multiplied altars on every high hill, erected images, and built temples for them; which we take to be meant by groves, for thoſe could not be under every green tree; nor could they be ſaid to be built, but planted. Therefore it is reaſonable to interpret them, temples, or places of Divine Worſhip.

Ver. 24. And there were alſo ſodomites in the land.] This kind of wickedneſs was frequently a concomitant of idolatry, chap. xv. 12. 2 Kings xxiii. 7. Rom. i. 24. For among the Heathens, the greateſt impurities were practiſed in their groves by the worſhippers of Venus, Bacchus, and Priapus.

Ver. 25. And it came to paſs in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shiſhak king of Egypt came up againſt Jeruſalem.] It is the opinion of many learned men, that this Shiſhak is the ſame king of Egypt, whom Herodotus calls Seſoſtris; and we cannot ſee any ſolid reaſon againſt it. For Herodotus himſelf declares, that there were many titles which Seſoſtris, king of Egypt, had erected in various countries, moſt of which titles were not then extant; yet there were other inſcriptions in Paleſtine and Syria, which that famous hiſtorian had viewed with his own eyes, (lib. 2. cap. 106.) This is a plain evidence, that the great king Seſoſtris had, according to Herodotus, been in Paleſtine; he therefore may well be thought to be the ſame with Shiſhak, and with Bacchus.

The great Sir Iſaac Newton is of opinion, that Seſoſtris is the Oſiris of the Egyptians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, and the Seſac, or Shiſhak of the Scripture; toward the proof of which, he produces the following arguments.

1. Bacchus the conqueror loved two women, Venus and Ariadne; by the laſt of theſe he had ſons who were Argonants; therefore the great Bacchus flouriſhed but one generation before the Argonautic expedition. This Bacchus was potent at ſea, (Vide Hermippum apud Athenæum, lib. 1.) conquered eaſtward as far as India, returned in triumph, brought his army over the Helleſpont; conquered Thrace, left muſic, dancing and poetry there; killed Lycurgus king of Thrace, and Pentheus, the grandſon of Cadmus; gave the kingdom of Lycurgus to Tharops; and one of his minſtrels, called by the Greeks Calliope, to Oeagrus the ſon of Tharops; and of Oeagrus and Calliope, was born Orpheus, who ſailed with the Argonauts. This Bacchus, therefore, was contemporary to Seſoſtris; and both being kings of Egypt, and potent at ſea, and likewiſe great conquerors, and carrying on their conqueſts into India and Thrace, they muſt be one and the ſame man.

2. Dicæarchus, as he is cited by the ſcholiaſt upon Apollonius, (Argonaut. l. 4. v. 272.) repreſents Oſiris and Orus, two generations older than Seſoſtris, ſaying, that after Orus, the ſon of Oſiris and Iſis, reigned Seſonchoſis. The people of Naxus made Bacchus two generations older than Theſeus, and for that end feigned two Minos's and two Ariadne's. Now, by the conſent of all antiquity, Oſiris and Bacchus were one and the ſame king of Egypt. This is affirmed by the Egyptians, as well as by the Greeks; and ſome of the ancient mythologiſts, as Eumolpus and Orpheus, called Oſiris by the names of Dionyſus and Sirius, (Diod. l. 1. p. 7.) Oſiris was king of all Egypt, and a great conqueror, and came over the Helleſpont in the days of Triptolemus, ſubdued Thrace, and there killed Lycurgus: his expedition, therefore, falls in with that of the great Bacchus. Oſiris, Bacchus, and Seſoſtris, lived about the ſame time, and, by the relation of hiſtorians, were all of them kings of all Egypt, reigned at Thebes, adorned that city, and were very potent by land and ſea: all three were great conquerors, and carried on their conqueſts by land through Aſia, as far as India: all three came over the Helleſpont, and were there in danger of loſing their army: all three conquered Thrace, and there put a ſtop to their victories, and returned back from thence into Egypt: all three left pillars with inſcriptions in their conqueſts, and therefore all three muſt be one and the ſame king of Egypt; and this king can be no other than Shiſhak. All Egypt, including Thebais, Ethiopia, and Libya, had no common king before the expulſion of the ſhepherds, who reigned in the Lower Egypt; no conqueror of Syria, India, Aſia Minor, and Thrace, before Shiſhak; and the Sacred Hiſtory admits of no Egyptian conqueror of Paleſtine before this king.

3. Bacchus had Libyan women in his army, and they were commanded by Minerva, herſelf a Libyan. Diodorus calls her Myrina, and ſaith, that ſhe was queen of the Amazons in Libya, and there conquered the Atlantides and Gorgons, and then made a league with Orus the ſon of Iſis, ſent to her by his father Oſiris, or Bacchus, for that purpoſe; and paſſing through Egypt, ſubdued the Arabians, and Syria and Cilicia, and came thro' Phrygia, viz. in the army of Bacchus, to the Mediterranean; but paſſing over into Europe, was ſlain with many of her women by the Thracians and Scythians, under the conduct of Sipylus a Scythian, and Mopſus a Thracian, whom Lycurgus, king of Thrace, had baniſhed. This was that Lycurgus who oppoſed the paſſage of Bacchus over the Helleſpont, and was ſoon after conquered by him and ſlain: But afterward Bacchus met with a repulſe from the Greeks, under the conduct of Perſeus, who ſlew many of his women, as Pauſanias relates, (lib. 2. c. 20. p. 155.) and was aſſiſted by the Scythians and Thracians, under Sipylus and Mopſus; which repulſes, together with the revolt of his brother Danaus, put a ſtop to his victories; and, in returning home, he left part of his men in Colchis, and at mount Caucaſus, under Æetes and Prometheus; and his women, upon the river Thermodon near Colchis, under their new queens Marthesia and Lampeto; for Diodorus, ſpeaking of the Amazons, who were ſeated at Thermodon, ſaith, that they dwelt originally in Libya, and there reigned over the Atlantides; and, invading their neighbours, conquered as far as Europe, (lib. 3. p. 130. & Schol. Apollonii, lib. 2.) Ammianus declares, (lib. 22. c. 8.) that the ancient Amazons breaking through many nations, attacked the Athenians, and there receiving a great ſlaughter, retired to Thermodon. And Juſtin affirms (lib. 2. c. 4.) that thoſe Amazons had at firſt, he means at their firſt coming to Thermodon, two queens, who called themſelves daughters of Mars; and that they conquered part of Europe, and ſome cities in Aſia, viz. in the reign of Minerva, and then ſent back part of their army with a great booty under their ſaid new queens; and that Marthesia being afterward ſlain, was ſucceeded by her daughter Orithya, and ſhe by Penthesilia; and that Theſeus captivated and married Antiope the ſiſter of Orithya. Hercules made war upon the Amazons, and, in the reign of Orithya and Penthesilia, they came to the Trojan war; whence the firſt wars of the Amazons in Europe and Aſia, and their ſettling in Thermodon, were but one generation before thoſe actions of Hercules and Theſeus, and but two before the Trojan war, and ſo fell in with the expedition of Seſoſtris. And ſince they warred in the days of Iſis, and her ſon Orus, and were a part of the army under Bacchus, or Oſiris, we have here a farther argument for making Oſiris and Bacchus contemporary to Seſoſtris, and all three one and the ſame king with Shiſhak.

4. The Greeks reckon Oſiris and Bacchus to be ſons of Jupiter, and the Egyptian name of Jupiter is Ammon. Manetho, in his eleventh and twelfth Dynaſties, as he is cited by Africanus and Euſebius, names theſe four kings as reigning in order; Ammenemes, Geſongeſes, or Seſonchoris, the ſon of Ammenemes, who was ſlain by his eunuchs, and Seſoſtris, who ſubdued all Aſia, and a part of Europe. Geſongeſes, and Seſonchoris, are corruptly written for Seſonchoſis; and the two firſt of theſe four kings, Ammenemes and Seſonchoſis, are the ſame with the two laſt, Ammenemes and Seſoſtris, that is, with Ammon and Shiſhak; for Diodorus ſaith, that Oſiris built a temple at Thebes to his father Jupiter Ammon, who reigned in that city: and Thymæſtes, who was contemporary to Orpheus, wrote expreſly, that the father of Bacchus was Ammon, a king reigning over part of Libya; that is, a king of Egypt reigning over that part of Libya, anciently called Ammonia. Πᾶσα ἡ Διβύη ἅπας ἐκαλεῖτο ἀπὸ Ἀμμῶνος. All Libya was called Ammonia from Ammon; [Steph. in Ἀμμωνία] that is, the king of Egypt, from whom Thebes was called No Ammon, and Ammon-No, the city of Ammon: and by the Greeks, Dioſpolis, the city of Jupiter Ammon. Here again our author ſeems to demonſtrate, that Seſoſtris, and Oſiris, were the ſame perſon.

And to corroborate what is ſaid in the preceding article; Seſoſtris, upon his returning home, divided Egypt by meaſure among the Egyptians; and this gave a beginning to ſurveying and geometry. And becauſe Seſoſtris, or Shiſhak, in order to render the Nile more uſeful, dug canals from it, and thereby made a general diſtribution of its water; this river was conſecrated to him, and he was called by its ſeveral names, Ægyptus, Siris, Nilus; and Plutarch obſerves, that the ſyllable O, put before the word Siris by the Greeks, made it ſcarce intelligible to the Ægyptians.

Sir Iſaac Newton thinks it appears, That Seſoſtris was alſo Shiſhak, or Seſac, becauſe the firſt conqueſts this king is ſaid to have made, were Troglodytica, Libya, and Ethiopia, and in the firſt year of Rehoboam, Seſoſtris, or Shiſhak, came out of Egypt with a great army of Libyans, Troglodytes, and Ethiopians; ſpoiled the temple; reduced Judæa into ſervitude, and went on conquering, firſt eaſtward toward India, and then weſtward as far as Thrace. For God had given him the kingdom of the countries, 2 Chron. xii. 2, 3,—8.

But there is no one argument on which this incomparable chronologer lays a greater ſtreſs, for the proof of what he advances concerning Seſoſtris, than the following. Solon having travelled into Egypt, and converſed with the prieſts of Sais about their antiquities, wrote a poem of what he had learned, but did not finiſh it; and this poem fell into the hands of Plato, who relates out of it, that at the mouth of the ſtraits, near Hercules's pillars, was an iſland called Atlantis, the people of which, nine thouſand years before the time of Solon, reigned over Libya as far as Egypt, and over Europe as far as the Tyrrhene-ſea; and all this force collected into one body invaded Egypt and Greece, and whatever was contained within the pillars of Hercules, but was reſiſted and ſtop'd by the Athenians and other Greeks, and thereby the reſt of the nations not yet conquered were preſerved: He ſaith alſo, that in thoſe days, the gods having finiſhed their conqueſts, divided the whole earth amongſt themſelves, partly into larger, partly into ſmaller portions; and inſtituted temples and ſacred rites to themſelves; and that the iſland of Atlantis fell to the lot of Neptune, who made his eldeſt ſon Atlas, king of the whole iſland, a part of which was called Gadir. And that in the hiſtory of the ſaid wars, mention was made of Cecrops, Erechtheus, and others before Theſeus, and alſo of the women who warred with the men, and of the habit and ſtature of Minerva, the ſtudy of war in thoſe days being common to men and women. By all theſe circumſtances it is manifeſt, that theſe gods were the Dii magni majorum gentium, and lived between the age of Cecrops and Theſeus; and that the wars which Seſoſtris, with his brother Neptune, made upon the nations by land and ſea, and the reſiſtance he met with in Greece, and the following invaſion of Egypt by Neptune, are here deſcribed; and how the captains of Seſoſtris ſhared their conqueſts among themſelves, as the captains of Alexander the Great divided his conqueſts long after, and inſtituting temples and prieſts, and ſacred rites to themſelves, cauſed the nations to worſhip them after their death as gods; and that the iſland Gadir, or Gades, with all Libya, fell to the lot of him who after his death was deified by the name of Neptune. The time therefore when thoſe things were done, is by Solon limited to the age of Neptune the father of Atlas: for Homer tells us, that Ulyſſes, preſently after the Trojan war, found Calypſo the daughter of Atlas in the Ogygian iſland, perhaps Gadir, and therefore the time abovementioned, was but two generations before the Trojan war. This is that Neptune, who with Apollo, or Orus, fortified Troy with a wall, in the reign of Laomedon the father of Priamus, and left many natural children in Greece, ſome of whom were Argonauts, and others contemporaries to the Argonauts; and therefore he flouriſhed but one generation before the Argonautic expedition, and by conſequence about 400 years before Solon went into Egypt; but the Egyptian prieſts in thoſe 400 years had magnified the ſtories and antiquity of their gods ſo exceedingly, as to make them 9000 years older than Solon, and the iſland Atlantis bigger than all Afric and Aſia together, and full of people; and becauſe in the days of Solon this great iſland did not appear, they pretended that it was ſunk into the ſea with all its people: So great was the vanity of the Egyptian prieſts in magnifying their antiquities.

Ver. 26. And he took away the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, and the treaſures of the king's houſe, he even took away all: and he took away all the ſhields of gold which Solomon had made.] This was a ſpeedy vengeance on Rehoboam and his ſubjects for their ſins; that ſo ſoon after the death of Solomon, the ſplendor wherein he left Jeruſalem ſhould be extinguiſhed, For Rehoboam ſerved God three years; was corrupted in the fourth, and in the fifth was puniſhed.

Ver. 30. And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all their days.] This doth not ſeem to agree with what we read xii. 22. where God commanded Rehoboam and his people not to go to fight with Iſrael, and they obeyed his voice. But this is eaſily ſatisfied, by obſerving, that the Jews were commanded not to make war upon the Iſraelites, but they were not commanded not to defend themſelves, if the Iſraelites made war upon them. And this was their caſe; the Iſraelites vexed them with continual incurſions and depredations, tho' the houſe of David did not aſſault them, but only repel their violence: Or, perhaps, upon the borders they were continually endeavouring to get ground one of another, tho' they never came to a ſet battle.

Ver. 31. And Rehoboam ſlept with his father, and was buried with his father in the city of David: And his mother's name was Naamah an Ammoniteſs.] This repetition of his mother's name and country, has ſomething remarkable in it. See ver. 21. tho' it is hard to know what it is. Abarbinel thinks it is as much as to ſay, he did not repent at laſt; but as he lived, ſo he died in the idolatry of his mother.

CHAP. XV.

1 Abijams wicked reign. 7 Aſa ſucceeded him. 9 Aſa's good reign. 16 The war between Baaſha and him, cauſeth him to make a league with Ben-hadad. 23 Jehoſhaphat ſucceedeth Aſa. 25 Nadabs wicked reign. 27 Baaſha conſpiring againſt him, executeth Ahijabs propheſy. 31 Nadabs acts and death. 33 Baaſhas wicked reign.

NOW in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, reigned Abijam over Judah.

2 Three years reigned he in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom.

3 And he walked in all the ſins of his father, which he had done before him: and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as the heart of David his father.

4 Nevertheleſs, for Davids ſake did the LORD his God give him a lamp in Jeruſalem, to ſet up his ſon after him, and to eſtabliſh Jeruſalem:

5 Becauſe David did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, and turned not aſide from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, ſave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

6 And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.

7 Now

7 Now the reſt of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? And there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam.

8 And Abijam ſlept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David: and Aſa his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

9 ¶ And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam king of Iſrael, reigned Aſa over Judah.

10 And forty and one years reigned he in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom.

11 And Aſa did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, as did David his father.

12 And he took away the ſodomites out of the land, and removed all the idols that his fathers had made.

13 And alſo Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen, becauſe ſhe had made an idol in a grove; and Aſa deſtroyed her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron.

14 But the high places were not removed: nevertheleſs, Aſa his heart was perfect with the LORD all his days.

15 And he brought in the things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himſelf had dedicated, into the houſe of the LORD, ſilver and gold, and veſſels.

16 ¶ And there was war between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael all their days.

17 And Baaſha king of Iſrael went up againſt Judah, and built Ramah, that he might not ſuffer any to go out or come in to Aſa king of Judah.

18 Then Aſa took all the ſilver and the gold that were left in the treaſures of the houſe of the LORD, and the treaſures of the kings houſe, and delivered them into the hand of his ſervants: and king Aſa ſent them to Ben-hadad the ſon of Tabrimon, the ſon of Hezion, king of Syria, that dwelt at Damaſcus, ſaying.

19 There is a league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father: behold, I have ſent unto thee a preſent of ſilver and gold; come and break thy league with Baaſha king of Iſrael, that he may depart from me.

20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Aſa, and ſent the captains of the hoſts which he had, againſt the cities of Iſrael, and ſmote Ijon, and Dan, and Abel-beth-maachah, and all Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

21 And it came to paſs when Baaſha heard thereof, that he left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in Tirzah.

22 Then king Aſa made a proclamation throughout all Judah (none was exempted) and they took away the ſtones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baaſha had builded, and king Aſa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and Mizpah.

23 The reſt of all the acts of Aſa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? Nevertheleſs, in the time of his old age he was diſeaſed in his feet.

24 And Aſa ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoſhaphat his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

25 ¶ And Nadab the ſon of Jeroboam began to reign over Iſrael, in the ſecond year of Aſa king of Judah, and reigned over Iſrael two years.

26 And he did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in his ſin wherewith he made Iſrael to ſin.

27 ¶ And Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah, of the houſe of Iſſachar, conſpired againſt him; and Baaſha ſmote him at Gibbethon, which belongeth to the Philiſtines (for Nadab and all Iſrael laid ſiege to Gibbethon)

28 Even in the third year of Aſa king of Judah did Baaſha ſlay him, and reigned in his ſtead.

29 And it came to paſs when he reigned, that he ſmote all the houſe of Jeroboam, he left not to Jeroboam any that breathed, until he had deſtroyed him, according unto the ſaying of the LORD, which he ſpake by his ſervant Ahijah the Shilonite:

30 Becauſe of the ſins of Jeroboam which he ſinned, and which he made Iſrael ſin by his provocation wherewith he provoked the LORD God of Iſrael to anger.

31 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Nadab, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

32 And there was war between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael all their days.

33 In the third year of Aſa king of Judah, began Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah to reign over all Iſrael in Tirzah, twenty and four years.

34 And he did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and walked in the way of Jeroboam, boam, and in his ſin wherewith he made Iſrael to ſin.

Ver. 1. Now in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, reigned Abijam over Judah.] This ſeems to diſageee with what is ſaid ver. 9. concerning Aſa, that he began to reign in the twentieth year of Jeroboam, and that Abijam reigned three years, ver. 2. But it is uſual both in ſcripture, and in other authors, to reckon part of a year for a whole year. Abijam therefore began to reign in ſome part of Jeroboam's eighteenth year; continued his reign the whole nineteenth, and died in the twentieth; and ſo was reckon'd to have reigned three years.

Ver. 2. ——— And his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom.] Joſephus is of opinion that Abiſhalom is the ſame as Abſalom the ſon of David, and it is certain, that this perſon is called Abſalom, 2 Chron. xi. 21. The words of the Jewiſh hiſtorian are to this effect. Rehoboam married Maachah the daughter of Tamar, who was the daughter of Abſalom, and by her he had a ſon, whom he called Abiam [Lib. viii. c. 3.] This mother of Abijam is called Michaiah, the daughter of Uriel, 2 Chron. xiii, 2. but this is not inconſiſtent with the account in Joſephus: for ſhe might be the granddaughter of Abſalom by his daughter Tamar, and a daughter of Uriel as her immediate father, and it is not unuſual in Scripture for children to be called the ſons and daughters of their grand-parents. David, for inſtance, who was the grand-father of Abijam, is called his father, ver. 3. As to the difference between the names Maachah and Michaiah, it may be ſaid, that we frequently find variations altogether as conſiderable in the name of one and the ſame perſon, in the Sacred Books.

Ver. 3. And he walked in all the ſins of his father, which he had done beforē him: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as the heart of David his father.] He was guilty of the ſame tranſgreſſions in which his father lived, either, firſt, before his humiliation, or rather, ſecondly, after his deliverance from Shiſhak; when, tho' he did not openly renounce the worſhip of God, yet he ſeems to have relapſed into his former ſins; which, otherwiſe, would not have been remembred againſt him.

Ver. 4. Nevertheleſs, for David's ſake did the Lord his God give him a lamp in Jeruſalem.] By a lamp is meant a ſon, and ſucceſſor, to perpetuate his name, which otherwiſe would have ſunk into obſcurity.

Ver. 5. Becauſe David did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord, and turned not aſide from any thing that he commanded him, all the days of his life, ſave only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.] It may, perhaps, be asked, how this account of David can be true, ſince he ſinned in the matter of Nabal, 1 Sam. xxv. and of Achiſh, 1 Sam. xxvii. and in his unjuſtifiable indulgence to his children, Adonijah, Amnon, and Abſalom, and likewiſe in his numbring the people? We anſwer, that the expreſſions in this verſe, are not to be underſtood as excluſive of of every ſinful action, but only for a ſinful courſe, or ſtate, or of an habitual and continued apoſtacy from God, as the very phraſe of turning aſide from God, or from his commands conſtantly implies, as appears from Exod. xxxii. 8. Deut. ix. 12, 16. 1 Sam. viii. 3. Pſal. lxxviii. 57. and many other places. And thus it is moſt true. For David's other ſins were either ſudden and tranſient acts, proceeding from human infirmity, and extraordinary temptations, and ſoon repented of; or elſe they were miſtakes of his judgment which was not fully convinced of the obliquity of ſuch actions: Whereas that which related to the wife of Uriah, was a deſigned and ſtudied ſin, long perſiſted in, and defended by a ſucceſſion of other ſins, preſumptuous and reproachful to his government, and to the true religion which he ſo eminently profeſſed.

Ver. 6. And there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.] This was ſaid before, and may therefore ſeem unneceſſary here. But the words may be rendered, yet there was war, &c. That is, altho' God was pleaſed to ſhew ſo much regard to David, as for his ſake to continue the ſucceſſion of the kingdom in his poſterity, yet he thought fit to manifeſt his diſpleaſure againſt David's ſucceſſors for their ſins, and to blend their honour and happineſs with wars and troubles.

Ver. 7. Now the reſt of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Judah?] Ezra declares they were recorded in the book of the prophet Iddo, 2 Chron. xiii. 22. from whence he collected what he thought fit.

Abijam died in the third year of his reign, which began with the eighteenth year of Jeroboam, continued the whole nineteenth, and ended with the twentieth year, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Aſa.

The book of the Chronicles is very favourable in the character of the kings of Judah. It takes no notice of David's adultery with Bathſheba, or of Solomon's many wives, and his ſeduction to idolatry. It likewiſe makes Abijam ſpeak very much in his own commendation, and wholly omits all his failings, which may be the reaſon, that he is there called Abijah, where the Sacred Name JAH is mentioned. But the book of Kings declares, that he walked in all the ſins of his father, ver. 3. and therefore in this book the venerable name JAH is left out, and he is called Abijam. His not deſtroying idolatry is ſuppoſed to be the cauſe of God's ſhortning his reign and days.

Aſa, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Abijam, aſcended the throne of Judah, in the twentieth year of Jeroboam, king of Iſrael, ver. 9.

Ver. 10. And forty and one years reigned he in Jeruſalem: and his mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abiſhalom] This was the name of his grandmother; and ſo the names of father and mother, ſons and daughters, are frequently taken both in Sacred and prophane authors, for grand parents and grand children. But why the grandmother of Aſa ſhould be mentioned, and not his mother, may perhaps ſeem unaccountable, and altogether unneceſſary, becauſe it is evident, by what was ſaid before, that Maachah was the mother of Abijam, Aſa's father. In anſwer to which, we think the grandmother of Aſa may be here mentioned, rather than his mother, becauſe the latter was either an obſcure perſon, or was unwilling to take care of the education of her ſon, ſo that he was brought up by the grandmother, who, tho' ſhe had infected his father Abijam with her idolatrous principles, was yet unable to corrupt the mind of Aſa, or reſtrain him from proſecuting his good intentions for the reformation of religion. Her being mentioned therefore as his mother, in the ſenſe we have intimated, is a circumſtance which greatly redounds to the honour of this young prince.

Ver. 11. And Aſa did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, as did David his father.] He made David his pattern, as well in the government of his kingdom, as in the conduct of his life, and the reformation and eſtabliſhment of God's worſhip.

Ver. 12. And alſo Maachah his mother, even her he removed from being queen.] He deprived her of all the enſigns of royal dignity, and reduced her to the condition of a private perſon.

———Becauſe ſhe had made an idol in a grove.] The Hebrew word miphletſeth, which is here tranſlated idol, imports ſomething horrid and dreadful, either becauſe the image had a frightful aſpect, or brought dreadful judgments upon its impious adorers. St. Jerom underſtands by it, Priapus, or Baal-Peor, to whom the women were much devoted. Theodoret, takes it for Aſtarte, or Venus. But whatevet this idol might be, it was placed in a grove, and it is certain, that all the works of darkneſs were practiſed in ſuch ſhady places.

———And Aſa deſtroyed her idol, and burnt it by the brook Kidron.] He cut down this deteſtable image, and when he had burnt it in the fire, he ſtamped or ground it to powder, and then threw it into the brook Kidron. See 2 Chron. xv. 16.

The brook Kidron flowed in a valley eaſtward of Jeruſalem, between the city and the mount of Olives, and diſcharged itſelf into the Dead-ſea. Some are of opinion, that the name Cedron, or Kidron, came from the large growth of cedars which they ſay were formerly planted on its banks. But there is no proof of this fact; and the word Kidron is derived rather from the obſcurity of this brook, which runs in a deep vale, and was formerly overſhadowed with many trees; or from the common ſewers of the city which emptied themſelves into it.

Ver. 14. But the high places were not removed: nevertheleſs Aſa his heart was perfect with the Lord all his days.] He removed all the high places wherein his ſubjects ſacrificed to ſtrange gods, 2 Chron. xiv. 3. but not thoſe wherein God alone was worſhipped. For his authority was not great enough to compleat this reformation; the people having ſo univerſally, and for ſuch a length of time, indulged themſelves in this licenſe, that none durſt attempt the abolition of ſo inveterate a cuſtom, till the days of Hezekiah; who ſeeing the calamities that threatened his country, endeavoured to prevent them by an effectual reformation. But tho' Aſa did not venture to do this, yet his heart was ſincerely affected to the right worſhip of God; and he ſuffered ſacrifices to be offered to none elſe.

Ver. 15. And he brought in the things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himſelf had dedicated, into the houſe of the Lord, &c.] According to the piety of ancient times, his father had vowed unto the Lord, ſome part of the ſpoils he had taken in the war with Jeroboam, but had not time to accompliſh his vow, or elſe neglected it upon ſome account or other. Aſa, his ſon, therefore made his vow good, and likewiſe brought in what he himſelf had devoted to ſacred uſes, having gained great ſpoils in his war with the Ethiopians, 2 Chron. xiv. 13, 14.

Ver. 16. And there was war between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael all their days.] No mention having hitherto been made of Baaſha, this verſe may ſeem not to be ranked in its proper place. But Abarbinel thinks it is here inſerted, that as the Sacred Writer had ſhewn what the virtues of Aſa were, ſo he now might mention his faults: the chief of which was occaſioned by this war; which moved him to ſend to Benhadad for ſuccour when he ought to have relied on God, as it is largely related, 2 Chron. xvi. 7, &c.

Ver. 17. And Baaſha king of Iſrael went up againſt Judah, and built Ramah, &c.] After Aſa had obtained his great victory over the Ethiopians, he had the pleaſure to ſee multitudes flock to him from ſeveral of the revolted tribes, whom either his zeal in religion, or his ſucceſs in war, drew away from Baaſha the new king of Iſrael; who, in conſequence of this defection, reſolved to make war upon Judah. He likewiſe built, or rather fortified, Ramah, a city in the tribe of Benjamin; which either belonged to the kingdom of Iſrael, or he had taken it from Judah, and fortified it, for that is meant by building it, as appears by what follows. This he did in order to prevent all communication between his ſubjects and the people of Judah. For this place was ſituated on the confines of both kingdoms, and in ſuch a narrow tract of land, that when a fortification was erected there, none could paſs to and fro without a licence from Baaſha.

Ver. 18. Then Aſa took all the ſilver and the gold that were left in the treaſures of the houſe of the Lord, and the treaſures of the king's houſe, and delivered them into the hands of his ſervants: And Aſa ſent them to Benhadad, the ſon of Tabrimon, the ſon of Hezion king of Syria.] Baaſha was then leagued with the king of Syria; and Aſa being afraid of engaging two ſuch potent enemies, found no better expedient than to bribe Benhadad to break his alliance with Baaſha, and to cauſe ſome powerful diverſion in his kingdom. To this end, he ſent him all the gold and ſilver that he could find, both in his own treaſury, and in that of the temple. For it was counted lawful, in caſes of extreme danger, to employ ſacred things for the defence of ones country. But there was no ſuch neceſſity in this conjuncture, for God had appeared ſo wonderfully for Aſa againſt a much more formidable enemy than Baaſha, that he ought to have confided in him for aid, as the prophet Hanani told him, 2 Chron, xvi. 7, &c.

Aſa's preſent had ſuch an influence upon the Syrian king, that he took all the fenced cities of the tribe of Naphtali, and obliged Baaſha to deſiſt from his enterprize, in order to defend his own territories. And aſſoon as the king of Iſrael was departed from Ramah, Aſa iſſued out a proclamation, and ordered all his ſubjects to tranſport all the materials of that fortreſs to Geba in the tribe of Benjamin, and likewiſe to Mizpeh, in the tribe of Judah, and to fortify thoſe two places with them.

Aſa, in his old age, was afflicted with a diſtemper in his feet, probably the gout, and he died in the forty-firſt year of his reign, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Jehoſhaphat. The author of this book of Kings ſays only, that he was buried with his anceſtors, ver. 24. but we are told in 2 Chron. xvi. 14. that he was embalmed, and laid upon a ſtately bed, covered with ſpices and odoriferous druggs; and that they made a great burning for him: from which paſſage ſome have concluded, that the cuſtom of burning the bodies of princes began from Aſa, and that the bones and aſhes were depoſited in their ſepulchres. But neither that text in the Chronicles, nor any inſtance we can meet with in the Jewiſh hiſtory, is ſufficient to countenance ſuch an opinion; which all the Jewiſh doctors diſown, and affirm, that nothing was burnt at theſe funeral obſequies but the ſweet perfumes above-mentioned. We may add too, that Joſiah's burning the bones of the prieſts of Baalim upon their idolatrous altars, 2 Chron. xxxiv. 5. implies, at leaſt, a kind of abhorrence againſt ſuch a practiſe, unleſs when it was done by way of puniſhment. Only R. Solomon adds, that they burnt over the bodies of their kings, their beds, and other ſupellectilia Veneris, ſive quicquid Veneri inſervierat, (Vid. Munſt. in Jerem. xxxiv. not. a.)

Ver. 25. And Nadab the ſon of Jeroboam began to reign in the ſecond year of Aſa king of Judah, and reigned over Iſrael two years.] Not two compleat years, for he was ſlain in the third year of Aſa's reign, ver. 28. Nothing remarkable happened during this ſhort reign of Nadab, except his adhering to the ſins of his father, as a puniſhment for which he was killed at the ſiege of Gibbethon, a fortreſs belonging to the Philiſtines, by Baaſha, a man of the tribe of Iſſachar, who having ſeized upon the kingdom, deſtroyed the whole race of Jeroboam, according to the prediction of the prophet Ahijah, chap. xiv. 10.

Ver. 32. And there was war between Aſa and Baaſha king of Iſrael all their days.] We read the very ſame words before, ver. 16. in the hiſtory of Aſa, and they are now repeated in that of Baaſha, in order to ſhew the reaſon why Aſa was his enemy, which he would not have been, but rather his friend, had he feared God after his cutting off the whole houſe of Jeroboam. But Aſa would not contract any friendſhip with him, becauſe he did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and walked in the way of Jeroboam, ver. 34. which makes it evident, that he did not exterminate the family of that prince, becauſe they were idolaters, but becauſe he aſpired to the throne; which when he poſſeſſed, he endeavoured to eſtabliſh his power by the ſame wicked policy which Jeroboam had practiſed. For he never made any reformation in religion, but continued to worſhip the calves which Jeroboam had ſet up, in order to keep the people from going to worſhip at Jeruſalem.

CHAP. XVI.

1, 7 Jehu's prophecy againſt Baaſha. 5 Elah ſucceedeth him. 8 Zimri conſpiring againſt Elah, ſucceedeth him. 11 Zimri executeth Jehu's prophecy. 15 Omri made king by the ſoldiers, forceth Zimri deſperately to burn himſelf. 21 The kingdom being divided, Omri prevaileth againſt Tibni. 23 Omri buildeth Samaria. 25 His wicked reign. 27 Ahab ſucceedeth him. 29 Ahab's moſt wicked reign. 34 Joſhua's curſe accompliſhed upon Hiel the builder of Jericho.

THEN the word of the LORD came to Jehu, the ſon of Hanani, againſt Baaſha, ſaying,

2 Foraſmuch as I exalted thee out of the duſt, and made thee prince over my people Iſrael, and thou haſt walked in the way of Jeroboam, and haſt made my people Iſrael to ſin, to provoke me to anger with their ſins:

3 Behold, I will take away the poſterity of Baaſha, and the poſterity of his houſe:

and will make thy houſe like the houſe of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat.

4 Him that dieth of Baaſha in the city, ſhall the dogs eat: and him that dieth of his in the fields, ſhall the fowls of the air eat.

5 Now the reſt of the acts of Baaſha, and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

6 So Baaſha ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah, and Elah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

7 And alſo by the hand of the prophet Jehu the ſon of Hanani, came the word of the LORD againſt Baaſha, and againſt his houſe, even for all the evil that he did in the ſight of the LORD, in provoking him to anger with the work of his hands, in being like the houſe of Jeroboam, and becauſe he killed him.

8 ¶ In the twenty and ſixth year of Aſa king of Judah, began Elah the ſon of Baaſha to reign over Iſrael in Tirzah, two years.

9 And his ſervant Zimri (captain of half his chariots) conſpired againſt him as he was in Tirzah, drinking himſelf drunk in the houſe of Arza, ſteward of his houſe in Tirzah.

10 And Zimri went in, and ſmote him, and killed him, in the twenty and ſeventh year of Aſa king of Judah, and reigned in his ſtead.

11 ¶ And it came to paſs when he began to reign, aſſoon as he had ſat on his throne, that he ſlew all the houſe of Baaſha: he left him not one that piſſeth againſt a wall, neither of his kinsfolks, nor of his friends.

12 Thus did Zimri deſtroy all the houſe of Baaſha, according to the word of the LORD, which he ſpake againſt Baaſha by Jehu the prophet;

13 For all the ſins of Baaſha, and the ſins of Elah his ſon, by which they ſinned, and by which they made Iſrael to ſin, in provoking the LORD God of Iſrael to anger with their vanities.

14 Now the reſt of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

15 ¶ In the twenty and ſeventh year of Aſa king of Judah, did Zimri reign ſeven days in Tirzah; and the people were encamped againſt Gibbethon which belonged to the Philiſtines.

16 And the people that were encamped heard ſay, Zimri hath conſpired, and hath alſo ſlain the king: wherefore all Iſrael made Omri the captain of the hoſt, king over Iſrael that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Iſrael with him, and they beſieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to paſs when Zimri ſaw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the kings houſe, and burnt the kings houſe over him with fire, and died;

19 For his ſins which he ſinned in doing evil in the ſight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and in his ſin which he did, to make Iſrael ſin.

20 Now the reſt of the acts of Zimri, and his treaſon that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

21 ¶ Then were the people of Iſrael divided into two parts: half of the people followed Tibni the ſon of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed againſt the people that followed Tibni the ſon of Ginath: ſo Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and one year of Aſa king of Judah, began Omri to reign over Iſrael twelve years: ſix years reigned he in Tirzah.

24 And he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer, for two talents of ſilver, and built on the hill, and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill Samaria.

25 ¶ But Omri wrought evil in the eyes of the LORD, and did worſe than all that were before him.

26 For he walked in all the way of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, and in his ſin wherewith he made Iſrael to ſin, to provoke the LORD God of Iſrael to anger with their vanities.

27 Now the reſt of the acts of Omri, which he did, and his might that he ſhewed, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

28 So Omri ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria, and Ahab his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

29 ¶ And in the thirty and eighth year of Aſa king of Judah, began Ahab the ſon of Omri to reign over Iſrael; and Ahab the the ſon of Omri reigned over Iſrael in Samaria, twenty and two years.

30 And Ahab the ſon of Omri did evil in the ſight of the LORD, above all that were before him.

31 And it came to paſs, as if it had been a light thing for him to walk in the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat; that he took to wife Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of the Zidonians, and went and ſerved Baal, and worſhipped him.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal, in the houſe of Baal, which he had built in Samaria.

33 And Ahab made a grove; and Ahab did more to provoke the LORD God of Iſrael to anger, than all the kings of Iſrael that were before him.

34 ¶ In his days did Hiel the Beth-elite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firſt-born, and ſet up the gates thereof in his youngeſt ſon Segub, according to the word of the LORD, which he ſpake by Joſhua the ſon of Nun.

Ver. 1. Then the word of the Lord came to Jehu the ſon of Hanani, againſt Baaſha.] This prophet lived till the end of Jehoſhaphat's reign; ſee 2 Chron. xix. 2. xx. 34. And his father Hanani was a prophet before him, 2 Chron. xvi. 7. Nor was there wanting a ſucceſſion of prophets during the continuance of the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah, as Abarbinel hath obſerved through every reign, their names being recorded in the Sacred Scripture.

Baaſha perſiſting in the idolatries of Jeroboam, and maintaining a conſtant war with the king of Judah, the prophet Jehu came from the Lord to tell him, that ſince he had imitated his predeceſſor in his ſins, he ſhould likewiſe ſhare in his puniſhment, and be cut off with his poſterity. Baaſha died ſoon after, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Elah, who aſcended the throne in the twenty-ſixth year of Aſa's reign; but had ſcarce ſway'd the ſcepter two years, before he felt the effects of Jehu's prediction; for Zimri, a conſiderable commander in his army, took the opportunity to aſſaſſinate him, as he was giving a looſe to his debauchery, and intoxicating himſelf with wine in the houſe of his ſteward at Tirza. Here was a ſpeedy execution of the Divine Vengeance threatened againſt him by Jehu, namely, that God would make his houſe like that of Jeroboam, ver. 3. For as Nadab, the ſon of that prince, reigned but two years, chap. xv. 25. ſo Elah the ſon of Baaſha reigned no more: And as Nadab was killed with the ſword, ſo was Elah. Thus there was a wonderful ſimilitude between Jeroboam and Baaſha, in their lives, and in their deaths; in their ſons, and in their family.

Zimri's reign laſted but ſeven days in Tirza, ver. 15. yet he found time enough in that ſhort ſpace to deſtroy the whole race of Baaſha, even to his moſt diſtant relations. But the forces who were then beſieged at Gibbethon, being offended at his conſpiracy, and his aſſaſſination of Baaſha, transferred the regal power to Omri, their general, ver. 16. The new king then drew his troops from Gibbethon, and laid ſiege to Tirza, where his competitor reſided. This latter, when he ſaw the city taken, retired to the royal palace, ſet it on fire, and then threw himſelf into the flames, chooſing rather to periſh in that manner, than be at the mercy of his conqueror. Tho' he enjoyed the kingdom but a very ſhort time, he reigned long enough to ſhew himſelf unworthy of it, by his propenſity to the vile idolatry of Jeroboam.

Omri had now another competitor to contend with, namely, Tibni, the ſon of Ginath, who was elected king by one part of the people; but the adherents to Omri being the ſtrongeſt party, ſoon perſuaded the reſt to join with them; in conſequence of which, Tibni was ſlain, and Omri reigned without a rival. This event happened in the thirty firſt year of Aſa's reign.

During the firſt ſix years of his reign, Tirza being then the royal palace of reſidence, Omri bought the hill of Someron, or Samaria, of one Shemer, for two talents of ſilver, and built the city of that name upon it, and made it the metropolis of the kingdom. We have nothing more recorded of him, but that he reigned another ſix years in Samaria, in all the ſinful ways of his predeceſſors, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Ahab, who proved ſtill more wicked than any of them.

Ahab began his reign in the thirty-eighth-year of Aſa's, but his unlawful marriage with Jezebel, the daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Sidonians, proved a conſtant ſource of idolatry and wicked deeds in him, and of plagues and misfortunes to his kingdom. His complaiſance for her, made him ſuffer her to introduce the worſhip of the Sidonian deities, which conſiſted in human ſacrifices, and the moſt abominable ceremonies. He erected a temple for Baal in the royal city, and ſet up an altar, on which he ſacrificed to that deteſtable idol. This was a more open idolatry than was ever practiſed by Jeroboam, who pretended that the worſhip he performed to the golden calves, was rendered intentionally to the true God, whom he honoured in thoſe emblematic repreſentations.

Ver. 34. In his days did Hiel the Beth-elite build Jericho.] A place, which being under a cherem, or ſolemn anathema, ought never to have been rebuilt, becauſe it was devoted to God, as the firſt fruits of the conqueſts of Canaan. Which either this man did not know, or elſe he was ſo impious as not to regard the curſe which Joſhua had pronounced againſt the perſon who ſhould preſume to rebuild this devoted place, Joſhua vi. 26.

——— He laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his firſt-born, and ſet up the gates thereof in his youngeſt ſon Segub, according to the word of the Lord, which he ſpake by Joſhua the ſon of Nun.] Hiel ſoon found, to his coſt, that the ſentence which Joſhua pronounced againſt the rebuilder of this city, proved true; for his eldeſt ſon died when he laid the firſt ſtone of it; and ſo all the reſt of his children, one after another, as the building advanced; till at laſt his youngeſt ſon died, when it was finiſhed. A moſt remarkable inſtance of the certainty of Divine threatnings; and that God never forgets what he hath once ſaid, but continues always immutable: as is evident from this ſentence, which tho' it had been pronounced four hundred years before this impious act of Hiel, was exactly accompliſhed in all its circumſtances. Which might have been a warning to the whole nation, not to deſpiſe the patience of God, who tho' he had not then carried them out of their good land, according to the word of Ahijah, xiv. 15. would certainly do it, if they perſiſted in their impenitence.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Elijah having propheſied againſt Ahab, is ſent to Cherith, where the ravens feed him. 8 He is ſent to the widow of Zarephath. 17 He raiſeth the widows ſon. 24 The woman believeth him.

AND Elijah the Tiſhbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, ſaid unto Ahab, As the LORD God of Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word.

2 And the word of the LORD came unto him, ſaying,

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eaſtward, and hide thyſelf by the brook of Cherith, that is before Jordan.

4 And

4 And it ſhall be, that thou ſhalt drink of the brook, and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

5 So he went, and did according unto the word of the LORD: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And the ravens brought him bread and fleſh in the morning, and bread and fleſh in the evening: and he drank of the brook.

7 And it came to paſs after a while, that the brook dried up, becauſe there had been no rain in the land.

8 ¶ And the word of the LORD came unto him, ſaying,

9 Ariſe, get thee to Zarephath, which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to ſuſtain thee.

10 So he aroſe, and went to Zarephath: and when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of ſticks: and he called to her, and ſaid, Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a veſſel, that I may drink.

11 And as ſhe was going to fetch it, he called to her, and ſaid, Bring me, I pray thee, a morſel of bread in thine hand.

12 And ſhe ſaid, As the LORD thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruſe: and behold, I am gathering two ſticks, that I may go in, and dreſs it for me and my ſon, that we may eat it, and die.

13 And Elijah ſaid unto her, Fear not; go and do as thou haſt ſaid: but make me thereof a little cake firſt, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy ſon.

14 For thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, The barrel of meal ſhall not waſte, neither ſhall the cruſe of oil fail, until the day that the LORD ſendeth rain upon the earth.

15 And ſhe went, and did according to the ſaying of Elijah: and ſhe, and he, and her houſe did eat many days.

16 And the barrel of meal waſted not, neither did the cruſe of Oil fail, according to the word of the LORD which he ſpake by Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to paſs after theſe things, that the ſon of the woman, the miſtreſs of the houſe fell ſick, and his ſickneſs was ſo ſore, that there was no breath left in him.

18 And ſhe ſaid unto Elijah, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto me to call my ſin to remembrance, and to ſlay my ſon?

19 And he ſaid unto her, Give me thy ſon. And he took him out of her boſom, and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.

20 And he cried unto the LORD, and ſaid, O LORD my God, haſt thou alſo brought evil upon the widow, with whom I ſojourn, by ſlaying her ſon?

21 And he ſtretched himſelf upon the child three times, and cried unto the LORD, and ſaid, O LORD my God, I pray thee let this childs ſoul come into him again.

22 And the LORD heard the voice of Elijah, and the ſoul of the child came into him again, and he revived.

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the houſe, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah ſaid, See, thy ſon liveth.

24 ¶ And the woman ſaid to Elijah, Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that the word of the LORD in thy mouth, is truth.

Ver. 1. And Elijah the Tiſhbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, ſaid unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word.] During the wicked reign of Ahab, Iſrael was bleſſed with an eminent prophet, an inhabitant of the town of Tiſhbe, beyond Jordan, and whom Abarbinel calls the prince of prophets, next to Moſes. The original of this great man not being known, (for here is no mention of his parents) ſome of the Jews have fancied him to have been an angel ſent from Heaven, to reduce the ſubjects of Ahab to the true religion. His name, which in the Hebrew is Elijahu, carries ſomething Divine in it; being compounded, as Camartus imagines, of three of the names of God, Eli, Jah, and Hu. The two firſt are undoubtedly the names of God, but there is reaſon to queſtion the laſt, tho' Caſtel, in his Polyglot Lexicon, places it among the Divine names, and ſo do the Cabbaliſts, or the Rabbinical Doctors among the Jews, who receive not only the text of Scriptures, but alſo the explanations of the Talmud, and the traditions of the ancients; and likewiſe ſtudy to diſcover myſterious and concealed meanings in the Sacred Writings: For, according to them, there is not a word, letter, or accent in the law, without ſome myſtery comprehended in it.

Many of the Jews were perſuaded, that Elijah was the ſame as Phinehas, the ſon of Eleazar, and grandſon to Aaron; by reaſon of the extraordinary zeal which both of them expreſſed for the glory of God. But this opinion is founded on the doctrine of tranſmigration, for we know that Phinehas lived many ages before Elijah. This doctrine is common among the Mohammedans, as well as among many of the Jews, and ſome oriental Chriſtians. Others repreſent Elijah as a prieſt deſcended from Aaron, and ſay, that one Sabaca was his father. But theſe particularities, which are not taken notice of either in the Scripture, or in any of the ancients, are of no great authority.

thority. Several of the fathers are of opinion, that he lived in a ſtate of celibacy, and with unſpotted purity.

This excellent prophet was raiſed up by God, to be ſet like a wall of braſs, in oppoſition to idolatry, and particularly to declare againſt the impious worſhip of Baal, which Jezebel and Ahab had introduced among the Iſraelites. The firſt time the Scripture ſpeaks of Elijah, it repreſents him ſaying to Ahab, "As the Lord God of "Iſrael liveth, before whom I ſtand, there ſhall not be "dew nor rain theſe years, but according to my word." To make his words the more regarded, he ſwore ſolemnly by the Eternal God, whoſe miniſter he was (for that is meant by ſtanding before him) and to whom he prayed, that there ſhould be no moiſture from the clouds for the ſpace of three years and an half; unleſs it was obtained by his prayers. Thus St. James teaches us to expound the words, theſe years, Jam. v. 17.

Ver. 2, 3. And the word of the Lord came unto him, ſaying, Get thee hence, and turn thee eaſtward, and hide thy ſelf by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.] The king being incenſed at the threatning pronounced by the prophet, God took care to ſecure him from his fury, by directing him to a retreat where none ſhould moleſt him.

The brook Cherith is on this ſide Jordan, eaſtward from the city of Samaria, and flows into that river below Bethſhan, which was ſituated at the extremity of the great plain; about ſeventy-five miles from Jeruſalem.

Ver. 4 And it ſhall be, that thou ſhalt drink of the brook, and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.] This ſeems ſo aſtoniſhing, that ſome will have the Hebrew word orebim not to ſignify ravens, but merchants; becauſe they find the word orebe in Ezek. xxvii. 17. ſignifying the merchants who traded in the market of Tyre. But, as Bochart obſerves, they are never called ſimply orebim. Nor is there any better foundation for the opinion of thoſe who think Arabians are here meant, for there were none in that part of the country where Elijah retreated; and his place of concealment would ſoon have been diſcovered, to Ahab, if merchants, or any other people, who travelled that way, had been acquainted with it. We muſt therefore aſcribe the ſupport and preſervation of this prophet to the miraculous care of God; and we may add, that inſtances of this nature, did not ſeem incredible to the Heathens, who tell us, that Jupiter was fed in his cradle, by bees; and Janus, the ſon of Apollo, and Evadne, with honey, by dragons. They likewiſe relate, that Midas, when an infant, had corn put into his mouth, by ants, while he was ſleeping; and that Æſculapius was nouriſhed by a goat.

Ver. 6. And the ravens brought him bread and fleſh in the morning, and bread and fleſh in the evening: and he drank of the brook.] God amply provided for his faithful ſervant; ſending him not only bread, but fleſh alſo, that his meals might be more ſatisfactory to him. Some of the Jews fancy, that the ravens brought this proviſion from Ahab's houſe; others ſuppoſe, that they were furniſhed with it from the table of king Jehoſhaphat. Bochart thinks it better to ſay, they had it from ſome of the ſeven thouſand perſons, who had never bowed the knee to Baal; but we think it beſt of all to acknowledge, that we know not whence they had it. Thoſe who object that theſe were unclean creatures, and that they conſequently polluted the meat they touched, ſhould conſider that this providential affair was conducted by an extraordinary diſpenſation. It is indeed very wonderful, that the ravens, who neglect to nouriſh their own young, ſhould yet be ſo aſſiduous as to feed the prophet twice a day; but what is there in the whole courſe of nature, which cannot be made ſubſervient to the Divine purpoſes of the Almighty?

In proceſs of time, the brook which had ſo often ſlaked the prophet's thirſt, was dried up by the violence of the ſun beams, and the long diſcontinuance of rain: But neither drought nor heat could exhauſt the mercy of God to his ſolitary ſervant. The goodneſs of that all propitious Being, was now to ſhine forth in a new miracle, which endeared it the more. Elijah was directed by God, to remove from his ſequeſter'd retreat, to Zarephath, a city of the Sidonians, in Phœnicia, and ſituated between Tyre and Sidon, on the eaſtern coaſt of the Mediterranean Sea. Here the Divine Providence had diſpoſed a poor widow to receive and entertain his prophet, who found her gathering ſticks at the city-gate: a ſufficient indication of her poverty. Elijah, who was made ſenſible by a Divine Inſpiration, that ſhe was the perſon appointed to ſuſtain him, deſired her to fetch him a little water in a veſſel, that he might drink; and as ſhe was going for it, which ſhewed her readineſs to ſuccour a ſtranger, he requeſted her to bring him a morſel of bread. The poor woman then replied, that ſhe had only a handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in a cruſe; and that ſhe was gathering a few ſticks to bake the meal, that ſhe and her ſon might eat it as their laſt food before they died. Elijah bid her not be apprehenſive of being famiſhed, and then deſired her to make him a little cake of her meal, and afterward to bake the reſt for herſelf and her ſon; aſſuring her at the ſame time, in the name of the God of Iſrael, that neither her meal in the barrel, nor her oil in the cruſe ſhould be diminiſhed, until the day that God ſhould ſend rain on the earth. The poor widow obeyed him without the leaſt heſitation, by which it is evident, that ſhe truſted in the true God, and it appears by the event, that ſhe had no cauſe to repent of the confidence ſhe repoſed in his mercy. The words of Elijah were exactly accompliſhed; for the barrel of meal and the cruſe of oil ſuſtained the widow and her ſon, together with the prophet, for the full ſpace of two years: For one year was paſt when Elijah departed from the brook of Cherith, and therefore they ſubſiſted on this food at leaſt two years more, till the end of the drought, which continued three years and ſix months, from the time it firſt began. The Lord, who multiplies the ſeed ſown, can make a little, charitably employed, go far; he can feed his prophets by miracles, when ordinary means fail, and, according to his promiſe, can deliver their ſoul from death, and keep them alive in famine, Pſalm xxxiii. 19.

While the prophet continued at the widow's houſe, her ſon, her only ſon, fell ſick and died; upon which the deſolate mother cried out to Elijah, "What have I to do "with thee, O thou man of God? art thou come unto "me to call my ſin to remembrance, and to ſlay my ſon?" She imagined, in the anguiſh of her ſoul, that the prophet had been inſtrumental in the death of her ſon, as a puniſhment for her paſt ſins; and ſhe could not but think he had treated her with too much inhumanity. Why didſt thou come to ſojourn at my houſe, if this muſt be the fatal effect of the hoſpitality with which I have entertained thee? I acknowledge, indeed, that my ſins have been many, but was it kind of thee, whom I never offended, to bring them to my remembrance, by depriving me of my dear ſon, the only ſolace of my poverty, and declining years.

The prophet was ſenſibly touched with the affliction of the poor widow, and thought it incumbent on him to convince her, that he had no way contributed to the calamity ſhe complained of. He accordingly took her dead ſon out of her boſom, and laid him upon his own bed, in the chamber where he lodged. He then addreſſed his fervent prayers to the God and father of the ſpirits of all men, and humbly expoſtulated with him for bringing evil upon the widow with whom he ſojourned. Repreſenting it as an addition to his other afflictions, that ſhe ſhould ſuffer who had been ſo kind to him; and eſpecially, that ſhe ſhould ſuffer in her only ſon, the pleaſing comfort and ſupport of her life. He then lay proſtrate in prayer before God, and ſtretched out himſelf upon the breathleſs body of the child, as if he would inſpire him with new life. And this he did three times, in hope that his importunity would incline the Lord to be gracious to his requeſt. His ſupplications were not poured out in vain, and it was manifeſt by the event, that the fervent prayer of a righteous perſon availeth much with the Almighty. The body of the child began to glow with a vital heat, and God reſtored him to new life and vigour, for the ſake of his ſervant Elijah.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 In the extremity of famine, Elijah ſent to Ahab, meeteth good Obadiah. 9 Obadiah bringeth Ahab to Elijah. 17 Elijah reproving Ahab, by fire from heaven convinceth Baal's prophets. 41 Elijah by prayer obtaining rain, followeth Ahab to Jezreel.

AND it came to paſs after many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in the third year, ſaying, Go ſhew thyſelf unto Ahab; and I will ſend rain upon the earth.

2 And Elijah went to ſhew himſelf unto Ahab: and there was a ſore famine in Samaria.

3 And Ahab called Obadiah, which was the governour of his houſe: (now Obadiah feared the LORD greatly:

4 For it was ſo, when Jezebel cut off the prophets of the LORD, that Obadiah took an hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water.)

5 And Ahab ſaid unto Obadiah, Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find graſs to ſave the horſes and mules alive, that we leeſe not all the beaſts.

6 So they divided the land between them to paſs throughout it: Ahab went one way by himſelf, and Obadiah went another way by himſelf.

7 ¶ And as Obadiah was in the way, behold, Elijah met him: and he knew him, and fell on his face, and ſaid, Art thou that my lord Elijah.

8 And he anſwered him, I am: go tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

9 And he ſaid, What have I ſinned, that thou wouldſt deliver thy ſervant into the hand of Ahab, to ſlay me?

10 As the LORD thy God liveth, there is no nation or kingdom, whither my lord hath not ſent to ſeek thee: and when they ſaid, He is not there; he took an oath of the kingdom and nation, that they found thee not.

11 And now thou ſayſt, Go tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here.

12 And it ſhall come to paſs, as ſoon as I am gone from thee, that the ſpirit of the LORD ſhall carry thee whither I know not; and ſo, when I come and tell Ahab and he cannot find thee, he ſhall ſlay me: but I thy ſervant fear the LORD from my youth.

13 Was it not told my lord, what I did when Jezebel ſlew the prophets of the LORD? how I hid an hundred men of the LORDS prophets, by fifty in a cave, and fed them with bread and water?

14 And now thou ſayſt, Go tell thy lord, Behold, Elijah is here: and he ſhall ſlay me.

15 And Elijah ſaid, As the LORD of hoſts liveth, before whom I ſtand, I will ſurely ſhew myſelf unto him to day.

16 So Obadiah went to meet Ahab, and told him: and Ahab went to meet Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to paſs when Ahab ſaw Elijah, that Ahab ſaid unto him, Art thou he that troubleth Iſrael?

18 And he anſwered, I have not troubled Iſrael, but thou and thy fathers houſe, in that ye have forſaken the commandments of the LORD, and thou haſt followed Baalim.

19 Now therefore ſend, and gather to me all Iſrael unto mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves four hundred, which eat at Jezebels table.

20 So Ahab ſent unto all the children of Iſrael, and gathered the prophets together unto mount Carmel.

21 And Elijah came unto all the people, and ſaid, How long halt ye between two opinions? if the LORD be God, follow him: but if Baal, then follow him. And the people anſwered him not a word.

22 Then ſaid Elijah unto the people, I, even I only remain a prophet of the LORD, but Baals prophets are four hundred and fifty men.

23 Let them therefore give us two bullocks, and let them chooſe one bullock for themſelves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under: and I will dreſs the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under:

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the LORD: and the God that anſwereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people anſwered and ſaid, It is well ſpoken.

25 And Elijah ſaid unto the prophets of Baal, Chooſe you one bullock for your ſelves, and dreſs it firſt; for ye are many: and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dreſſed it, and called on the name of Baal from morning even until noon, ſaying, O Baal hear us.

But

But there was no voice, nor any that anſwered. And they leapt upon the altar which was made.

27 And it came to paſs at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and ſaid, Cry aloud: for he is a god, either he is talking, or he is purſuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he ſleepeth, and muſt be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and cut themſelves after their manner with knives and lancets, till the blood guſhed out upon them.

29 And it came to paſs, when mid-day was paſt, and they propheſied until the time of the offering of the evening ſacrifice; that there was neither voice, nor any to anſwer, nor any that regarded.

30 And Elijah ſaid unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him: and he repaired the altar of the LORD, that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took twelve ſtones, according to the number of the tribes of the ſons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, ſaying, Iſrael ſhall be thy name.

32 And with the ſtones he built an altar in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two meaſures of ſeed.

33 And he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and ſaid, Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt-ſacrifice, and on the wood.

34 And he ſaid, Do it the ſecond time: And they did it the ſecond time. And he ſaid, Do it the third time: And they did it the third time.

35 And the water ran round about the altar, and he filled the trench alſo with water.

36 And it came to paſs at the time of the offering of the evening ſacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and ſaid, LORD God of Abraham, Iſaac, and of Iſrael, let it be known this day, that thou art God in Iſrael, and that I am thy ſervant, and that I have done all theſe things at thy word.

37 Hear me, O LORD, hear me, that this people may know that thou art the LORD God, and that thou haſt turned their heart back again.

38 Then the fire of the LORD fell and conſumed the burnt-ſacrifice, and the wood, and the ſtones, and the duſt, and licked up the water that was in the trench.

39 And when all the people ſaw it, they fell on their faces: and they ſaid, The LORD, he is the God; the LORD, he is the God.

40 And Elijah ſaid unto them, Take the prophets of Baal, let not one of them eſcape: and they took them, and Elijah brought them down to the brook Kiſhon, and ſlew them there.

41 ¶ And Elijah ſaid unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink, for there is a ſound of abundance of rain.

42 So Ahab went up to eat, and to drink, and Elijah went up to the top of Carmel, and he caſt himſelf down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees,

43 And ſaid to his ſervant, Go up now, look toward the ſea. And he went up, and looked, and ſaid, There is nothing. And he ſaid, Go again ſeven times.

44 And it came to paſs at the ſeventh time, that he ſaid, Behold, there ariſeth a little cloud out of the ſea, like a mans hand. And he ſaid, Go up, ſay unto Ahab, Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain ſtop thee not.

45 And it came to paſs in the mean while, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain. And Ahab rode, and went to Jezreel.

46 And the hand of the LORD was on Elijah; and he girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab, to the entrance of Jezreel.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after many days, that the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year, ſaying, Go ſhew thy ſelf unto Ahab; and I will ſend rain upon the earth.] Whilſt the prophet Elijah was ſafely lodged with the widow of Sarephath, Ahab and Jezebel were making great ſearch after him, with an intention to put him to death; and not being able to find him, they diſcharged their fury upon all the prophets they could meet with. The time at length came when God, in pity to Iſrael, reſolved to put an end to the terrible drought which had ſo long been deſtructive to their land. He commanded Elijah to go and ſhew himſelf to Ahab, who at this time had given directions to Obadiah, the governor of his houſe, to take a progreſs through one part of the country, and ſearch for graſs near all the rivers and ſprings, to ſupply their preſent neceſſities; while he himſelf made the ſame ſearch in another part of the land; by which means, as the Sacred Hiſtorian obſerves, they divided the land between them, in order to proceed with the greater expedition. This Obadiah was a very pious man, and had teſtified an uncommon Zeal for the God of Iſrael, by preſerving an hundred of his prophets from the fury of Jezebel, and ſupporting them with food in their concealment, during the whole time of the famine. As this good man was paſſing through the country, to perform the orders he had had received from Ahab, he met the prophet Elijah in his way, and the moment he saw him fell proſtrate before him, and gave him a reſpectful welcome; but when the prophet directed him to go after the king, and acquaint him with his arrival, he modeſtly excuſed himſelf from ſo dangerous a meſſage; being apprehenſive that his own life would anſwer for the diſappointment, if the Spirit of the Lord ſhould ſuddenly tranſport the prophet to ſome unknown place, before he had ſeen Ahab; for, added he, there is ſcarce a nation or kingdom from which the king hath not exacted an oath, to bring you back to Samaria, wherever you happen to be found. But, at length, upon the prophet's ſolemn promiſe that he would ſhew himſelf to the king, Obadiah went and ſtopped his farther progreſs through the country, by acquainting him with Elijah's return, and his promiſe of a ſpeedy rain. Elijah accordingly appeared, and the firſt greeting between him and Ahab was ſuch, as might be reaſonably expected from a wicked haughty monarch, and from a perſon of that prophet's character. After ſome warm expreſſions on both ſides, Elijah deſired that all Iſrael, together with all the prieſts of Baal, whom Jezebel maintained, might be aſſembled at mount Carmel, which riſes on the eaſtern coaſt of the Mediterranean-ſea, and was in the tribe of Zebulun, to the north of the river Kiſhon. Elijah, before the famine began, had poſitively declared, there ſhould be no rain till he himſelf ſhould obtain it by his prayers, chap. xvii. ver. 1. Three full years, and above five months, had accordingly elapſed ſince the heavens had been firſt ſhut up, at the uſual time of rain, and all that the prieſts of Baal could do to obtain it, had been altogether ineffectual; ſo that in this neceſſity the people were come, in expectation of being relieved by ſome method which Elijah ſhould propoſe. The prophet, when they were aſſembled according to his directions, reproved them for halting between two opinions, and dividing their ſervice between God and Baal. "If the Lord "be God", continued he, follow him; but if Baal, then follow him:" which is as much as if he had ſaid, There cannot be more gods than one. That's the firſt article of your faith, Hear, O Iſrael, the Lord our God is one Lord, Deut. vi. 4. If the LORD then be this one God, adhere to him; if Baal, then embrace his ſervice. This is moſt rational, for both of them cannot be the one only living and true God.

The people, intimidated by the preſence of the king, and of the prieſts of Baal, made no reply to the prophet, but waited in ſilence, for the event of this important controverſy between the prophet of the true God, and the miniſters of the Sidonian idol. Elijah then propoſed an experiment, by which they ſhould know whether the title of the true God belonged to the LORD JEHOVAH, or to Baal. You ſee, ſaid he, that I am the only prophet of the Lord that is left, and thoſe of Baal are four hundred and fifty; let them offer up a bullock to Baal, and I will offer up another to the God of Iſrael; and let the deity, whoſe ſacrifice is conſumed by a preternatural fire, be henceforth the object of your worſhip. Aſſoon as the people had expreſſed their aſſent to his propoſal, the prieſts of Baal were ordered to begin their ſacrifice; they accordingly hewed their victim in pieces, laid them upon the wood of the altar, and called upon their god from morning till noon: but not finding the leaſt ſymptom of any anſwer, it is ſaid they leapt upon the altar, ver. 26. or rather, danced round it, with an enthuſiaſtic fury, like the ancient Salii among the Romans; but Baal ſtill continuing ſilent, they began to cut themſelves with knives, till their blood flowed down upon the ground. All this while Elijah plied them with the moſt bitter ſarcaſms, bidding them cry louder, for Baal undoubtedly was a great god, and would certainly hear them, unleſs he were either aſleep, or had his attention taken up more to his ſatisfaction. At length, when the time for offering the evening ſacrifice came on, Elijah ordered the people, who till then had ſtood by the prieſts of Baal, to approach him, which they accordingly did, in no little confuſion, as may be imagined, at the ill ſucceſs of thoſe prieſts. He then repaired an ancient altar of the Lord with twelve ſtones, according to the number of the tribes of the ſons of Jacob, in order to make it evident, that he worſhipped the God of the patriarchs, to whoſe ſacred Majeſty alone all the Iſraelites ought to render their univerſal homage. And leſt there might be any ſuſpicion of his having privately conveyed fire to the altar, he cauſed a large quantity of water to be poured thrice on the wood, and on the ſacrifice, and likewiſe into a trench which he ordered to be dug round the altar. He then called upon the Almighty with a loud voice, imploring him to make it evident to all the people, that he was the only God in all the world; upon which a fire fell down from heaven, and conſumed the wood, together with the victim and the altar, and evaporated all the water in the trench; at the ſight of which the people, ſeized with a reverend horror, fell upon their faces, and cried out, "The Lord he is the God, the Lord he is the "God," ver. 39. This repeated acknowledgment ſhews how deeply they were then affected with the demonſtration God had given them, that he alone was to be worſhipped, and which extorted this public confeſſion from them. And yet ſuch was their ſtupidity, that they ſoon relapſed into their idolatrous abominations.

The prophet then addreſſed himſelf to the people, and ordered them to ſeize the prieſts of Baal, and put every one of them to death, as perverters of the Divine Law, and teachers of idolatry. The people readily obeyed this motion, and all thoſe impious prieſts were accordingly ſlaughter'd at the brook Kiſhon. The prophets of the groves, we ſuppoſe, were not in this aſſembly; Jezebel, on whom they attended, not ſuffering them to appear; for they probably were Sidonians, whom ſhe brought with her from her own country, and were peculiarly at her command. The prophet had an extraordinary commiſſion for what he did; and it was neceſſary to excite a ſpirit of repentance and reformation in the people, before the judgment which had been inflicted upon them could be remov'd. A famine of three years and a half could not bring them to ſuch a diſpoſition; and therefore this ſeverity to their idolatrous prieſts, by whom they had been ſeduced, was render'd neceſſary. It may be alſo remarked, that even the emperor Julian, commonly called the Apoſtate, acknowledges the truth of this miraculous ſacrifice at mount Carmel: For, writing againſt the Chriſtians, he expreſſes himſelf in the following manner, "You have an averſion "to offer ſacrifices at the altar, becauſe fire does not "deſcend from heaven to conſume the victims, as in the "days of Moſes. But this happened only once in his "time, and long after in that of Elias the Tiſhbite." [Cyrillus contra Julianum, lib. 10.]

Ahab did not once oppoſe the order of the prophet, being, as we may well imagine, confounded at the ſtupendious miracle he had ſeen. Elijah then adviſed him to take ſome refreſhment after the long abſtinence of that day, and not be ſolicitous any longer for rain, ſince he heard a plentiful ſhower approaching. The king then went up from the river at the bottom of the mountain, to a place on the ſide of it, where a tent was pitched for him, that he might refreſh himſelf, now the ſacrifice was over. It is apparent from hence, that Ahab was himſelf preſent to ſee how the conteſt between his prophets and Elijah, that is, between Baal, and God, would end, and in all probability, was as much convinced as the people, that the Lord was the only God, tho' he was under the influence of that impreſſion but a ſhort time. Elijah then aſcended to the top of Carmel, where he had a full proſpect of the Mediterranean Sea; and would neither eat nor drink till he actually ſaw the rain gathering. He kneeled down, and bowed his head to the ground, ſo that it touched his knees: In token of great humility, and a moſt earnek deſire, that God would remember his people, and ſend them the refreſhing ſhowers they needed. He then ſaid to his ſervant, "Go up now, look toward the ſea," which he accordingly did, but ſaw no appearance of rain; upon which the prophet ordered him to go up again ſeven times, the ſervant obeyed him, and at laſt ſaw a little cloud riſing out of the ſea. Elijah was then ſenſible, that God had heard his prayer, and ſent his ſervant to the king, to adviſe him to haſten to his palace as faſt as poſſible, ſince the rain was coming in ſuch abundance as would cauſe floods, and render the way unpaſſable for the preſent. In the mean time, the wind roſe, and the little cloud began to expand itſelf, and at laſt covered the whole ſky. A copious ſhower deſcended on the thirſty ſoil, and Ahab went to Jezreel, which was nearer than Samaria, and where, we ſuppoſe, he had a palace.

The Sacred Hiſtorian then acquaints us, that "the "hand of the Lord was on Elijah; and he girded up his "loins,

"loins, and ran before Ahab, to the entrance of Jezreel," ver. 46. Looſe and long garments were the habit of that country, and they were gathered up by thoſe who wore them, when they had occaſion to run. And God now gave Elijah more than human ſtrength, ſo that, tho' he was an old man, he was enabled to run as faſt as Ahab's chariot drove. In which he ſhewed his readineſs to render all imaginable honour to the king, and that he only deſired him to become a worſhipper of the true God. He however, thought it not prudent to venture into the city, leſt Jezebel ſhould cauſe him to be ſeized; he therefore ſtopp'd at the gate, till the king had paſſed by; and then retired to ſome private place.

CHAP. XIX.

1 Elijah threatned by Jezebel, fleeth to Beerſheba, 4 In the wilderneſs being weary of his life, he is comforted by an Angel. 9 At Horeb God appeareth unto him, ſending him to anoint Hazael, Jehu, and Eliſha. 19 Eliſha taking leave of his friends, followeth Elijah.

AND Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, and withal, how he had ſlain all the prophets with the ſword.

2 Then Jezebel ſent a meſſenger unto Elijah, ſaying, So let the gods do to me, and more alſo, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them, by to-morrow about this time.

3 And when he ſaw that, he aroſe, and went for his life, and came to Beer-ſheba, which belongeth to Judah, and left his ſervant there.

4 ¶ But he himſelf went a days journey into the wilderneſs, and came and ſat down under a juniper-tree: and he requeſted for himſelf that he might die, and ſaid, It is enough now, O LORD, take away my life: for I am not better than my fathers.

5 And as he lay and ſlept under a juniper-tree, behold then, an angel touched him, and ſaid unto him, Ariſe and eat.

6 And he looked, and behold, there was a cake baken on the coals, and a cruſe of water at his head: and he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

7 And the angel of the LORD came again the ſecond time, and touched him, and ſaid, Ariſe and eat, becauſe the journey is too great for thee.

8 And he aroſe, and did eat and drink, and went in the ſtrength of that meat forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb the mount of God.

9 ¶ And he came thither unto a cave, and lodged there; and behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he ſaid unto him, What doſt thou here, Elijah?

10 And he ſaid, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hoſts: for the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and ſlain thy prophets with the ſword; and I, even I only am left, and they ſeek my life, to take it away.

11 And he ſaid, Go forth, and ſtand upon the mount before the LORD. And behold, the LORD paſſed by, and a great and ſtrong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the LORD; but the LORD was not in the wind: and after the wind an earthquake; but the LORD was not in the earthquake:

12 And after the earthquake a fire; but the LORD was not in the fire: and after the fire a ſtill ſmall voice.

13 And it was ſo, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and ſtood in the entring in of the cave: and behold, there came a voice unto him, and ſaid, What doſt thou here Elijah?

14 And he ſaid, I have been very jealous for the LORD God of hoſts: becauſe the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and ſlain thy prophets with the ſword; and I, even I only am left, and they ſeek my life, to take it away.

15 And the LORD ſaid unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderneſs of Damaſcus: and when thou comeſt, anoint Hazael to be king over Syria.

16 And Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi ſhalt thou anoint to be king over Iſrael: and Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat of Abel-meholah, ſhalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

17 And it ſhall come to paſs, that him that eſcapeth the ſword of Hazael, ſhall Jehu ſlay: and him that eſcapeth from the ſword of Jehu, ſhall Eliſha ſlay.

18 Yet I have left me ſeven thouſand in Iſrael, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kiſſed him.

19 ¶ So he departed thence, and found Eliſha, the ſon of Shaphat, who was plowing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth: and Elijah paſſed by him, and caſt his mantle upon him.

20 And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and ſaid, Let me, I pray thee, kiſs my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he ſaid unto him, Go back again; for what have I done to thee?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and ſlew them, and boiled their fleſh with the inſtruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat: then he aroſe, and went after Elijah, and miniſtred unto him.

Ver. 1. And Ahab told Jezebel all that Elijah had done, &c.] Aſſoon as Ahab came to his palace, he acquainted his queen with the ſhameful check her favourite deity had received at Carmel, in the ſight of all Iſrael; and in what manner his prieſts had been ſlaughter'd by the command of Elijah. One might have expected, that the long wiſh'd for rain would have created in her a due reſpect for the great prophet, by whoſe prayers it was obtained, and whoſe miſſion from the true God had been confirmed in ſo illuſtrious a manner, to the eternal diſgrace of the ſenſeleſs idol ſhe adored. But it happened quite otherwiſe; and the death of ſo many of her prophets threw her into ſuch a rage, that ſhe diſpatched a meſſenger to Elijah, with orders to aſſure him of the ſolemn reſolution ſhe had taken, that he ſhould ſuffer the ſame fate the next day. This ſhews the great folly of her rage, which thus gave him notice of his danger, and admoniſhed him to avoid it.

The prophet, who knew her implacable diſpoſition, thought it incumbent on him to fly for his life a ſecond time; for he had no hope of any protection from Ahab, who was likely to continue an idolater, and would cauſe the people, by his example, to revolt to the worſhip of Baal. But, as well founded as he believed his fears to be, his precipitate flight is thought by ſome to be an inſtance of human frailty, when he had ſo lately experienced God's all-ſufficiency, in protecting him againſt the king and a virulent crowd of Baal's prieſts; and likewiſe againſt the current of the people, who were then incenſed againſt him for the famine under which they groaned. But, Elias was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, Jam. v. 17. which probably is ſaid with reſpect to his apprehenſions and diſcontent on this occaſion. And leſt he ſhould be exalted above meaſure, for his eminent gifts and miraculous works, God ſaw fit to withdraw his grace, that he might be ſenſible of his own inſufficiency, and be guarded againſt the temptation of arrogating any part of God's honour to himſelf.

Govern'd therefore by his fears, he never ſtopped in his flight till he arrived at Beerſheba, a city of Judah, in the ſouthern part of Canaan; and tho' he was then in the territory of Jehoſhaphat, the pious king of Judah, he durſt not continue there, becauſe that prince was allied to Ahab. Elijah left his ſervant in that city, being unwilling to make him a ſharer in the rigid life he himſelf intended to lead, and he then proceeded a day's journey, into the vaſt howling wilderneſs, where the Iſraelites had wandered for the ſpace of forty years, after they came from Egypt. He there ſat down under a juniper-tree, faint and dejected, and earneſtly wiſhing to breath his laſt in that ſolitude. The ſhade of a juniper-tree is ſaid to be very noxious, as Virgil obſerves; and hence it has been thought by ſome, that Elijah ſhewed his contempt of life, by lying down, and ſleeping under its branches. But we take this to be a mere flight of fancy, for as much as Elijah wiſhed for death; he deſired to receive it from the hand of God alone, to whom he then addreſſed himſelf, in the anguiſh of his ſoul, and cried, It is enough, now, O Lord, take away my life: for I am not better than my fathers, ver. 4. which is, as if he had ſaid, I find myſelf incapable of rendring any farther ſervice to thy Divine Majeſty, in the office of a prophet; Iſrael is too obſtinately bent on idolatry, to be converted by my miniſtration: Let me therefore die in this deſert; for I have not merited a longer life than my fathers enjoyed. This prayer was not the reſult of a murmuring diſpoſition, but was dictated by the melancholy ſenſe he entertained of the general corruption which prevailed in Iſrael. He conſidered the inefficacy of his paſt endeavours, tho' aided by miracles, to reclaim them from their apoſtacy, and therefore deſired to die in peace, that he might no longer have the mortification to find all his zeal for the ſervice of God unavailing.

The Divine Majeſty was not an indolent ſpectator of his prophet's affliction: He heard the language of his diſtreſs, and immediately commanded an angel to carry food to him in the deſert where he was deſtitute of all accommodations. Thoſe who are ſo inquiſitive as to ask, in what manner this heavenly meſſenger obtained the proviſion he conveyed to Elijah? may ſatisfy their curioſity by anſwering another queſtion; namely, Is any thing impoſſible to the Almighty? and could the productions with which he now fed his ſervant in the wilderneſs, coſt him more than his creation of the univerſe out of nothing?

The angel awaked the prophet, who was then ſleeping in the ſhade of a juniper-tree, and ordered him to ariſe and eat, ver. 5. The good man was undoubtedly ſurpriſed at ſo gracious and unexpected a viſit, and to ſee a cake baken on the coals (or rather, on the hot ſtones, as the Hebrew ought to have been tranſlated) and a cruſe of water at his head; he ate and drank, as the angel had directed him, and then compoſed himſelf to ſleep a ſecond time; but was ſoon awaked once more by the angel, who exhorted him to renew his repaſt, that he might have ſtrength to perform the journey he was then to undertake. Elijah obeyed the angelic meſſenger, and went in the ſtrength of that meat, forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb the mount of God, ver. 8. Horeb is a mountain in Arabia Petræa, and very near mount Sinai, which lies to the eaſt of it, ſo that when the ſun riſes, Horeb is covered with the ſhadow of Sinai. There are two or three fine ſprings, and abundance of fruit-trees on the top of Horeb; but Sinai has no water but what it receives from the clouds. Had the prophet taken the direct way to Horeb, he might have arrived there, in the ſpace of four or five days, but in all probability, he made a large circuit, by ſtriking into private ways, that he might not be diſcovered, and lay ſometimes concealed, when he thought there was any danger of his being ſeen.

Ver 9. And he came thither unto a cave and lodged there; and behold the word of the Lord came to him, and he ſaid unto him, What doſt thou here, Elijah?] Which was as much as to ſay, I have no buſineſs for thee here; for this is not a place wherein thou canſt render me any ſervice. This was a tacit reproof to him, for his timorous flight; Judæa, Samaria, or Damaſcus, being fitter places for him to be employed in.

Ver. 10. And he ſaid, I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hoſts.] Elijah here declares, that he had not been inactive in his prophetic office, but had executed it with zeal for the honour and ſervice of God, and even to the hazard of his own life.

———For the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy covenant, and thrown down thine altars.] He calls the altars which had been erected in high places, by the ancient patriarchs, or other pious people in following times, God's altars, becauſe they ſacrificed upon them to him alone, and not to idols.

———And ſlain thy prophets with the ſword.] So Jezebel had done, chap. xviii. 4.

——— And I, even I only am left] There were many prophets beſide him, but he was the only one who had appeared publickly in defence of the true religion.

———And they ſeek my life to take it away.] Theſe words anſwer the queſtion, What doſt thou here? He fled thither to ſave his life.

Ver. 11. And he ſaid, Go forth, and ſtand upon the mount before the Lord.] Where the SHECHINAH, we ſuppoſe, appeared unto him, after ſome preparations for that Divine Viſion.

———And behold, the Lord paſſed by, and a great and ſtrong wind rent the mountains, and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord.] The prophet, before he quitted the cave, heard a ſign of the approaching preſence of God; for the angelic miniſters, which attended his Majeſty, paſſed by the mouth of the cave in a tremendous tempeſt, which ſhattered the rocks and mountains, and proclaimed the awful approach of the God of nature, who clothes the elements with terror, and makes them the harbingers of his Sacred Preſence.

——— But the Lord was not in the wind.] The Lord did not vouchſafe his gracious preſence to Elijah in that mighty wind, wherein the prophet perhaps expected that he would manifeſt himſelf. This circumſtance might be intended, either firſt, to quality the exceſſive fervour of of Elijah, which intermixed itſelf with his zeal for God, and to render him more meek and patient, in waiting for the converſion of Iſrael; in which mild diſpoſition he might ſooner expect the Divine Preſence, and a happy ſucceſs, than in a ſtorm of anger and impatience. Or, ſecondly, to teach him not to wonder, if God did not accompany his terrible adminiſtration at mount Carmel, with the preſence of his grace, to reclaim the Iſraelites to himſelf, as Elijah deſired, but which the Deity, for wiſe and juſt reaſons, thought fit to deny.

——And after the wind an earthquake; but the Lord was not in the earthquake.] This ſecond harbinger of the Divine Preſence was altogether as dreadful as the former; and had the Deity manifeſted himſelf in this terrifying convulſion of nature, the prophet might have ſunk under ſuch a complication of terrors.

Ver. 12. And after the earthquake a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire.] This fire was perhaps a tempeſt of thunder and lightning, like that which preceded the promulgation of the law on mount Sinai, and was a proper harbinger of the Divine Preſence to the prophet who had been ſo induſtrious to reſtore that law.

——And after the fire a ſtill ſmall voice.] At laſt the Lord himſelf came, as Elijah perceived by the whiſper of a gentle voice, which commanded him to be attentive to what God ſhould now unfold. This appearance of the Divine Majeſty has ſuggeſted many pious meditations to interpreters. Strigelius conſiders it as an indication that God is not inclined to terrify and deſtroy, but placidly to invite and preſerve. Others look upon all this as a figure of the goſpel diſpenſation, which was not accompanied, like the law, with thunders, lightnings, and earthquakes, but with great lenity and ſweetneſs: God ſpeaking to us by his Divine Son in the moſt mild and gentle manner. And herein alſo ſome think he intended to ſhew Elijah, that he had all the elements ready armed at his command, if he pleaſed to make uſe of them for the deſtruction of idolatry: but that by the ſtill voice, he declared the Divine Patience and tenderneſs, which he would have the prophet imitate, by bridling his anger, to which he had a very great propenſity.

Ver. 13. And it was ſo, when Elijah heard it, that he wrapped his face in his mantle, and went out, and ſtood in the entring in of the cave.] He firſt covered his face in token of the utmoſt reverence to God, being unable to behold the Divine Glory which now appeared; and he then went out of the cave, as God had commanded him, ver. 11. and ſtood at the entrance into it, in order to liſten to what God would vouchſafe to ſay to him.

——And behold there came a voice unto him, and ſaid, What doſt thou here, Elijah?] The ſame words are repeated, which Elijah had heard before, ver. 9. but they were then ſpoken by the angel, and now, by God himſelf.

Ver. 14. And he ſaid, I have been very jealous for the Lord God of Iſrael, &c.] This is the ſame anſwer he had made before, ver. 10. And Ralbag thinks he was ſo inflam d with anger, at the apoſtacy of the Iſraelites, that he did not rightly apply his attention to the viſion, and therefore only repeats his former words. Upon which God informs him, in the following verſe, that he would take care to chaſtiſe the Iſraelites in due time for their apoſtacy from him, and for that end orders him to go and anoint Hazael, and Jehu.

Ver. 15. And the Lord ſaid unto him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderneſs of Damaſcus.] This, according to the ſame author we laſt cited, is as much as to ſay, "Since "thou art ſo offended with the Iſraelites for their impiety, "go and anoint one to be king of Syria, who ſhall be a "ſcourge to them". This, however, was not done preſently; nor did Elijah himſelf anoint Jehu, but ordered his ſucceſſor Eliſha to perform that ceremonial.

Ver. 16. And Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi ſhalt thou anoint to be king of Iſrael.] He was the grandſon of Nimſhi, as appears from 2 Kings ix. 2. But we have already obſerved more than once, that grandſons are frequently called ſons in the Sacred Books.

It has been thought difficult to aſſign a reaſon why theſe orders were not executed by Elijah; for the regal dignity was not conferred either upon Hazael, or Jehu, till after the death of that prophet. In anſwer to which we think, that as Ahab is repreſented in a penitential diſpoſition, chap. xxi. 27, God thought fit to defer the judgments he had denounced againſt him and his family, and therefore ordered Elijah not to anoint Hazael and Jehu at that time; for ſince their advancement to the thrones of Syria and Iſrael was intended only as a puniſhment for the ſins of Ahab, the Deity was ſo far wrought upon by the humiliation of that prince, that he ſuſpended the ſentence he had pronounced againſt him, and did not execute it againſt his family till after the death of Ahab, chap. xxi. ver. 29.

——And Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat of Abel-meholah, ſhalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.] This laſt was the principal command, for the other two were to be performed in due time, by Eliſha, who accordingly anointed Jehu king, and afterward Hazael.

Ver. 17. And it ſhall come to paſs, that him that eſcapeth the ſword of Hazael, ſhall Jehu ſlay: and him that eſcapeth from the ſword of Jehu, ſhall Eliſha ſlay.] The meaning is, that God in his providence had appointed three perſons to puniſh the Iſraelites according to their demerits. Thus he intended Hazael ſhould deſtroy them in battle, which is mentioned firſt, as being a general calamity. But Jezebel, and the children of Ahab, and the prieſts of Baal, not going out with the army, and conſequently not falling in battle, God determined that they, and all the worſhippers of Baal, ſhould be cut off by Jehu; who, however, did not inflict evil upon all the people of Iſrael, becauſe he was to be their king: and tho' he ſlew idolaters, he did not deſtroy little children, with whoſe diſpoſition he was unacquainted: but they were reſerved to be puniſhed by Eliſha, who foreſaw they would prove idolaters. This is the obſervation of Abarbinel, which, perhaps, he has drawn out with too much ſubtilty, and refinement; but he declares very juſtly, that the Scripture doth not mention theſe events according to the time wherein they fell out, but according to the decree of God, who appointed every one to execute what was proper for him.

Ver. 18. Yet have I left me ſeven thouſand in Iſrael, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kiſſed him.] This ſeems to be a correction of Elijah's miſtake, who imagined that he alone was the true worſhipper of God, in Iſrael.

Every one knows, that bowing the knee was an act of worſhip; and ſo was kiſſing the idol: which latter was performed two ways; either by applying their mouth immediately to the image, or kiſſing their hand before it, and then ſtretching it out, to preſent, as it were, the kiſs to it. Such kiſſes were called labrata oſcula; and hence the phraſes oſcula jacere, baſia jactare, manu venerari, and manu ſalutare; which are expreſſive of this manner of adoration. Pliny accordingly ſays, In adorando dextram ad oſculum referimus, totum corpus circumagimus. When we worſhip, we kiſs our hand, and turn about our whole body.

Ver. 19. So he departed thence, and found Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and he with the twelfth.] His ſervants managed the reſt, and he himſelf drove the laſt. This ſhews him to have been a great man, who, according to the manner of thoſe ancient times, looked after his buſineſs himſelf; and was taken from the plough to be a prophet, as the Romans took ſome from thence to be dictators and conſuls. For nothing was in greater eſteem than agriculture, among the ancient Greeks and Romans, as well as among the Hebrews. In Homer, we ſee kings and princes living upon the productions of their lands, and labouring with their own hands; and Heſiod compoſed a poem on purpoſe to recommend the country life and labour to his brother. We may add to this, that the Carthaginians and Perſians, and, indeed, all other ancient nations, did not think that to do nothing was to live nobly; but they ſtudy'd how to cultivate their lands, and employed themſelves as well as their ſervants in that rural work. Whence ſuch perſons, who were of the beſt quality, were called αὐτουργοι, men who did their work themſelves; and ploughed with their own hands.

Abarbinel thinks, theſe twelve yokes of oxen with which Eliſha was ploughing, denoted that he ſhould be leader of the twelve tribes of Iſrael.

——And Elijah paſſed by him, and caſt his mantle upon him.] He arrayed him in the prophetic habit, which which was the ceremonial of his inauguration. Or, as ſome underſtand it, this was a token that he muſt become the ſervant of Elijah, and ſucceed him in his office. And he accordingly waited upon him, as appears from two phraſes in the laſt verſe of this chapter; Firſt, he went after him; and ſecondly, he miniſtred unto him.

Ver. 20. And he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and ſaid, Let me, I pray thee, kiſs my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee.] For he underſtood that to be the meaning of Elijah's throwing his mantle upon him.

——And he ſaid unto him, Go back again; for what have I done to thee?] Return, and take thy leave of thy parents, as thou deſireſt, and then follow me. For I have done nothing to hinder thee from performing that filial duty. The employment to which I have now called thee, doth not require an alienation of thy heart from thy father and mother.

Ver. 21. And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen and ſlew them, and boiled their fleſh with the inſtruments of the oxen, and gave unto the people, and they did eat.] He made a feaſt for his friends, and neighbours, and ſervants, before he parted with them, in token of the joy he conceived at his new calling; and burnt the wood which belonged to the plough, under the veſſel in which the meat was boiled. This he did, to ſhew his total relinquiſhment of his rural occupations; for the ſervice of God, to which he was now ſelected.

CHAP. XX.

1 Ben-hadad not content with Ahab's homage, beſiegeth Samaria. 13 By the direction of a prophet, the Syrians are ſlain. 22 As the prophet forewarned Ahab, the Syrians truſting in the valleys, come againſt him in Aphek. 28 By the word of the prophet, and God's judgment, the Syrians are ſmitten again. 31 The Syrians ſubmitting themſelves, Ahab ſendeth Ben-hadad away with a covenant. 35 The prophet under the parable of a priſoner, making Ahab to judge himſelf, denounceth God's judgment againſt him.

AND Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his hoſt together, and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horſes, and chariots: and he went up and beſieged Samaria, and warred againſt it.

2 And he ſent meſſengers to Ahab king of Iſrael into the city, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith Ben-hadad,

3 Thy ſilver and thy gold is mine, thy wives alſo and thy children, even the goodlieſt are mine.

4 And the king of Iſrael anſwered and ſaid, My lord, O king, according to thy ſaying, I am thine, and all that I have.

5 And the meſſengers came again, and ſaid, Thus ſpeaketh Ben-hadad, ſaying, Although I have ſent unto thee, ſaying, thou ſhalt deliver me thy ſilver and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children:

6 Yet I will ſend my ſervants unto thee to-morrow about this time, and they ſhall ſearch thine houſe, and the houſes of thy ſervants; and it ſhall be, that whatſoever is pleaſant in thine eyes, they ſhall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Iſrael called all the elders of the land, and ſaid, Mark, I pray you, and ſee how this man ſeeketh miſchief: for he ſent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my ſilver, and for my gold, and I denied him not.

8 And all the elders, and all the people ſaid unto him, Hearken not unto him, nor conſent.

9 Wherefore he ſaid unto the meſſengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didſt ſend for to thy ſervant at the firſt, I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the meſſengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad ſent unto him, and ſaid, The gods do ſo unto me, and more alſo, if the duſt of Samaria ſhall ſuffice for handfuls for all the people that follow me.

11 And the king of Iſrael anſwered and ſaid, Tell him, Let not him that girdeth on his harneſs, boaſt himſelf, as he that putteth it off.

12 And it came to paſs, when Ben-hadad heard this meſſage (as he was drinking, he and the kings in the pavilions) that he ſaid unto his ſervants, Set your ſelves in array: And they ſet themſelves in array againſt the city.

13 ¶ And behold, there came a prophet unto Ahab king of Iſrael, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD, Haſt thou ſeen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thine hand this day, and thou ſhalt know that I am the LORD.

14 And Ahab ſaid, By whom? And he ſaid, Thus ſaith the LORD, Even by the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he ſaid, Who ſhall order the battle? And he anſwered, Thou.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty two: and after them he numbred all the people, even all the children of Iſrael, being ſeven thouſand.

16 And they went out at noon: but Ben-hadad was drinking himſelf drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

17 And the young men of the princes of the provinces went out firſt, and Ben-hadad ſent out, and they told him, ſaying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he ſaid, Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.

19 So

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And they slew every one his man: and the Syrians fled, and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria escaped on an horse, with the horsemen.

21 And the king of Israel went out, and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.

22 ¶ And the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go strengthen thyself, and mark and see what thou dost: for at the return of the year, the king of Syria will come up against thee.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, Their gods are gods of the hills, therefore they were stronger than we: but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

24 And do this thing, Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms.

25 And number thee an army, like the army that thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they. And he hearkned unto their voice, and did so.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbred the Syrians, and went up to Aphek to fight against Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbred, and were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them, like two little flocks of kids; but the Syrians filled the country.

28 ¶ And there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the LORD because the Syrians have said, The LORD is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys: therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the LORD.

29 And they pitched one over against the other seven days; and so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians an hundred thousand footmen in one day.

30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and there a wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left: and Ben-hadah fled, and came into the city into an inner-chamber.

31 ¶ And his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel; peradventure he will save thy life.

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? he is my brother.

33 Now the men did diligently observe, whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, The cities which my father took from thy father, I will restore, and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant. So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

35 ¶ And a certain man of the sons of the prophets said unto his neighbour in the word of the LORD, Smite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

36 Then said he unto him, Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the LORD, behold, assoon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And assoon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, Smite me I pray thee. And the man smote him, so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and disguised himself with ashes upon his face.

39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, Thy servant went out into the midst of the battle, and behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall thy life be for his life, or else thou shalt pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, So shall thy judgment be, thyself hast decided it.

 41 And

41 And he haſted, and took the aſhes away from his face, and the king of Iſrael diſcerned him, that he was of the prophets.

42 And he ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, Becauſe thou haſt let go out of thy hand, a man whom I appointed to utter deſtruction, therefore thy life ſhall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

43 And the king of Iſrael went to his houſe, heavy and diſpleaſed, and came to Samaria.

Ver. 1. And Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his hoſt together, and there were thirty and two kings with him, and horſes and chariots: and he went up and beſieged Samaria, &c.] We have formerly obſerved, that the kingdom of Damaſcus roſe upon the ruins of that of Zobah. Rezon, who deſerted from Hadadezer, king of Zobah, ſeized on Damaſcus, and was the founder of that noble kingdom; after which he proved an inveterate enemy to Solomon, and his ſubjects, chap. xi. 23, 24, 25. He was ſucceeded by Hezion, who lived in amity with the king of Judah and Iſrael, and left his crown to his ſon Tabrimon, who likewiſe had no miſunderſtandings with the kings of Iſrael and Judah; and was ſucceeded by his ſon Ben-hadad, who was induced, by the preſents of Aſa king of Judah, to declare war againſt Baaſha king of Iſrael; from whom he took ſeveral cities, together with all Cinneroth, and the land of Naphtali, chap. xv. 20. The ſucceſſor of this prince was his ſon Ben-hadad the ſecond, who is the prince mentioned in the verſe before us; and he is called Adad by Joſephus, (Antiq. l. 8. c. 8. ab init.) Ader by the Septuagint, and by Juſtin Adores, (lib. 36. cap. 2.) So different are the names given to the ſame perſon, by hiſtorians and tranſlators. This prince vigorouſly proſecuted the enmity his father had ſo ſucceſsfully exerted againſt Iſrael; but he was baffled twice, in a very remarkable manner, by the ſignal interpoſition of heaven. His firſt hoſtilities againſt Iſrael were carried on with a mighty parade, he having no leſs than thirty-two tributary kings over his chariots, and a vaſt army of horſe and foot. He proceeded, and ſat down before Samaria, and then ſummoned king Ahab to become his vaſſal, and to acknowledge that all belonging to him was at his ſervice and diſpoſal. To this inſolent demand he received a moſt ſubmiſſive anſwer; but his arrogance was then ſwelled to ſuch a pitch, that a bare verbal ſubmiſſion would not ſatisfy him. He therefore ſent to Samaria a ſecond time, to acquaint Ahab, that he intended to ſend ſome officers the next day, to ſearch his palace, and the city, for all the riches, women, and beautiful children, that they might ſieze and bring them away. The king of Iſrael boldly refuſed to ſubmit to ſo unparallel'd an indignity; which highly exaſperated Ben-hadad, who little imagined Ahab could be maſter of ſo much reſolution. He therefore ſent a third meſſage to him, in order to try whether he could not threaten him into the inglorious compliance he demanded from him, wiſhing he himſelf might periſh, if he did not bring ſuch an army againſt the king of Iſrael, that the duſt of Samaria ſhould not ſuffice for handfuls for all the people who ſhould then follow him. This proud meſſage is variouſly interpreted: According to Joſephus, it means no more, than that he would bring ſuch a numberleſs multitude with him, that each taking but a handful of ſoil, ſhould encompaſs Samaria with works that ſhould overtop the wall of the city, (Antiq. l. 8. c. 8.) Others take it much as we do, namely, that if each man in his army took but a handful of Ahab's country, nothing of it ſhould be left remaining. In either ſenſe it was an inſolent vaunt, and paſſionately ſpoken, in order to enhance the greatneſs of his kingdom. Ben-hadad received a reſolute reply to this vain menace, Ahab adviſing him to wait the event of things, before he gave himſelf an air of triumph.

Ahab's meſſage was delivered to Ben-hadad, while he and his vaſſal kings were intoxicating themſelves with wine, in his pavilion. He then ordered his army, which had hitherto been in looſe array, to inveſt the city of Samaria in form, and make all the neceſſary diſpoſitions for a general aſſault. In the mean time, one of thoſe prophets, who had been ſo long concealed from the rage of Jezabel, was commanded by God to acquaint him, that the vaſt army of the Syrians ſhould be delivered into his hand that very day, ver. 13. Hereby the Divine Majeſty made it evident, that as he abhorred idolatry, of which Ahab had been notoriouſly guilty, ſo he alſo deteſted thoſe proud and inſolent boaſters, who imagine they have no ſuperior; and that they can carry all things as they pleaſe, by their own power and ſufficiency.

Tho' Ahab credited the word of the prophet, yet the event he had promiſed, ſeemed ſo extraordinary to this prince, that he asked him by whom it ſhould be accompliſhed? For he was ſenſible that his own forces were not numerous enough to encounter and deſeat ſuch a multitude of potent enemies. The prophet then replied, "Thus "ſaith the Lord, Even by the young men of the princes "of the provinces," ver. 14. Theſe princes were the governors of the provinces, into which the kingdom was divided; and their young men ſeem to ſignify their ſervants, or pages, who waited on them. This circumſtance rendered the promiſed victory the more remarkable, ſince it was obtained, not by old experienced ſoldiers, but by youths; who perhaps had never ſeen a fight, but had always lived at court. The king then enquired who ſhould order the battle, or who ſhould begin the fight? as ſome underſtand the words. Upon which the man of God, in order to try whether Ahab would thus far truſt God, directed him to begin. The Sacred Hiſtorian then informs us, that "Ahab numbered the young men of the princes "of the provinces, and they were two hundred and thirty "two: and after them he numbered all the people, even "all the children of Iſrael, being ſeven thouſand," ver. 15. Theſe were all the forces he could then raiſe, but they certainly were not all the men of war in Iſrael; and with this handful of ſoldiers did the king of Iſrael ſally out upon the numerous and formidable hoſt of the Syrians.

Ben-hadad being then in the midſt of his ſecurity and carouſals, was told that a party of men was ſeen to come out of Samaria; upon which he ordered his troops to ſeize them, whether they came for peace or war, ver. 18. It was contrary to the law of nations to ſeize thoſe who came to treat of peace; but ſuch was the arrogance of this monarch, that he ſcorned to inform himſelf of the motives of their approach, and ordered them to be taken alive, which he thought very practicable, as their number was ſo ſmall. The event, however, turned to his ſhame and confuſion, for this inconſiderable band of Iſraelites, whom he ſo deſpiſed, attacked his army with ſuch a ſlaughter, that the Syrians, who were amazed at the ſuddenneſs and intrepidity of the attempt, fled in the utmoſt diſorder; and Ben-hadad, inſtead of rallying his ſhattered troops, mounted a horſe, and fled with as much precipitation as the reſt of his men. Ahab, and his victorious handful of ſoldiers, purſued their fugitive enemies, and overtook the chariots and horſemen, among whom they made a great ſlaughter. The prophet, who had predicted this defeat, then came to the king of Iſrael, and exhorted him to make what preparations he could to oppoſe the future deſigns of the Syrians againſt him, aſſuring him, that they would certainly return and renew their hoſtilities the next year.

The vanquiſhed troops of Ben-hadad, after the victory the Iſraelites had obtained over them, were induſtrious to invent ſome excuſe to palliate their own inglorious flight. They pretended, that the gods of that people were the gods of the hills, ver. 23. and therefore it was no wonder ſuch a misfortune had befallen them. Theſe Pagans had no knowledge of the Almighty Lord of the univerſe, and only worſhipped a ſet of imaginary gods, who they thought ruled over particular countries, and diſtributed part of thoſe countries among them; ſome being gods of the hills, others of the plains; nor were the woods and rivers deſtitute of their preſiding deities. Perhaps the Syrians had likewiſe heard that the Moſaic law was given from Heaven upon a mountain; and they could not but know that the God of Iſrael was worſhipped in a temple, erected to his honour on an eminent mountain. It was alſo known, that the Iſraelites delighted to ſacrifice in high places: from all which particulars the Syrians concluded, that the the God of that people presided over the mountainous parts of their country, and consequently was superior in that situation to their own deities, whose power, as they imagined, extended only to the plains. In order therefore to comfort their king, they assured him, that if he could but draw out the Israelites upon a plain, his gods would prevail in their turn; and, indeed, if we consider the theology of those times, it can hardly be thought surprising that the Syrians should talk in so wild a manner. They likewise cast some reflections on the two and thirty kings, representing them to Ben-hadad, as not hearty in his cause, nor submissive enough to military discipline; for which reasons they desired him to substitute skilful and trusty officers in their stead, and then to levy such another army as the former, horse for horse, chariot for chariot, and to rest assured of success.

Ben-hadad complied with this advice, and bore his dishonour as uneasily, we may suppose, as any of his subjects could for him. And when the proper season of the year came about, he marched toward the king of Israel with such an army as made it seem that he meant to verify his former menace against the city and country of Samaria, ver. 10. He advanced to Aphek, a city in the tribe of Asher, and near the plain of Galilee, where he undoubtedly intended to fight, that he might be within the reach of his lowland gods; and his troops were so numerous, that they filled the country, ver. 27. Seven days he lay incamped in that situation, over-against the inconsiderable forces of the Israelites, whom the Divine Writer compares to two little flocks of kids, in order to denote their despicable number, flocks of goats being always small.

If it should be asked, why the Syrians, whose numbers were vastly superior to that of their enemies, continued so long without action? We answer, that the Israelites were then incamped on a hill, where the Syrians durst not venture to attack them, and therefore waited till they could see them shift their quarters.

During this interval, a man of God addressed himself to the king of Israel in the following manner: Thus saith "the Lord, Because the Syrians have said, The Lord is "God of the hills, but he is not God of the vallies: "therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into "thine hand, and ye shall know that I am the Lord." This gracious prediction was exactly verified by the event, for when the two armies joined in battle, on the seventh day, the Israelites, who in all probability surprized their enemies, by a sudden and unexpected assault, gained so compleat a victory over them, that a hundred thousand of their footmen were left dead upon the spot, and the rest were seized with such a panic, that they fled with the utmost precipitation to Aphek; but tho' this city was seated in a level country, where they imagined their own gods had the superiority, they were sensible, to their cost, that the vengeance of the God of Israel, could reach them even there: For the inspired Writer informs us, "that a "wall fell upon twenty and seven thousand of the men "that were left," ver. 30. This was an event of so uncommon a nature, that it may well be asked, how it came to pass? In answer to which, the Syrians are supposed to have ranged themselves round the wall of the city, in order to defend themselves against a new attack; and that the wall was either beaten down upon them by the Israelites, or over-turned by an earthquake.

Ben-hadad now gave all over for lost, and perhaps was not a little surprised, that his gods had failed him in the hour of need, when he most had flatter'd himself with their aid. But, who is like unto thee, O Lord of hosts, or who among the gods can be compared unto thee, who art glorious in holiness, fearful in Praises doing wonders! The Syrian king fled into the city, into an inner chamber, ver. 30. The words in the Hebrew are, into a chamber within a chamber; that is, into a very secret place, where he thought he should not be easily found. In this despairing condition, his officers reminded him that the kings of Israel had been generous enemies; advised him to throw himself upon Ahab's mercy, and offered themselves to prepare the conqueror to receive him in an amicable manner; for which purpose they desired leave to put sackcloth upon their loins, and ropes about their necks. In this humble disguise, they accordingly went and accosted the king of Israel, intreating him in the most submissive manner, to be favourable to their sovereign, in whose name they implored his mercy. Ahab overjoyed at his victory, was in as tractable a disposition to receive them as they could wish: he called Ben-hadad his Brother, in a kind of transport, and declared he was glad to hear he was living. The artful Syrians caught at the word Brother, and improved it in the best manner for the service of their disconsolate king. Ben-hadad was then brought to Ahab, who received him into his chariot with an amasing generosity. Upon which the Syrian king took that favourable opportunity to sooth him with warm protestations. Among the rest, he promised to deliver up all the strong places his father had wrested from Israel, and likewise to allow Ahab great authority in Damascus, even the privilege of building streets in that city, in the same manner as streets had been built in Samaria by Ben-hadad his father, ver. 34. According to Josephus, Ahab was to be allowed as much liberty in Damascus, as the father of Ben-hadad had enjoyed in the city of Samaria, which was built but a few years before, by Omri king of Israel. But what Privilege or Authority Ben-hadad's father enjoyed in Samaria, is a question we should be glad to clear up. It is most likely, that the king of Syria promises Ahab, that the Israelites should live free in Damascus, and enjoy all the immunities they had a right to at home. That they should have free ingress and egress, according to the LXX, or build them streets wherein they might live together, agreeably to the laws of their own country, according to the Vulgate: and this privilege had been enjoyed by the Syrians in Samaria. Some think that by streets the Sacred Historian means market-places, where commodities were sold, the toll of which should belong to Ahab. Others are of opinion that he means courts of judgment, where Ahab should maintain a jurisdiction over the subjects of Ben-hadad; others will have these streets to signify a piazza, of which Ahab should receive the rents. But the generality of interpreters think fortifications are meant; whereby Ahab might be enabled to bridle the metropolis of the Syrian kingdom, and prevent the inhabitants from making irruptions into the land of Israel. But Gotf. Vallandus hath said a great deal to prove, that the Hebrew word, rendered streets, signifies palaces; which Ahab's being allowed to build, was great a token of subjection. We do not read that any such structures were built by the Syrian kings in Samaria; nor of any cities they took from the Israelites, except those that were taken from Baasha, chap. xv. 20. who was one of the predecessors of Ahab, but not his father.

Ver. 35. And a certain man of the sons of the prophets, said unto his neighbour in the word of the Lord, smite me I pray thee.] He ordered him to give him such a blow as might wound him. And the man refused to smite him. Because he thought it inhuman, to strike an innocent person, who had not offered him any wrong, so as to deserve such a treatment.

Ver. 36. Then he said unto him, because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the Lord, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, a lion found him and slew him.] This may seem too severe a punishment, to those who do not consider, First, that the prophet commanded this person to strike him, by the word of the Lord, not of his own will, but because it was required by God. As if he had said, It is not I who require this of thee, but the Divine Spirit, by which I am actuated. And accordingly the punishment was inflicted on the prophet's neighbour, because he obeyed not the voice of the Lord. Secondly, the prophet commanded this in God's name, not to an ordinary man, but to his companion, as the Hebrew words, el reehu, should have been translated; that is, a prophet bred in the same school with himself, and who well understood the weight of these words, I command thee in the name of the Lord.

Ver. 37. Then he found another man, and said, Smite me, I pray thee: and the man smote him, so that in smiting he wounded him.] The prophet's intention in this proceeding, was to gain, as a well-deserving soldier, the freer access to Ahab, which it was very difficult for a prophet to obtain, that class of men being hateful to the king and his courtiers.

This prophet then presented himself before Ahab, with his face all besmeered with dirt and blood, and complained, that during the late engagement between the two armies, a Syrian prisoner had been committed to his custody, tody, with a ſtrict charge not to let him eſcape; but that whilſt he was employed about ſome other affairs, the priſoner made his eſcape, and himſelf was now in danger of being puniſhed for his neglect. Ahab, who believed the fact to be true, made no ſcruple to pronounce a ſentence of death on the prophet; who then wiping his face, and diſcovering himſelf to the king, immediately let him know, that he had paſſed his ſentence againſt himſelf, namely, as that ſince he had let ſo powerful an enemy of Iſrael go free, when God had delivered him into his power, his own life ſhould pay for that of his priſoner. Ahab was ſtruck with ſuch ſurprize at the boldneſs of the prophet's ſtratagem, that he went away to Samaria, full of grief and indignation; not ſo much for his ſin, as for the ſad effects of it upon himſelf and people; which he might confidently expect, having had frequent experiences, that God did not ſuffer the words of his prophets to fall to the ground.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Ahab being denied Naboth's vineyard, is grieved. 5 Jezebel writing letters againſt Naboth, he is condemned of blaſphemy. 15 Ahab taketh poſſeſſion of the vineyard. 17 Elijah denounceth judgments againſt Ahab, and Jezebel. 25 Wicked Ahab repenting, God defereth the judgment.

AND it came to paſs after theſe things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.

2 And Ahab ſpake unto Naboth, ſaying, Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for a garden of herbs, becauſe it is near unto my houſe, and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it? or if it ſeem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth ſaid to Ahab, The LORD forbid it me, that I ſhould give thee the inheritance of my fathers unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his houſe, heavy and diſpleaſed, becauſe of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had ſpoken to him: for he had ſaid, I will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers: and he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 ¶ But Jezebel his wife came to him, and ſaid unto him, Why is thy ſpirit ſo ſad, that thou eateſt no bread?

6 And he ſaid unto her, Becauſe I ſpake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and ſaid unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or elſe if it pleaſe thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he anſwered, I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife ſaid unto him, Doſt thou now govern the kingdom of Iſrael? Ariſe and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

8 So ſhe wrote letters in Ahabs name, and ſealed them with his ſeal, and ſent the letters unto the elders, and to the nobles that were in his city dwelling with Naboth.

9 And ſhe wrote in the letters, ſaying, Proclaim a faſt, and ſet Naboth on high among the people.

10 And ſet two men, ſons of Belial, before him, to bear witneſs againſt him, ſaying, Thou didſt blaſpheme God and the king: and then carry him out, and ſtone him that he may die.

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, did as Jezebel had ſent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which ſhe had ſent unto them.

12 They proclaimed a faſt, and ſet Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and ſat before him: and the men of Belial witneſſed againſt him, even againſt Naboth, in the preſence of the people, ſaying, Naboth did blaſpheme God and the king. Then they carried him forth out of the city, and ſtoned him with ſtones, that he died.

14 Then they ſent to Jezebel, ſaying, Naboth is ſtoned, and is dead.

15 ¶ And it came to paſs when Jezebel heard that Naboth was ſtoned, and was dead, that Jezebel ſaid to Ahab, Ariſe, take poſſeſſion of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refuſed to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

16 And it came to paſs when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that Ahab roſe up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take poſſeſſion of it.

17 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tiſhbite, ſaying,

18 Ariſe, go down to meet Ahab king of Iſrael, which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to poſſeſs it.

19 And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto him, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD, Haſt thou killed and alſo taken poſſeſſion? And thou ſhalt ſpeak unto him, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD, In the place where dogs licked the blood of Naboth, ſhall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

20 And Ahab ſaid to Elijah, Haſt thou found me, O mine enemy? And he anſwered, I have found thee: becauſe thou haſt ſold thyſelf to work evil in the ſight of the LORD.

21 Behold

21 Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy poſterity, and will cut off from Ahab him that piſſeth againſt the wall, and him that is ſhut up, and left in Iſrael.

22 And will make thine houſe like the houſe of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, and like the houſe of Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah, for the provocation wherewith thou haſt provoked me to anger, and made Iſrael to ſin.

23 And of Jezebel alſo ſpake the LORD, ſaying, The dogs ſhall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel.

24 Him that dieth of Ahab in the city, the dogs ſhall eat: and him that dieth in the field, ſhall the fowls of the air eat.

25 ¶ But there was none like unto Ahab which did ſell himſelf to work wickedneſs in the ſight of the LORD, whom Jezebel his wife ſtirred up.

26 And he did very abominably in following idols, according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the LORD caſt out before the children of Iſrael.

27 And it came to paſs when Ahab heard thoſe words, that he rent his clothes, and put ſackcloth upon his fleſh, and faſted, and lay in ſackcloth, and went ſoftly.

28 And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tiſhbite, ſaying,

29 Seeſt thou how Ahab humbleth himſelf before me? becauſe he humbleth himſelf before me, I will not bring the evil in his days: but in his ſons days will I bring the evil upon his houſe.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs after theſe things, that Naboth the Jezreelite had a vineyard, which was in Jezreel, hard by the palace of Ahab king of Samaria.] After all the wonders which God had wrought for Ahab, in granting him ſuch ſignal victories over his enemies, this incorrigible prince ſuffered himſelf to be ſeduced by Jezebel to a moſt inhuman action, which proved fatal to him and his whole family. The account of this barbarity is inſerted immediately after the foregoing hiſtory, in order to repreſent the extreme wickedneſs of Ahab, who ſpared Ben-hadad, as Saul did Agag king of the Amalekites, and cauſed Naboth to be ſlain, that he might become maſter of his vineyard: This was a moſt unpardonable aggravation of his crime, namely, that he murdered a juſt Iſraelite, after he had ſuffered an impious enemy to eſcape.

Naboth, an inhabitant of Jezreel, had a vineyard contiguous to the palace, and planted on the ſame riſing ground whereon that ſtood; for vines thrive beſt in mountainous ſituations. Ahab offered to purchaſe this vineyard of the proprietor, either for money, or in exchange for another piece of ground; this prince being deſirous to convert that vineyard into a garden of herbs, or a flower-garden, as ſome underſtand it. Naboth declared himſelf averſe to the king's propoſal; for as it is natural to all men to value the ancient poſſeſſions of their family, ſo the law of Moſes prohibited the alienation of lands from one tribe or family to another, unleſs a perſon happened to be reduced to poverty, and had no other method of acquiring a ſubſiſtance; in which caſe, the land might be ſold till the year of jubilee, and was then to revert to its firſt owner. As Naboth therefore was not in any neceſſitous circumſtances, ſo he conſidered, that if he ſhould, out of reſpect to the king, and merely to gratify his pleaſure, part with his vineyard, he ſhould never recover it out of his hands at the jubilee, ſince it would be conſidered as part of the ground belonging to the royal palace. This makes it probable, that Naboth was one of the ſeven thouſand, who ſtrictly adhered to the Moſaic law.

Naboth's refuſal to gratify the deſire of this proud king filled him with ſo much vexation and melancholy, as deprived him of his appetite, and made all company unacceptable to him. This change in his temper and behaviour ſeemed ſurpriſing to Jezebel, who ſoon became ſenſible, that his mind was more diſordered than his body, and was deſirous to know what could mortify him to ſuch a degree. Ahab, inſtead of giving her a fair and candid account of the particulars, repreſents Naboth as having refuſed, in a very ſurly and uncourteous manner, to ſell him his vineyard; which was far from being the fact; for Naboth had repreſented it as a religious duty, founded on the law of God, not to part with the inheritance of his fathers, which had been allotted to them by Joſhua, never to be alienated. For the poſſeſſors of theſe patrimonies were in reality no more than uſufructuaries, that is, they only enjoyed the profits of them, the true proprietor being God himſelf, Lev. xxv. 23. who charged their land with no other payments but tenths and firſt-fruits to his miniſters; after which he gave them an entire poſſeſſion of it, to remain in their ſeveral families for ever, without any alteration; which none could make but himſelf.

Ahab having thus acquainted his wife with the cauſe of his uneaſineſs, ſhe firſt reproached him for it, as a meanneſs of mind that was altogether degrading in a king of Iſrael; and then exhorted him to reſume his former gaiety, for that ſhe would charge herſelf with the care of accompliſhing his deſire. She then wrote a letter to the elders of Jezreel, ſealed with the king's ſignet, and commanded them to proclaim a faſt, as if ſome grievous crime had been committed, or ſome great calamity had befallen them, which all the people were to bewail, and purge themſelves from that ſin, leſt they alſo ſhould become guilty. She likewiſe order'd them to ſet Naboth "on high "among the people," or to give him an honourable place in the aſſembly of the people, as he was a perſon of an illuſtrious houſe; and that it might not be ſuſpected they condemned him out of any hatred, but with grief and reſpect to his perſon. And to compleat the baſeneſs and impiety of this action, ſhe ordered them to ſuborn two men of Belial, or wretches of no conſcience, to ſwear that Naboth had blaſphemed God and the king. Now it was death, by the law of Moſes, to blaſpheme God, Lev. xxiv. 16. and cuſtom had made it a capital crime to blaſpheme the king; and perhaps they might comprehend this crime in the law which made it death for any man to curſe his father or mother, Exod. xxi. 17. For the prince is the father of his country. But Jezebel, to make all ſure, order'd the elders to cauſe Naboth to be accuſed of treaſon againſt God, and againſt the king; that ſo the people might be the better ſatisfied, to ſee him ſtoned to death. But there is this difference to be obſerved between theſe two crimes, namely, that if a man had only blaſphemed God, he was to be tried by the great court at Jeruſalem, as the Hebrew doctors inform us, and his goods came to his heirs. But, when any man was executed for treaſon againſt the king, his eſtate was confiſcated to the ſovereign againſt whom the offence was committed. Naboth therefore was to be accuſed of this crime, that Ahab might enjoy his forfeited vineyard; and he was likewiſe to be charged with blaſphemy againſt God, that juſtice might be executed the ſooner upon him; for the cruel Jezebel commanded the elders of Jezreel to cauſe him to be ſtoned, aſſoon as their perjured evidences had acted the part preſcribed them.

The Jezreelites, not daring to diſobey the orders of this pernicious woman, ſent her word ſoon after of Naboth's death, and ſhe immediately acquainted Ahab with it; but whilſt he was taking poſſeſſion of the vineyard, the prophet Elijah came to him, by the expreſs order of God, and boldly denounced againſt him the deſtruction that the inhuman murder of Naboth would bring upon him, and his impious queen, and likewiſe upon all his houſe; adding, that the dogs ſhould lick his blood, on the very ſpot where they had licked the innocent blood of Naboth; that Jezebel ſhould be devoured by dogs, and all his poſterity be utterly cut off. This dreadful ſentence, pronounced by ſo conſiderable a prophet, ſtruck the king with ſo much horror and remorſe, that he rent his royal robes, and returned home in the deepeſt affliction. Theſe tokens of contrition were not unavailing with that infinitely gracious Being, who ever delights in mercy to penitent offenders. Seeſt thou, ſaid he to Elijah, how Ahab humbleth himſelf before me? which neither Jeroboam nor Baaſha ever did, but obſtinately perſiſted in their ſins, without the leaſt token of ſorrow, when the ſame doom was paſſed upon them. God therefore declared, that he would not inflict the threatned evil in the days of Ahab, but in thoſe of his ſon.

Such is the prevalency of a penitent diſpoſition, that God remitted part of Ahab's puniſhment, upon this imperfect repentance; for ſuch it was, tho' it teſtified ſome belief of the prophet's prediction. And accordingly it was the blood of his ſon, and not his own, which was licked up by the dogs, in that portion of ground where they had licked up the guiltleſs blood of Naboth.

Ahab, during the time of his humiliation before God, is ſuppoſed to have made his ſon Ahaziah the copartner of his crown, or perhaps, only his viceroy. At leaſt, this is the only expedient by which chronologiſts can reconcile the anachroniſms, which one meets with between the books of Kings and Chronicles; the one beginning the king's reign from the death of their fathers, and the other from the time of their being raiſed to a partnerſhip with them. An inſtance of this nature is proved in the annals of archbiſhop Uſher, Sub. An. Mun. 3106. as well in Ahab, as in his cotemporary, Jehoſhaphat. It may likewiſe be obſerved, that it became very expedient, if not abſolutely neceſſary, in dangerous wars (when it was cuſtomary for kings to lead their own armies, and who often loſt their lives) to appoint their ſucceſſors, and leave them vicegerents of the kingdom during their abſence; upon which account, this prudent cuſtom prevailed alſo among many other eaſtern nations.

CHAP. XXII.

1 Ahab ſeduced by falſe prophets, according to the word of Micaiah, is ſlain at Ramoth-gilead. 37 The dogs lick up his blood; and Ahaziah ſucceedeth him. 41 Jehoſhaphat's good reign. 45 His acts. 50 Jehoram ſucceedeth him. 51 Ahaziah's evil reign.

AND they continued three years without war between Syria and Iſrael.

2 And it came to paſs in the third year, that Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Iſrael.

3 (And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto his ſervants, Know ye that Ramoth in Gilead is ours, and we be ſtill, and take it not out of the hand of the king of Syria?)

4 And he ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead? And Jehoſhaphat ſaid to the king of Iſrael, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horſes as thy horſes.

5 And Jehoſhaphat ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to-day.

6 Then the king of Iſrael gathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and ſaid unto them, Shall I go againſt Ramoth-gilead to battle, or ſhall I forbear? And they ſaid, Go up; for the LORD ſhall deliver it into the hand of the king.

7 And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD beſides, that we might enquire of him?

8 And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, There is yet one man (Micaiah the ſon of Imlah) by whom we may enquire of the LORD; but I hate him, for he doth not propheſy good concerning me, but evil. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Let not the king ſay ſo.

9 Then the king of Iſrael called an officer, and ſaid, Haſten hither Micaiah the ſon of Imlah.

10 And the king of Iſrael and Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, ſat each on his throne, having put on their robes, in a void place, in the entrance of the gate of Samaria, and all the prophets propheſied before them.

11 And Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah made him horns of iron: and he ſaid, Thus ſaith the LORD, With theſe ſhalt thou puſh the Syrians, until thou have conſumed them.

12 And all the prophets propheſied ſo, ſaying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and proſper: for the LORD ſhall deliver it into the kings hand.

13 And the meſſenger that was gone to call Micaiah, ſpake unto him, ſaying, Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth, Let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and ſpeak that which is good.

14 And Micaiah ſaid, As the LORD liveth, what the LORD ſaith unto me, that will I ſpeak.

15 ¶ So he came to the king, and the king ſaid unto him, Micaiah, ſhall we go againſt Ramoth-gilead to battle, or ſhall we forbear? And he anſwered him, Go, and proſper: for the LORD ſhall deliver it into the hand of the king.

16 And the king ſaid unto him, How many times ſhall I adjure thee, that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD.

17 And he ſaid, I ſaw all Iſrael ſcattered upon the hills, as ſheep that have not a ſhepherd: and the LORD ſaid, Theſe have no maſter, let them return every man to his houſe in peace.

18 And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, Did I not tell thee, that he would would propheſy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he ſaid, Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: I ſaw the LORD ſitting on his throne, and all the hoſt of heaven ſtanding by him, on his right hand, and on his left.

20 And the LORD ſaid, Who ſhall perſwade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one ſaid on this manner, and another ſaid on that manner.

21 And there came forth a ſpirit, and ſtood before the LORD, and ſaid, I will perſwade him.

22 And the LORD ſaid unto him, Wherewith? And he ſaid, I will go forth, and I will be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he ſaid, Thou ſhalt perſwade him, and prevail alſo: go forth, and do ſo.

23 Now therefore behold, the LORD hath put a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all theſe thy prophets, and the LORD hath ſpoken evil concerning thee.

24 But Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah went near, and ſmote Micaiah on the cheek, and ſaid, Which way went the ſpirit of the LORD from me to ſpeak unto thee?

25 And Micaiah ſaid, Behold, thou ſhalt ſee in that day, when thou ſhalt go into an inner chamber to hide thy ſelf.

26 And the king of Iſrael ſaid, Take Micaiah, and carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city, and to Joaſh the kings ſon:

27 And ſay, Thus ſaith the king, Put this fellow in the priſon, and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, until I come in peace.

28 And Micaiah ſaid, If thou return at all in peace, the LORD hath not ſpoken by me. And he ſaid, Hearken, O people, every one of you.

29 So the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-gilead.

30 And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, I will diſguiſe myſelf, and enter into the battle, but put thou on thy robes. And the king of Iſrael diſguiſed himſelf, and went into the battle.

31 But the king of Syria commanded his thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, ſaying, Fight neither with ſmall nor great, ſave only with the king of Iſrael.

32 And it came to paſs, when the captains of the chariots ſaw Jehoſhaphat, that they ſaid, Surely it is the king of Iſrael. And they turned aſide to fight againſt him: and Jehoſhaphat cried out.

33 And it came to paſs, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Iſrael, that they turned back from purſuing him.

34 And a certain man drew a bow at a venture, and ſmote the king of Iſrael between the joints of the harneſs: wherefore he ſaid unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the hoſt, for I am wounded.

35 And the battle increaſed that day: and the king was ſtayed up in his chariot againſt the Syrians, and died at even: and the blood ran out of the wound into the midſt of the chariot.

36 And there went a proclamation throughout the hoſt, about the going down of the ſun, ſaying, Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

37 ¶ So the king died, and was brought to Samaria, and they buried the king in Samaria.

38 And one waſhed the chariot in the pool of Samaria, and the dogs licked up his blood, and they waſhed his armour, according unto the word of the LORD which he ſpake.

39 Now the reſt of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and the ivory houſe which he made, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

40 So Ahab ſlept with his fathers, and Ahaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

41 ¶ And Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Aſa began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab king of Iſrael.

42 Jehoſhaphat was thirty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and five years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Azubah the daughter of Shilhi.

43 And he walked in all the way of Aſa his father, he turned not aſide from it, doing that which was right in the eyes of the LORD: nevertheleſs the high places were not taken away; for the people offered and burnt incenſe yet in the high places.

44 And Jehoſhaphat made peace with the king of Iſrael.

45 Now

45 Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoſhaphat, and his might that he ſhewed, and how he warred, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

46 And the remnant of the ſodomites which remained in the days of his father Aſa, he took out of the land.

47 There was then no king in Edom: a deputy was king.

48 Jehoſhaphat made ſhips of Tharſhiſh to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ſhips were broken at Ezion-geber.

49 Then ſaid Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab unto Jehoſhaphat, Let my ſervants go with thy ſervants in the ſhips: but Jehoſhaphat would not.

50 ¶ And Jehoſhaphat ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and Jehoram his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

51 ¶ Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria the ſeventeenth year of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, and reigned two years over Iſrael.

52 And he did evil in the ſight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and in the way of his mother, and in the way of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin.

53 For he ſerved Baal, and worſhipped him, and provoked to anger the LORD God of Iſrael, according to all that his father had done.

Ver. 1. And they continued three years without war between Syria and Iſrael.] Not three compleat years, but the greateſt part of that time, 2 Chron. xviii. 2. Tho' God was highly offended with Iſrael, and determined to plague them by the Syrians, yet the effects of his anger being ſuſpended for ſome time, upon Ahab's humiliation, the prophet Elijah did not cauſe Hazael, who was to be the executioner of the Divine wrath, to be then anointed king of Syria.

Ver. 2. And it came to paſs in the third year, that Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Iſrael.] Jehoſhaphat had long enjoyed a profound peace, and employed his time partly in ſtrengthening his kingdom, and promoting his naval trade; and partly in making all proper regulations for the abolition of idolatry, and the promotion of the true worſhip of God. He is blamed only for two things; namely, his not totally demoliſhing the high places, and his making alliances and affinity with Ahab. He contracted this affinity, by ſuffering his ſon Jehoram to eſpouſe Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, and a moſt wicked princeſs, who proved the author of great calamities in Judah: And it was in conſequence of this fatal marriage, that Jehoſhaphat came down to Samaria, to viſit Ahab; having left the care of his kingdom to his ſon Jehoram.

By this time, Ahab had formed a reſolution to recover Ramoth-gilead from the Syrians: And therefore took this opportunity of deſiring his royal gueſt to aſſiſt him in the enterpriſe; to which he readily conſented; but made it his requeſt, that God might be firſt conſulted, concerning the ſucceſs of that expedition. Ahab ſhewed no averſion to that propoſal, and immediately aſſembled four hundred of his prophets at the gate of Samaria, where the king of Judah, and he, ſat, each on a ſtately throne. Some think, theſe were the prophets of the groves, who were not ſlain with the prieſts of Baal; and indeed, their number exactly correſponds with that of thoſe idolatrous miniſters, chap. xviii. 19. It is likewiſe evident, that they were falſe prophets, for Micaiah calls them Ahab's prophets, ver. 23.

Ahab having conſulted them with relation to the event of the intended war, they all aſſured him that he ſhould prove victorious. One of them likewiſe pretended to foretell his ſucceſs, by ſome antic and awkward repreſentations and geſtures, ver. 11. and they all promiſed a happy event, with ſo much eagerneſs and aſſurance, as rendered them ſuſpected to Jehoſhaphat, who therefore deſired, that if there were any other prophet of the Lord, he might be ſent for and conſulted. There was indeed ſuch a one as he deſired; namely, Micaiah, the ſon of Imlah; but his ſtrenuous veracity had rendered him odious to Ahab: He, however, was obliged, in complaiſance to Jehoſhaphat, to ſend for him.

Ver. 13. And the meſſenger that was gone to call Micaiah, ſpake unto him, ſaying, Behold now, the words of the prophets, declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, &c.] So mightily did the opinion of univerſality ſway with the ſuperſtitious people, that the meſſenger thought he could perſuade Micaiah not to diſſent from the reſt of the prophets, leſt he ſhould incur the cenſure of ſingularity, peeviſhneſs, and privacy of ſpirit. But all his ſoothing admonitions could not ſeduce this prophet from his integrity; and though he ſeems, at that time, to have had no expreſs revelation about the matter, he had the reſolution to declare, that he would unfold whatever ſhould be communicated to him from God, the great author of Truth.

Ver. 15. So he came to the king, and the king ſaid unto him, Micaiah, ſhall we go againſt Ramoth-gilead to battle, or ſhall we forbear? And he anſwered him, Go, and proſper: for the Lord ſhall deliver it into the hand of the king.] Ahab asked him the very ſame queſtion he had put to the reſt of the prophets, and Micaiah returned him the very ſame anſwer he had received from them; but in ſo ironical a manner, as made the king ſenſible that he only ridiculed their prediction of ſucceſs. And indeed, the meaning of Micaiah was plainly this, Becauſe thou art not ſolicitous to be informed of the truth, but only to pleaſe thy ſelf, go on with the expedition thou propoſeſt, as all thy prophets adviſe thee, and try the truth of their prediction, by thy own experience.

Ver. 16. And the king ſaid unto him, How many times ſhall I adjure thee, that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the Lord?] Ahab had not adjured him before, but now he did; and declares, that he would repeat the adjuration, if Micaiah did not ſpeak ſeriouſly, and tell him what God had ſaid to him, which the prophet had not yet done. For he did not introduce the foregoing anſwer with the uſual preface of the prophets, Thus ſaith the Lord: Becauſe he did not then ſpeak in God's name, but in his own.

Ver. 17. And he ſaid, I ſaw all Iſrael ſcattered upon the hills, as ſheep that have not a ſhepherd.] I beheld them routed, and flying from their enemies to the hills for ſafety, being reduced to the helpleſs condition of ſheep, who are neither ſtrong, nor ſwift of feet, but are expoſed to the injuries of all creatures, when they are left deſtitute of a ſhepherd to conduct them in ſafety.

——— And the Lord ſaid, Theſe have no maſter, let them return every man to his houſe in peace.] They have loſt their king and governor, who was repreſented by the ſhepherd before-mentioned; let them therefore return to their reſpective habitations, and think no more of war, ſince they have no leader to head them.

Ver. 18. And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Jehoſhaphat, Did I not tell thee, that he would propheſy no good concerning me, but evil?] Micaiah had always delivered threatning anſwers to him from God, and therefore was not, as the Jews imagine, the prophet who brought him that gracious meſſage, when Ben-hadad treated him in ſo inſolent a manner, chap. xx. 13.

Ver.

Ver. 19. And he said, (hear thou therefore the word of the Lord:] If thou doſt not delight in obſequious falſhoods, be attentive to what I have farther to ſay from the Lord.

I ſaw the Lord ſitting on his Throne, and all the hoſt of heaven ſtanding by him, ſome on his right hand, and ſome on his left.] This is a parabolical ſpeech, ſignifying, that there was a greater king than Ahab, who would judge him according to his works; and that the prophet ſaw him in a viſion, ſitting on a throne for that purpoſe, and attended by the heavenly hoſt, as Ahab was by his prophets. Some on his right hand, by which we may think he means the good angels; and ſome on his left hand, by which are meant the bad, who, when ever God pleaſes, are the executioners of his judgments, on the incorrigible ſons of men.

Ver. 20. And the lord ſaid, who ſhall perſwade Ahab, that he may go and fall at Ramoth-Gilead?] It is not to be thought that any ſuch conſultation was held before the Divine Majeſty. But ſuch repreſentations as theſe, are calculated to accommodate inviſible things to the meaneſt capacities of men. Who were to know, that the Lord reſolved to let Ahab be deceived, and periſh at Ramoth-Gilead; that he who ſuffered Ben-hadad to eſcape, might himſelf be puniſhed by that prince.

——And one ſaid on this manner, and another ſaid on that manner.] This only ſignifies, that God hath various methods of bringing men to deſtruction, when ſuch is his deſign.

Ver. 21. And there came forth a ſpirit, and ſtood before the Lord, and ſaid, I will perſwade him.] The meaning is, that there are evil ſpirits, who are very ſedulous to entice men to their own ruin, and have power ſo to do, if God ſhould not think fit to fruſtrate their deſigns.

Ver. 22. And the Lord ſaid unto him wherewith?] God was not ignorant of what this malignant ſpirit was both deſirous and capable of performing; but this is ſaid, in order to repreſent more familiarly to vulgar underſtandings, by what means Ahab was led into deſtruction.

——And he ſaid, I will go forth, and I will be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all his prophets.] I will ſuggeſt that to them which will not fail to deceive him.

——And he ſaid, thou ſhalt perſuade him, and prevail alſo: Go forth, and do ſo.] God permitted this fallacious ſpirit to follow his own inclinations, which he knew would have ſucceſs, and prevail with Ahab to believe he ſhould proſper in this war, wherein God intended he ſhould be deſtroyed. For the prophets had obſerved, how ſucceſsful Ahab had been in his former war with the king of Syria: which made them forward to promiſe him the ſame ſuperiority in this. And Ahab was as inclinable to believe it, as they were to aſſure it.

Ver. 24. But Zedekiah the ſon of Chenaanah went near, and ſmote Micaiah on the cheek.] He ſeems to have been the chief of Ahabs prophets; perhaps the head of the whole college. And as he preſumed upon the king's favour, he took the inſolent liberty to ſtrike Micaiah in his preſence, by way of contempt of what he had uttered.

——And ſaid, which way went the ſpirit of the Lord from me, to ſpeak unto thee?] He was confident that the ſpirit had been infuſed into him, and could not imagine how it ſhould depart from him, and enter into Micaiah, to bid him contradict all that he and his brethren had propheſied.

Ver. 25. And Micaiah ſaid, behold thou ſhalt ſee in that day, when thou ſhalt go into an inner Chamber to hide thy ſelf.] Thou ſhalt be fully ſatisfied in this particular, when thy fears ſhall one day cauſe thee to ſhroud thy ſelf in a place of obſcurity, to prevent thy being ſeized, and puniſhed as a falſe prophet, whoſe lying predictions occaſioned the death of Ahab.

Ver. 26. And the king of Iſrael ſaid, take Micaiah, and carry him back unto Amon the governor of the city, &c.] It ſeems this holy man was in priſon, when Ahab ſent his meſſenger for him.

Ver. 27. And ſay, thus ſaith the king, put this fellow in the priſon, and feed him with bread of affliction, and with water of affliction, until I come in peace.] Ahab ordered him, we ſuppoſe, to be confined more ſtrictly than before. He, however, would not have him ſtarved, but fed with coarſe bread and bad water, till he himſelf ſhould return victorious; and then perhaps, he intended to put him to death.

Ver. 28. And Micaiah ſaid, if thou return at all in peace, the Lord hath not ſpoken by me. And he ſaid, hearken O people, every one of you.] He willingly conſented to be thought a falſe prophet, and to be treated as ſuch, if Ahab returned from his expedition in the manner he imagined.

Ver. 29. So the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, went up to Ramoth-Gilead.] It may ſeem ſurpriſing, that ſo religious a prince as Jehoſhaphat, would accompany Ahab in his expedition, after he had heard the prediction of Micaiah: but we may ſuppoſe that the king of Iſrael and his prophets employed all their art to make him believe that Micaiah was a man of a perverſe and haughty ſpirit; who took a pride in contradicting the other prophets, and in repreſenting all the kings proceedings in the worſt light; that he might diſtinguiſh himſelf by his ſingularity, though he were ſure to ſuffer for it. It is certain, that Jehoſhaphat was a prince of an eaſy diſpoſition, which inclined him to act in a more obliging manner to Ahab, than was conſiſtent either with his own intereſt or reputation.

The two kings led their forces againſt Ramoth-Gilead; where they found the Syrians prepared to receive them: but Ahab having ſufficient reaſon to fear that the enemy would mark him out for deſtruction, diſguiſed himſelf before the battle, and deſired Jehoſhaphat to appear in the robes of a king, according to our tranſlation, ver. 30. But as this ſeems to have been a very odd compliment to his royal confederate, others render it, put on theſe robes, inſtead of put on thy robes. That is, lay aſide the habit of a chief commander, and follow my example, by putting on theſe robes. For he had brought a double change of rayment into the field, that neither of them might be known by their habit. We doubt, however, whether this be a right explication of the paſſage before us; ſince it is manifeſt by the event, that the Syrians took Jehoſhaphat for the king of Iſrael, which they hardly would have done if they had not ſeen ſomething regal in the habit he wore. We therefore ſuppoſe that Ahab deſired him to array himſelf in that manner, that he might have the honour to be thought the commander in chief; for we may be certain, that if he had acquainted that prince with the true reaſon which induced him to make that requeſt, the other would have been wiſe enough to decline ſo dangerous a compliment.

The apprehenſions of Ahab were not without foundation; for the king of Syria commanded thirty and two captains, who had rule over his chariots, to direct their arms only againſt the king of Iſrael. This had like to have proved fatal to Jehoſhaphat, who had inevitably been ſlain, had not the officers ceaſed their purſuit of him, when they diſcovered he was not the perſon they were commiſſioned to deſtroy. But Ahabs precaution could not ſave him from the fate he endeavoured to evade; for one of the Syrians drew a bow at a venture, and ſmote him between the joints of his harneſs: providence undoubtedly directing the arrow ſo as to make it penetrate into his vital parts. The wounded king then ordered his charioteer to carry him out of the field of battle. But as the fight grew ſharp in his abſence, and he apprehended that his ſoldiers would fly before their enemies, he bravely returned into the field, notwithſtanding his mortal wound; and cauſed himſelf to be ſupported in his chariot in order to animate his army, till the evening put an end to the battle; and then he died.

The king's corpſe was brought to Samaria, where it was depoſited in a royal ſepulchre: but his bloody armour, chariot, and harneſs were carried to a pool in that place, to be waſhed; and there the dogs licked up his blood. See our annotations at the cloſe of chap. xxi.

In this manner died Ahab king of Iſrael, whom in juſtice we muſt acknowledge to have been maſter of many noble qualities, and he certainly would have proved a very great man, if he had not been incurably addicted to idolatry, in conſequence of the infatuating perſuaſions of his impious queen; his eſpouſals with whom may be conſidered as the ſource of all his ſucceeding misfortunes. So dangerous it is to be unequally yoaked with unbelievers.

Ver. 42. Jehoſhaphat was thirty and five years old when he began to reign, &c.] The intention of the Divine Writer of this book, was principally and in the firſt place to give us the hiſtory of the kings of the houſe of David; with which he begins, and then joins to it the hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael. Thus having finiſhed the hiſtory of Aſa king of Judah, he recounts the affairs of Iſrael under Ahab, who being dead, he returns to the kings of Judah, they being the principal objects of his hiſtory.

Ver. 44. And Jehoſhaphat made peace with the king of Iſrael.] With Ahab firſt, and then with his ſon. This is repreſented as a blemiſh in his government, and proved very fatal in its conſequence to the poſterity of Jehoſhaphat.

Ver. 47. There was no king in Edom: a deputy was king.] The kings of Judah deputed a vice-roy to govern the Edomites; which form of adminiſtration continued from the days of David, who began this dominion over them. 2 Sam. viii. 14. unto thoſe of Jehoſhophat, whoſe ſon loſt this authority, 2 Kings viii. 21.

Ver. 48. Jehoſhaphat made ſhips of Tarſhiſh to go to Ophir for Gold.] They are called Ships of Tarſhiſh from their form, being built after the model of thoſe veſſels which traded to that place. But they went not; for the ſhips were broken at Ezion-geber. See our annotation on chap. ix. 26.

Ver. 49. Then ſaid Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab unto Jehoſhaphat, let my ſervants go with thy ſervants in the ſhips; but Jehoſhaphat would not.] Jehoſhaphat had contracted an amity with this king of Iſrael, and engaged himſelf ſo far, as to let him join with him in his navy, 2 Chron. xx. 35, &c. But being better inſtructed by his ill ſucceſs, and by the reproof of a prophet, he would not continue his league with him, nor ſuffer any of the ſhips of Iſrael to mix with his own.

This good prince died in the 60th year of his age, after he had reigned 25 years; and was ſucceeded by his ſon Jehoram. His hiſtory is ſaid to have been written by the prophet Jehu, 2 Chron. xx. 34, which book ſeems to have been loſt, with many others, at the captivity.

Ver. 51. Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, the ſeventeenth year of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah.] See the annotation on chap. xxi, 29.

——— And reigned two years over Iſrael.] Not two compleat years, as appears from 2 Kings iii. 1. for he died before the ſecond year was fully expired. This prince ſucceeded his father not only in the kingdom, but likewiſe in the idolatry which had been introduced by his mother Jezebel; and though the authority and example of parents is to be diſregarded, when it oppoſes the will and word of God; yet this prince was altogether as impious as his father, whoſe calamities and fatal end made no impreſſions upon him, and he was as little affected by the dreadful threatenings which Elijah had denounced againſt his mother, and the whole family.

Critical and Explanatory ANNOTATIONS

ON THE

SECOND BOOK of the KINGS,

Commonly called the FOURTH BOOK of the K I N G S.

The ARGUMENT.

This ſecond book of the Kings comprehends the hiſtory of two hundred and twenty ſeven years; from the death of Jehoſhaphat, and the inauguration of Jehoram, to the beginning of the reign of Evilmerodach king of Babylon, who delivered Jechoniah out of priſon. We have here a long ſucceſſion of wicked princes in the kingdom of Iſrael; namely, Ahaziah, and Jehoram, the ſons of Ahab; Jehu, Jehoahaz, Joaſh, Jeroboam, Zachariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, Pekah, Hoſea the ſon of Elah, in whoſe reign Samaria was taken by Shalmaneſer, and the ten tribes were carried captive into Aſſyria. Theſe princes, and their ſubjects, continued obſtinately wedded to their idolatrous worſhip; tho' they were frequently invited to repentance by God, who to that end employed the miniſtration of his prophets, as well as ſevere judgments and chaſtiſements. And, as a fatal preſage of their final ruin, he ſuffered Tiglath-pileſer to lead away the whole tribe of Naphtali captive into Aſſyria; yet all this had no good effect upon them.

True it is, that God always reſerved among them a ſmall number, according to the election of grace; to which end the holy ſchools and colleges of the prophets were very conducive. But becauſe the generality of theſe apoſtate Iſraelites perſevered in their impiety and defection, the Lord, in his juſt judgment, at laſt wholly rejected and caſt them off. For Shalmaneſer, king of Aſſyria, having invaded the land of Iſrael with a vaſt army, took Samaria after a ſiege of three years, and carried all the Iſraelites captive into his own country; which was the final cataſtrophe of the kingdom of Iſrael, after it had been divided from that of Judah for the ſpace of two hundred and fifty-four years. This fatal event happened in the ſixth year of Hezekiah, and in the ninth of Hoſea. A great number of the Iſraelites, however, eſcaped with their lives, ſome into Egypt, and many more into the kingdom of Judah, where they weaned themſelves, by degrees, from their former idolatries and rebellion, and became ſubjects to Hezekiah and his ſucceſſors. On the other hand, the Aſſyrians (Joſephus ſays Shalmaneſer, but it was more probably his ſucceſſor,) ſent colonies from ſeveral of their provinces, but chiefly from Cuthah, to re-people the land of Iſrael, from whence theſe new inhabitants came to be called Cutheans.

The kingdom of Judah alſo ended not very long after, in much the ſame manner as the kingdom of Iſrael. For tho' the Jews had the true worſhip of God generally continued amongſt them, eſpecially during the reigns of their religious kings, and the concurring adminiſtration of holy high prieſts, who diligently employed their authority in the extinction of idolatry, and the reformation and re-eſtabliſhment of Divine Worſhip, when at any time it had ſuffered any intermiſſion or corruption; yet the people had a ſtrange propenſity, either to blend ſuperſtition with the pure ſervice of God,

God, or to be very remiſs and neglectful in their attendance upon it. And tho' the ſerious exhortations, and earneſt admonitions of the prophets, as well as the frequent judgments that were inflicted on them, in order to recal them to repentance, were not wanting, yet the abominable mixtures and innovations introduced by them into their worſhip, became ſo great and general, together with the depravation of their manners, that God at length delivered this corrupt and incorrigible people into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, who laid their country waſte, took the city of Jeruſalem, burnt the temple, and carried the Jews captive into Chaldæa.

This was the dreadful end of that glorious kingdom, and of all the Iſraelitiſh monarchy, after it had ſtood four hundred ſixty-eight years from the time that David began to reign over it; three hundred eighty-eight years from the revolt of the ten tribes from it; and one hundred thirty-four years from the exciſion of the Iſraelitiſh commonwealth; and had continued in the ſunſhine of the Divine Protection, which nothing could have eclipſed, but their almoſt conſtant and horrid ingratitude to God, and their invincible propenſity to imitate the ſuperſtitions and idolatry of other nations.

And yet God was pleaſed ſo to moderate his wrath againſt this unthankful people, that, notwithſtanding all their provocations and rebellions, he ſtill continued faithful and conſtant to his gracious word and promiſe, and, by his fatherly goodneſs, always kept up amongſt them an elect people, and preſerved the remains of the family of David, (from whence the Divine Meſſiah was to come, according to the fleſh) until the time of his appearing in the world to accompliſh the great and admirable work of man's redemption.

CHAP. I.

1 Moab rebelleth. 2 Ahaziah, ſending to Baalzebub, hath his judgment by Elijah. 5 Elijah twice bringeth fire from heaven, upon them whom Ahaziah ſent to apprehend him. 13 He pitieth the third captain, and encouraged by an Angel, telleth the king of his death. 17 Jehoram ſucceedeth Ahaziah.

THEN Moab rebelled againſt Iſrael, after the death of Ahab.

2 And Ahaziah fell down through a latteſs in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and was ſick: and he ſent meſſengers, and ſaid unto them, Go enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, whether I ſhall recover of this diſeaſe.

3 But the angel of the LORD ſaid to Elijah the Tiſhbite, Ariſe, go up to meet the meſſengers of the king of Samaria, and ſay unto them, Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

4 Now therefore thus ſaith the LORD, Thou ſhalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but ſhalt ſurely die. And Elijah departed.

5 ¶ And when the meſſengers turned back unto him, he ſaid unto them, Why are ye now turned back?

6 And they ſaid unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and ſaid unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that ſent you, and ſay unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, Is it not becauſe there is not a God in Iſrael, that thou ſendeſt to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? therefore thou ſhalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but ſhalt ſurely die.

7 And he ſaid unto them, What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you theſe words?

8 And they anſwered him, He was an hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loyns. And he ſaid, It is Elijah the Tiſhbite.

9 Then the king ſent unto him a captain of fifty, with his fifty: and he went up to him (and behold, he ſat on the top of an hill) and he ſpake unto him, Thou man of God, the king hath ſaid, Come down.

10 And Elijah anſwered and ſaid to the captain of fifty, If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and conſume thee, and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, and conſumed him and his fifty.

11 Again alſo he ſent unto him another captain of fifty, with his fifty: and he anſwered and ſaid unto him, O man of God, thus hath the king ſaid, Come down quickly.

12 And Elijah anſwered and ſaid unto them, them, If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and conſume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven, and conſumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And he ſent again a captain of the third fifty, with his fifty: and the third captain of fifty went up, and came and fell on his knees before Elijah, and beſought him, and ſaid unto him, Oh man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of theſe fifty thy ſervants be precious in thy ſight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties, with their fifties: therefore let my life now be precious in thy ſight.

15 And the angel of the LORD ſaid unto Elijah, Go down with him, be not afraid of him. And he aroſe, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, Foraſmuch as thou haſt ſent meſſengers to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron (is it not becauſe there is no God in Iſrael to enquire of his word?) therefore thou ſhalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but ſhalt ſurely die.

17 ¶ So he died, according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had ſpoken: and Jehoram reigned in his ſtead, in the ſecond year of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah; becauſe he had no ſon.

18 Now the reſt of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

Ver. 1. And Moab rebelled againſt Iſrael, after the death of Ahab.] The Moabites had ſuſtained great loſſes in the war which king Saul carried on againſt them, 1 Sam. xiv. 47 and the enmity which ſubſiſted between him and this nation, probably induced David, when perſecuted by that prince, to ask the king of Moab's protection for his parents, till his affairs ſhould be in a better poſture, 1 Sam. xxii. 3, 4. which the Moabite readily granted, and treated them with great hoſpitality, while David lay concealed in the cave of Adduſſam. However, when he came to the crown, the Moabites entered into a confederacy againſt him, with ſeveral of the neighbouring nations, Pſalm lxxxiii. 5, 6. &c. whereupon he declared war againſt them; and having obtained a ſignal victory, put two thirds of them to the ſword, and made the reſt his vaſſals and tributaries.

From this time they continued ſubject to Solomon and Rehoboam, till the revolt of the ten tribes; upon which they became tributaries to the kings of Iſrael, tho' they had all along kings of their own, who were little better than viceroys. One of them, whoſe name was Meſha, paid Ahab a yearly tribute of 100,000 lambs, and as many weathers, with the wool; his riches conſiſting chiefly in ſheep, chap. iii. 4. But when Ahab was dead, he rebelled againſt his ſon Ahaziah, whoſe ſhort reign would not permit him to form any attempt, in order to reduce him. For in the ſecond year after he came to the crown, he had the misfortune to fall through a latteis in his dining-room, ver. 2. by which latteis the Jews underſtand ſome net-work in that apartment, which being decayed, and the king leaning upon it, it fell down and drew him after it; by which caſualty he received ſo much hurt that his life was deſpaired of. In this extremity, inſtead of addreſſing his prayer for relief to the true God, who alone could ſhew him mercy, he was ſo impious as to ſend meſſengers to Baal-zebub, the god of Ekron, in order to conſult him with reſpect to his recovery, ver. 2.

Baal-zebub, or, Beelze bub, or as he is often called in Greek and Latin, Beel-zebut, or Beel-zebul, had a celebrated temple and oracle at Ekron, a powerful city and government of the Philiſtines, ſituated very near the Mediterranean, between Aſhdod and Jamnia. Some commentators will have it, that Beel-zebub is not the true name of this Philiſtine deity, but Bel-ſamin, which ſignifies the God of heaven, and they add, that the Hebrews called him, in deriſion, Beel-zebub, the Lord of flies, or Lord fly; or Beel zebul, the Lord of ordure; becauſe he defended people from the flies, and was worſhipped by his votaries in the ſame manner as the Eleans adored Jupiter, the driver away of flies, under which quality the Romans likewiſe paid their homage to him. Laſtly, others believe that the fly or beetle, and the figure of this inſect was adored. Pliny aſſures us, that the Egyptians, who were near neighbours to the Philiſtines, paid divine honours to the beetle. (Plin. lib. 30. c. 11.) And it is obſerved, that there are beetles in the picture of Iſis, on which Pignorius hath made a comment. The author of the book of Wiſdom, having ſaid that God having ſent waſps to deſtroy the Canaanites and Ammonites by little and little. [Wiſd. xii. 8.] adds, ver. 24, that God made thoſe very creatures to which they paid divine honours, the inſtruments of their puniſhment.

We think upon the whole, that Beel zebub was not a mock appellation beſtowed by the Jews upon this idol of the Philiſtines; for they were generally more inclinable to worſhip, than they were to deride the falſe gods of the nations around them; and it is more rationally ſuppoſed, that Beel-zebub was ſo ſtiled by his votaries, as Hercules Apomyos, and others were among the Heathens, from driving away flies; and he probably may have been the parent of the other pagan deities, who are famed for the ſame pretended power. This ſeems to be the truth of the matter; for Ahaziah in his ſickneſs, would never have ſent to conſult him under that name, if it had been expreſſive of any opprobrious and degrading idea. How, or under what form, he was repreſented is uncertain. Some place him on a throne, and attire him like a king; others paint him as a fly, a very wide difference. It however appears, that he became an oracle in the higheſt repute for veracity and omniſcience; that he had prieſts of his own; and, in the middle times at leaſt, was much ſought after by thoſe who were anxious about futurity, or ſolicitous concerning other hidden matters.

While the meſſengers of Ahaziah were on their journey, in order to execute their impious commiſſion, God commanded Elijah to meet them, and to expoſtulate with them in the following manner: "Is it not becauſe there is "not a God in Iſrael, that ye go to enquire of Baalze-"bub the God of Ekron?" ver. 3. There are two negatives in the Hebrew text which greatly ſtrengthen the ſenſe: Is it not becauſe there is no God, none in Iſrael? That is, do you not plainly declare by your conduct, that there is no God, none at all, in Iſrael? That he knows nothing, and is unable to do any thing; which makes you ſend to Ekron, as if a more knowing and mighty, if not the only God reſided there.

The meſſengers, at theſe words, ſtood ſilent and confounded before the venerable prophet; conſcious without doubt, that the part they had taken upon them was altogether indefenſible: And we may ſuppoſe their confuſion was not a little increaſed, when Elijah declared to them in the name of the Lord, that their maſter ſhould die in a ſhort time. The oracle of Ekron would, in all probability, have flattered that prince, or at leaſt have deluded him with the obſcurity of its anſwer: But the oracles of the true God are always infallible, and free from ambiguity; for he alone is omniſcient, and can never err.

The meſſengers, inſtead of proceeding on their journey to Ekron, came back to the king, who was ſurpriſed at their ſudden return; but when he heard the fatal prediction which had been denounced againſt him, he was ſo far from being touched with the leaſt remorſe for the crime he had committed, that he fell into a very intemperate rage againſt the man of God, who had thus threatened him, and ordered the meſſengers to deſcribe his perſon, that he might execute his vengeance upon him. They then told him that the prophet was an hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins, ver. 8. Some think, he is ſaid to be an hairy man, becauſe the hair of his head and beard was long, like that of the Greek philoſophers: but it is more probable, that he was thus repreſented, becauſe he was clad with an hairy garment, with which the prophets were uſually habited. Iſaiah xx. 2. Zechar. xiii. 4. Heb. xi. 37. This was the ſimpleſt and moſt ancient habit; and therefore the heroes of antiquity are ſaid to have been cloathed in the skins of lions, tigers, and bears. And perhaps by this rude dreſs the prophets intended to expreſs their deep affliction, for the deplorable condition the Iſraelites were in, when they came to call them to repentance. John the Baptiſt was likewiſe cloathed in the ſame manner, Matth. iii. 4. as the repreſentative of Elijah, in whoſe ſpirit and power he came.

Ahaziah knew by this deſcription, that Elijah was the prophet who had pronounced the fatal ſentence of death upon him; but inſtead of humbling himſelf before God, and making due preparations for his approaching change, he in a rage ordered a captain of fifty men to go with his troop, and ſeize the man of God. The officer, who was too much a courtier to diſobey any unjuſt command, advanced with his men, in order to execute his commiſſion, and found the prophet ſitting on the top of a hill. He then ſpoke to him in a haughty tone, calling him man of God, in deriſion, and commanding him in the king's name to come down, and ſurrender himſelf into his hands. Elijah, who was ſenſible that this officer had called him man of God, in meer mockery to his perſon and office, made him this reſolute anſwer: "If I be a man of God, then let fire come down from heaven, and conſume thee and thy fifty". ver. 10. which is as much as if he had ſaid, If I be then a man of God, as I really am, notwithſtanding thy ironical and inſulting language, the dignity of my office ſhall be vindicated by fire from heaven, which ſhall conſume thee and the troops thou leadeſt. At the ſame inſtant the avenging flame burſt from the clouds, and laid the commander and his men dead on the ſpot. The king was ſoon informed of what had happened, and became more outrageous than ever; for paſſion never reaſons, and only accumulates one extravagancy on another. Amidſt his thoughtleſs fury he ſent another officer, with the ſame number of men as had accompanied the former, and with the ſame vain orders. The leader of this band was more inſolent than the firſt: For he commanded the prophet to come down immediately, and not to make him ſtay, or think to dally with him; and this ſeems to have been the voice of the whole company, for Elijah directs his anſwer to them all, and not to the officer, as he had done before. Here again the Deity interpoſed for the preſervation of his ſervant, and the whole band was immediately blaſted and ſtruck dead, by a ſecond fire from heaven. Two ſuch dreadful inſtances of the Divine Vengeance, one would think, were ſufficient to have humbled the pride of Ahaziah: but ſuch was his impious barbarity and preſumption, that he made no account of the lives of his ſubjects, and reſolved to contend once more with the Almighty. A third officer was diſpatched by him, at the head of the ſame number of men as had already been twice deſtroyed; but as this perſon had ſufficient reaſon to be ſenſible of the danger to which he was expoſed by his infatuated prince, he approached the prophet with a trembling mein, proſtrated himſelf in the duſt, and intreated him to ſpare his life, and likewiſe the lives of his ſoldiers. God then ordered Elijah to go down with this Officer, and not to be afraid of him; and the prophet immediately obeyed the Divine mandate, without the leaſt heſitation; well knowing, that the Almighty Being in whom he truſted, would protect him from the wrath of the king, and the malice of Jezebel. He therefore preſented himſelf before Ahaziah, and boldly denounced to him the ſentence of his death. There undoubtedly was more diſcourſe between them; but the concluſion of all was, that the ſentence which God had pronounced againſt this prince was irreverſible. He accordingly died ſoon after, and went to render an account of his paſt life to the ſupreme judge of monarchs.

He was ſucceeded on the throne by his brother Jehoram, who, as the Sacred Hiſtorian informs us, "reigned "in his ſtead, in the ſecond year of Jehoram the ſon of "Jehoſhaphat king of Judah." Jehoſhaphat declared his ſon king in his own life time, and he reigned with him ſeven years. The occaſion of which is intimated in 2 Chron. xxi. 3. "He gave the kingdom to Jehoram, "becauſe he was the firſt born", and gave gifts to the reſt of his ſons. Who being many, began to contend about the ſucceſſion to the kingdom. But as this belonged to the firſt born, Jehoſhaphat in order to quiet them, declared Jehoram king, together with himſelf, and he reigned with him ſeven years. When it is ſaid therefore, that Ahab's ſon Jehoram reigned in the ſecond year of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, the Divine Writer means the ſecond year of his reign, in conjunction with his father Jehoſhaphat, who was then living.

CHAP. II.

1 Elijah, taking his leave of Eliſha, with his mantle divideth Jordan. 9 And granting Eliſha his requeſt, is taken up by a fiery chariot into heaven. 12 Eliſha dividing Jordan with Elijah's mantle, is acknowledged his ſucceſſor. 16 The young prophets hardly obtaining leave to ſeek Elijah, could not find him. 19 Eliſha with ſalt, healeth the unwholſome waters. 23 Bears deſtroy the children that mocked Eliſha.

AND it came to paſs when the LORD would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with Eliſha from Gilgal.

2 And Elijah ſaid unto Eliſha, Tarry here, I pray thee: for the LORD hath ſent me to Beth-el. And Eliſha ſaid unto him, As the LORD liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they went down to Beth-el.

3 And the ſons of the prophets that were at Beth-el, came forth to Eliſha, and ſaid unto him, Knoweſt thou that the LORD will take away thy maſter from thy head to day? And he ſaid, Yea, I know it, hold you your peace.

4 And Elijah ſaid unto him, Eliſha, tarry here, I pray thee: for the LORD hath ſent me to Jericho. And he ſaid, As the LORD liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho.

5 And the ſons of the prophets that were at Jericho, came to Eliſha, and ſaid unto him, Knoweſt thou that the LORD will take away thy maſter from thy head to day? And he anſwered, Yea, I know it, hold you your peace.

6 And Elijah ſaid unto him, Tarry, I pray thee, here: for the LORD hath ſent me to Jordan. And he ſaid, As the LORD liveth, liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on.

7 And fifty men of the ſons of the prophets went, and ſtood to view afar off: and they two ſtood by Jordan.

8 And Elijah took his mantle, and wrapt it together, and ſmote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither, ſo that they two went over on dry ground.

9 ¶ And it came to paſs when they were gone over, that Elijah ſaid unto Eliſha, Ask what I ſhall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And Eliſha ſaid, I pray thee, let a double portion of thy ſpirit be upon me.

10 And he ſaid, Thou haſt asked a hard thing: nevertheleſs, if thou ſee me when I am taken from thee, it ſhall be ſo unto thee; but if not, it ſhall not be ſo.

11 And it came to paſs as they ſtill went on, and talked, that behold, there appeared a chariot of fire, and horſes of fire, and parted them both aſunder, and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven.

12 ¶ And Eliſha ſaw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof! And he ſaw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces.

13 He took up alſo the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and ſtood by the bank of Jordan:

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and ſmote the waters, and ſaid, Where is the LORD God of Elijah? And when he alſo had ſmitten the waters, they parted hither and thither: and Eliſha went over.

15 And when the ſons of the prophets which were to view at Jericho, ſaw him, they ſaid, The ſpirit of Elijah doth reſt on Eliſha. And they came to meet him, and bowed themſelves to the ground before him:

16 ¶ And they ſaid unto him, Behold now, there be with thy ſervants fifty ſtrong men, let them go, we pray thee, and ſeek thy maſter: leſt peradventure the ſpirit of the LORD hath taken him up, and caſt him upon ſome mountain, or into ſome valley. And he ſaid, Ye ſhall not ſend.

17 And when they urged him till he was aſhamed, he ſaid, Send. They ſent therefore fifty men; and they ſought three days, but found him not.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho) he ſaid unto them, Did I not ſay unto you, Go not?

19 ¶ And the men of the city ſaid unto Eliſha, Behold, I pray thee, the ſituation of this city is pleaſant, as my lord ſeeth: but the water is naught, and the ground barren.

20 And he ſaid, Bring me a new cruſe, and put ſalt therein, And they brought it to him.

21 And he went forth unto the ſpring of the waters, and caſt the ſalt in there, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the LORD, I have healed theſe waters; there ſhall not be from thence any more death, or barren land.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the ſaying of Eliſha which he ſpake.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and ſaid unto him, Go up, thou bald-head, go up, thou bald-head.

24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and curſed them in the name of the LORD: and there came forth two ſhe-bears out of the wood, and tare forty and two children of them.

25 And he went from thence to mount Carmel, and from thence he returned to Samaria.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs when the Lord would take up Elijah into heaven by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with Eliſha, from Gilgal.] As ſoon as Elijah had propheſied againſt Ahaziah king of Iſrael, he departed from Samaria, and went with Eliſha to Gilgal; a celebrated place, about a league to the weſt of Jordan, and at the ſame diſtance from Jericho; and about twenty-five miles from Samaria. Here the Iſraelites made their firſt encampment, after they entered the land of Canaan; and this was the place where Joſhua erected twelve ſtones, taken out of Jordan, to commemorate their miraculous paſſage over that river. Here alſo Joſhua circumciſed the Iſraelites, kept the firſt paſſover, and ſet up the tabernacle, and the ark of the covenant, which continued in this place many years. As the reproach of Egypt is ſaid by God himſelf, to have been rolled away from the Iſraelites, by their circumciſion in this place; Joſh. v. 9. it accordingly derived its name from that circumſtance; for Gilgal ſignifies rolling.

God now determined, not only to end the faithful labours of his ſervant Elijah, but likewiſe to fix the moſt authentic ſeal to his miniſtry, and to give the Jews an illuſtrious proof of a life after this; and of the glorious rewards he has reſerved for all thoſe whoworſhip him with ſincerity in this world. God undoubtedly imparted his gracious deſign to the prophet, that he might diveſt himſelf of all terreſtrial cares and imperfections, and prepare for his admiſſion into thoſe pure regions which are inhabited by the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect. We may be certain that the ſoul of Elijah was inſpired with the warmeſt gratitude to that God who thus diſtinguiſhed him from other men; but what pen can expreſs the tranſports he conceived, at his approaching removal from a world of tribulation, to the happy manſions of beatitude and immortality! If righteous perſons reflect with pleaſure on their departure from this vale of tears, though their bodies are then to be conſigned to the power of death; how exquiſite was the joy of Elijah, whom God exempted from from all the pangs and dread which accompany the king of terrors!

God revealed his intended aſſumption of Elijah, not only to that prophet, but likewiſe to Eliſha, and the ſons of the prophets. He revealed it to Eliſha, that he might not quit his maſter till he had been the ſpectator of his glorious tranſlation; and that this wonderful event might ſtrengthen his faith, and procure him an abundant meaſure of the prophetic ſpirit. God likewiſe honoured the ſons of the prophets with the fore-knowledge of Elijah's aſſumption, that they might bear teſtimony to it, and prevent the truth of it from being called in queſtion.

By the ſons of the prophets are meant ſcholars, whom the prophets educated, and trained up in religion and piety. God in thoſe very corrupt times, and even in Beth el, where the golden calves were worſhipped, did not wholly forſake the Iſraelites; but continued the Schools of the prophets among them. This was a gracious indication of his love to that apoſtate people, among whom he left prophets to reclaim them from their idolarry. And it is ſtill more remarkable, that prophets of greater excellency for their miracles were continued in Iſrael, than were in Judah; becauſe the former needed them more to convert their hard hearts from the worſhip of idols; and to preſerve the pious perſons who remained among them, from deſerting their religion. The ſons of the prophets ſeem likewiſe to have been ſuch miniſters to the latter, as the Evangeliſts were to the apoſtles; for the prophets ſent them to publiſh their predictions and inſtructions to the people, when they could not go themſelves. And perhaps they taught them the law of God, and explained it to them; of which there was great need in thoſe idolatrous times.

Theſe ſons of the prophets, who were then at Beth-el, came to Eliſha and asked him, if he knew that the Lord would take away his maſter from his head that day? ver. 3. From whence it is evident, that his approaching aſſumption had been revealed to ſome of them. And they alluded to their manner of ſitting in their ſchool, when they told Eliſha that God would take away Elijah from his head. By which they meant, that God would now deprive him of that great prophet's inſtructions. For, the ſcholars ſat below at their maſter's feet, and the maſter above, over their head, when he taught them.

Eliſha, in anſwer to their queſtion, replied, Yea, I know it, hold you your peace, ver. 3. which is as if he had ſaid, I am ſenſible of the loſs I am about to ſuſtain; do not aggravate my grief, therefore, with any unſeaſonable diſcourſe, but ſuffer me to digeſt my ſorrow, and prepare myſelf for ſo great a ſtroke. He might likewiſe be unwilling Elijah ſhould know that he was not unacquainted with God's determination concerning him, and that might be another reaſon for his impoſing ſilence on the ſons of the prophets.

Elijah might perhaps be ſenſible, that God had informed Eliſha that he would ſoon be ſeparated from his maſter; and might therefore have an inclination to try whether Eliſha fully credited what had been told him. With this view he deſired him to continue where he then was, adding, that the Lord had ſent him to Beth-el, ver. 2. Eliſha then aſſured him in the moſt ſolemn manner, that he was determined not to forſake him, and he afterward expreſſed himſelf to the ſame effect, when Elijah intreated him to tarry firſt at Beth-el, alledging, that the Lord had ſent him to Jericho, ver. 4. and then at Jericho, alledging, that the Lord had ſent him to Jordan, ver. 6.

There was another ſchool of the prophets at Jericho, and they asked Eliſha the ſame queſtion with relation to his maſter, as had been put to him by the ſons of the prophets at Beth-el, and he returned them the ſame anſwer as he had made to theſe. They were now confident that the time of Elijah's aſſumption drew near, and were deſirous to ſee the manner of it; upon which fifty of theſe ſons of the prophets went and ſtood to view afar off, ver. 7. for they were not permitted to accompany Elijah to the place where he was taken up to Heaven, as Elijah did; and had only a diſtant view of that wonderful event; but however, it was ſuch a view as made them competent witneſſes to the truth of it.

Elijah, when he arrived at the bank of Jordan, in company with Eliſha, ſmote the waters of that river with his mantle, which he had wrapped together for that purpoſe; and the ſtream was immediately divided in ſuch a manner, that both he and his diſciple went over on dry ground, ver. 8. This ſurpriſing miracle might juſtly be conſidered by Eliſha, and all the diſtant ſpectators, as a noble introduction to the other wonders God was now preparing to operate.

Elijah being tenderly affected to his faithful diſciple, and having reaſon to believe that God, who was now on the point of conveying him in a glorious manner from this earth, would grant any reaſonable requeſt he ſhould then offer up to his Divine Majeſty; addreſſed himſelf to Eliſha and ſaid, "Ask what I ſhall do for thee, before "I be taken from thee." ver. 9. Upon which Eliſha, who was fully ſenſible of the ſolid advantages which ought to have the preference in his mind, and were infinitely ſuperior to all the acquiſitions which carnal minds are ſo anxious to enjoy, replied in a fervent tone, "Let, I pray "thee a double portion of thy Spirit be upon me." ver. 9.

Theſe words have been variouſly explained by interpreters. St. Ambroſe, together with St. Jerom, St. Auſtin and St. Gregory, imagine that Eliſha was deſirous of poſſeſſing as much more of the prophetic gifts, as Elijah himſelf had enjoy'd. This likewiſe is the opinion of the late Mr. Le Clerc, but neither he, nor the reverend fathers we have mentioned, have any authority from the Sacred Text for ſuch a ſuppoſition. The literal tranſlation of the words in the Hebrew is this; Let I pray thee, the mouth (that is the portion) of two in thy ſpirit be upon me. Eliſha therefore did not ask for a double quantity, but only for a double portion of his maſter's ſpirit; and by this form of ſpeech he alluded to the right of primogeniture, in the diviſion of eſtates, and repreſented himſelf as the eldeſt ſon of Eliſha, in a prophetic ſenſe. As the Moſaic law therefore allowed even an eldeſt ſon who was hated by his father, a portion of the patrimony double to that of the reſt of the children, Deut. xxi 17. The diſciple of Elijah, to whom he had always been ſo dear, might certainly make this requeſt, without any imputation of arrogance or vanity; and had a right, as the eldeſt ſon of the prophets, to deſire that his portion of his maſter's ſpirit might exceed that of his younger brethren the prophets, in a double quantity.

The reply which Elijah made to his diſciple was this; "Thou haſt asked a hard thing: Nevertheleſs, if thou ſee "me when I am taken from thee, it ſhall be ſo unto thee; "but if not, it ſhall not be ſo." ver. 10. It was not only hard, but even impoſſible, for Elijah to infuſe his prophetic accompliſhments into any other man; and they can be imparted by none but that Divine Being who is their immaculate and inexhauſtible ſource. Elijah however, had ſo much confidence in the good will of that God to whom he intended to addreſs his prayers in favour of Eliſha, that he promiſed him the accompliſhment of his requeſt, provided he ſhould happen to be the ſpectator of his aſſumption. A condition of this nature was ſufficient to make Eliſha very attentive to that great event, that he might enjoy the gifts that were to reſult from his beholding it, and that he might be qualified to relate the particulars of it to others, in the cleareſt manner.

While theſe two illuſtrious prophets were walking together, and diſcourſing, in all probability, of the happy ſtate to which Elijah was ſoon to be tranſferred, they were ſuddenly parted from each other by a chariot of fire, drawn by horſes formed out of the ſame element. Elijah mounted the miraculous chariot, and was tranſported to heaven in a whirlwind, whoſe impetuoſity was governed by a band of angels. This wonderful and glorious aſſumption of God's prophet, wrought ſo ſtrong upon the imagination of St. Chryſoſtom, that he could not forbear expreſſing his aſtoniſhment in the following exclamations: "Who was the workman that formed this miraculous "carr? In what region were the horſes ſuſtained? Who "conducted them to Elijah, and directed them in their "aerial paſſage? On what track did they reſt their feet? "And how could the charioteer ſupport himſelf in ſo ſin-"gular an attitude?" The ſame father asks a number of other queſtions altogether as friyolous as theſe; and if all the homilies of that great orator had been of the ſame caſt with this, which contains nothing more than a poetical rhapſody on the aſſumption of Elijah, he never would have merited the epithet of Chryſoſtom, or the mouth of gold.

While

While God was thus granting to his prophet a more auguſt and pompous triumph, than was ever enjoyed by the greateſt monarchs on earth, Eliſha beheld the rapidity with which he aſcended to Heaven, and cried out, My father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof, ver. 12. This is an alluſion to what Eliſha then beheld, and he very properly compares Elijah to chariot and horſemen of which the Iſraelites were unprovided in their armies; but the want of which would have been ſufficiently compenſated to them by the counſels and prayers of that great prophet, in conſequence of which they might have obtained very ſignal victories, if they would have been obedient to his word.

As ſoon as the rapid aſſent of Elijah had withdrawn him from the view of his diſciple, the latter was ſo afflicted at his ſeparation from ſo excellent a maſter, that he rent the habit he wore, and would have been inconſolable, if he had not found the mantle of Elijah, which dropped from him as he went up to heaven, in token that the Divine ſpirit ſhould, according to his promiſe, be imparted to his faithful ſervant in that portion he had deſired.

Eliſha having taken up his maſter's mantle, advanced to the bank of Jordan, and ſmote the waters which came together again, after he and Elijah had paſſed over, he at the ſame time cried out Where is the Lord God of Elijah? ver. 14. That is, let him vouchſafe to ſhew his preſence with me, and his power, as he did with Elijah. But our tranſlators have not exactly rendered this paſſage, two words being left out; namely Aph-hu, which the LXX have formed into ἀφφὼ which is nothing more than a barbarous and unintelligible ſound. The Hebrew words Aph-hu, are rendered in the Chaldee, receive my petition; but without any reaſon, theſe words carrying in them nothing of that ſignification. The beſt account of them is given by Friſchmuthus, in a ſhort diſſertation De Origine & Proſapia Eliæ. Where he obſerves, that Eliſha having asked this queſtion, Where is the Lord God of Elijah? anſwers himſelf in theſe words, Aph-hu, Etiam ille adhuc ſupereſt; Yea, he is yet in being. That is, tho' Elijah be not here, yet his God is: The ſervant indeed is wanting, but not the Lord. The bleſſed God is ſtill preſent and will ſupply his place.

The moment Eliſha had uttered theſe words, the waters of Jordan ſhrunk back a ſecond time, and opened a paſſage to the prophet, who then paſſed over to the fifty ſons of the prophets, who had viewed the prodigy of Elijah's aſſumption at a diſtance; and they now acknowledged the infuſion of his ſpirit into his ſucceſſor, by bowing themſelves with the utmoſt reverence before him, as being now conſtituted the father of the prophets. They, however, had but an imperfect notice of what God intended, when they asked Eliſha if he knew the Lord would take his maſter from him? ver. 5 For they now imagined he might be only taken away for a time; for which reaſon they intreated Eliſha to permit them to ſeek his maſter, that they might be ſatisfied whether the Spirit of the Lord had taken him up, and caſt him upon ſome mountain, or into ſome valley, ver. 16. They thought, that if his ſpirit were really taken up into heaven, his body might poſſibly be thrown upon one of the neighbouring mountains, or into ſome valley, and therefore they were deſirous to find it, that they might render to it all the honours that were due to the remains of ſo illuſtrious a man. Eliſha endeavoured to diſſuade them from their deſign; upon which they renewed their importunities till he was aſhamed, and found himſelf obliged to conſent to their requeſt, ver 17. For he was afraid they would think he wanted love to his maſter, or was ſo ambitious of ſucceeding to his office and authority, that he was unwilling they ſhould ſearch after him, leſt they ſhould happen to find him alive. The ſons of the prophets then diſperſed themſelves over the country for the ſpace of three days, in queſt of Elijah; but tho' their cares were unavailing with regard to that great prophet, who was now diveſted of all human infirmities, and out of the reach of every danger; yet they were uſeful to thoſe who ſought after him, ſince by theſe means they were convinced, that Elijah had been tranſlated from this earth like another Enoch.

We think it will now be proper for us to conſider a few queſtions that have been ſtarted with reſpect to Elijah. It is asked, First, Into what place was he conveyed upon his aſſumption? The anſwer to this, we think, is very obvious, ſince the Inſpired Writer expreſly declares, that he went up by a whirlwind into heaven, ver. 11 by which laſt word, the Scripture means the place where God manifeſts himſelf in his glory to theſe numberleſs myriads of happy ſpirits who ſurround his radiant throne, and are always ready to execute his Sacred Commands. Is it not natural to believe, that ſo zealous a Saint as Elijah, whom God himſelf diſtinguiſhed by ſo many illuſtrious miracles, and exempted him from that mortality to which all the other ſons of Adam muſt ſubmit; ſhould be introduced into the celeſtial court of his ſovereign maſter, there to enjoy his Sacred Preſence, to celebrate his praiſes for ever, and to taſte the ſtreams of his felicity in their pureſt ſource?

But as natural as this account may ſeem, it is certain that ſeveral Jews and Chriſtians have entertained a different opinion; to which they perhaps were influenced by an affectation of ſingularity. Among the former, there are ſome who by the word heaven, underſtand the upper region of the air; in which they pretend, tho' in a very unphiloſophic manner, that the body and garments of Elijah were conſumed by the orbit of fire, with which their imaginations have incloſed that region. Others affirm, that heaven ſignifies nothing more than the boſom of Abraham; while a third claſs, among whom is R Sam Laniado, believe, that this great prophet was conveyed into the garden of Eden; where he is now ſeated under the tree of life, and that he employs his time in recording the good actions of thoſe who have ſanctified the Sabbath-day.

The Chriſtian doctors have likewiſe entertained various opinions on this point. Some of them believe that Elijah was wafted into the garden of Eden, where he is to continue with Enoch, till the laſt judgment. This opinion chiefly prevails among the clergy of the Romiſh church, and it is certainly agreeable to the ſentiments of ſome of the ancient fathers, if their authority be of any weight in this particular. Father Calmet, however, declares, "That "the church has never fixed the place where theſe two "holy men (namely, Enoch and Elijah) now are," and he adds, that "St. Auſtin, together with St. Chryſoſtom, "and Theodoret, never approved the liberty taken by "thoſe who would decide ſuch points in which the Scrip-"ture itſelf is ſilent." As to the Proteſtant Divines, the generality of them declare, with the Sacred Hiſtorian, that Elijah was conveyed to heaven, without thinking themſelves obliged to ſpecify the particular part of the univerſe which comprehends this happy manſion of eternal joy.

The ſecond queſtion relates to the letter which Elijah is ſuppoſed by many commentators to have ſent, ſeveral years after his aſſumption, to Jehoram, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah. But this fact ſhall be fully conſidered by us, in our Annotations on the twenty-firſt chapter of the ſecond book of Chronicles, where it is related at large.

The third enquiry relates to the Carmelites, who pretend that their order was inſtituted by Elijah, and his diſciple Eliſha. Among other authorities for their claim, they cite the bulls of ſeveral popes, and particularly that of Sixtus IV. in the year 1477. the expreſſions of which greatly favour the pretenſions of the Carmelites. But, notwithſtanding theſe boaſted authorities, moſt of the Romiſh Writers treat the pretenſions of thoſe fathers, as mere chimera's, and affirm, that this order was not founded till the twelfth century and about the year 1181. "Almeric, biſhop of Antioch, ſays Father Thomaſſin, "exerciſed the function of legate of the holy ſee, in the "eaſt, and there gave occaſion to the commencement of "the order of the Carmelites, by inviting to mount Car-"mel, all the weſtern Chriſtians who were diſpoſed to "lead a ſolitary life in the holy land," Diſcipline de l'Egliſe, tom. 1. col. 184. "The order of the Carmelites, "(ſays the learned Dupin) which was inſtituted about the "year 1121" (he ſhould have ſaid in the year 1181) "was regulated in the year 1199, by Albert, patriarch "of Jeruſalem, and to the approbation of Honorus III." Abrege de l'Hiſtoire eccl. tom. 3. p. 385. Father Papebroch, in his account of the life of this Albert, ridicules the pretenſions of the Carmelites; and, as a proof that this order was not founded till the twelfth century, he cites John Phocas, who declares, in his travels into the Holy Land, in the year 1185, that the grotto of Elijah was ſtill to be ſeen in mount Carmel; and that ſome years were then paſt, ſince a Calabrian monk, cloathed in the habit of a prieſt, and rendered venerable by his white locks, being come to that mountain, in conſequence of a revelation he had received from the prophet Elijah, dug a ſmall trench round a ſpot of ground, where the remains of a monaſtery were ſtill viſible; and having built a tower and a little church in that ſituation, he lived in the incloſure with ten religious perſons. In a word, the novelty of the Carmelite Order was a truth ſo well eſtabliſhed, that John the fat, one of the generals of that Order, and John Paleonydor, a religious man of the ſame Order, have made no ſcruple to acknowledge it, Heliot. Hiſt. des Ordres, tom. 1. p. 284. And yet there was in the laſt century ſo warm a diſpute on this ſubject, between the Carmelites and the Flemiſh jeſuits, who compiled the acts of the Saints, that Pope Innocent XII. was obliged to iſſue out a bull to impoſe a perpetual ſilence, with reſpect to the queſtion, concerning the primitive inſtitution of the order of the Carmelites, by Elijah, and his diſciple Eliſha. This bull is dated the 20th of November 1698. Theſe particulars are ſufficient to expoſe the vanity of the Carmelite fathers in their pretenſions to an eſtabliſhment by Elijah and Eliſha, and to a regular ſucceſſion of their Order from thoſe great and venerable prophets.

The laſt queſtion relates to the return of Elijah, which the Jews have diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts, the one invicible, the other apparent and illuſtrious. They affirm, for inſtance, that this prophet is preſent, in an inviſible manner, at the circumciſion of a child; and they believe this privilege was granted to him by God, becauſe his mortification to ſee this ſeal of the covenant between God and his people, diſregarded, cauſed him to retire into the deſert. In conſequence of this opinion, the Jews, when they circumciſe a child, are careful to ſet a chair in the place where the operation is to be performed; and they diſtinguiſh that chair by crying with a loud voice, This is the chair of Elias, Buxt. Synagoga, cap. 4. For they are perſuaded, that ſhould they neglect to invite him in this manner, he would not be preſent at the circumciſion; and they never remove his chair till three days after the ceremonial.

But beſide this inviſible return of that prophet, they believe he will appear in a ſenſible manner, before their expected Meſſiah manifeſts himſelf to the world. This opinion prevailed among them even in the time of our bleſſed Saviour, when the Sanhedrin ſent to enquire of John the Baptiſt, whether he were Elias? John i. 21.

It is not at all ſurpriſing that this opinion ſhould be entertained by the Jews, who pay no regard to the comment made by Jeſus Chriſt, on theſe words of the prophet Malachi; Behold, I will ſend you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord, Malachi iv. 5. But it has been thought ſtrange, that ſeveral Chriſtians ſhould ſtill expect the perſonal appearance of Elijah, to oppoſe antichriſt, ſince that appearance is ſuppoſed by others to have been accompliſhed in the perſon of John the Baptiſt, who, they ſay, was inſpired by the ſpirit of that prophet. But this celebrated point ſhall be treated by us at large, in our Annotations on that verſe in Malachi, and likewiſe on thoſe paſſages in the Revelations, where the two witneſſes are introduced.

The Jews repreſent Elijah as the author of an Apocalypſe, and declare that he propheſied, that the duration of the world would comprehend the ſpace of ſix thouſand years; two thouſand of which had elapſed before the promulgation of the law; two thouſand more were to be the extent of the legal diſpenſation; and the laſt two thouſand were to be coincident with the reign of the Meſſiah. But we are apt to think, that were Elijah now on earth, he would diſclaim both the Apocalypſe and the prediction.

The Mahommedans relate, that one Kheder, or Khizin, general of Alexander's troops, not Alexander the Great; but one more ancient of that name, had the good fortune to find the fountain of life, which Alexander had long ſought for in vain. Kheder drank large draughts of it and ſo became immortal. He is called Kheder, which ſignifies verdant, becauſe from that time, he enjoyed a flouriſhing and immortal life. Kheder, according to them, is Elijah, whom they repreſent as living in a delicious garden, where the fountain of life flows, and the tree of life is to be found; by the help whereof his immortality is preſerved. There, ſay they, it is, that he expects the ſecond coming of Jeſus Chriſt, at which time Elijah is to appear once more in the world. [D'Herbelot Biblioth. Orient. p. 491.]

The Magi of Perſia pretended, that their maſter Zoroaſtres, was one of the prophet Elijah's diſciples; at leaſt, that their anceſtors were inſtructed by the diſciples of the two prophet's Elijah, and Eliſha. This fiction is founded on Elijah's procuring fire to fall from Heaven, and his being carried away in a chariot of flame: The diſciples of Zoroaſtres eſteeming this element as the principal object of their worſhip.

Ver. 19. And the men of the city ſaid unto Eliſha, Behold, I pray thee, the ſituation of this city is pleaſant, as my Lord ſeeth; But the water is naught and the ground barren] When Eliſha came to Jericho, the inhabitants told him, that the ſituation of their city was very agreeable, but their water was bitter, and their land barren. He then ordered them to bring him a new cruſe which had never been uſed on any occaſion, together with a quantity of ſalt; that there might not be any ſuſpicion of fraud, and that there ſhould be no pretence for aſcribing the efficacy of his intended operation, to any thing which had been in the cruſe before; but merely to the miraculous power of God. The Jews ſay, and juſtly too, that his putting ſalt into the cruſe makes this a miracle in a miracle, becauſe ſalt naturally makes water leſs potable, and ground more barren. Elijah then went into the valley of Jericho and caſt the ſalt into the rivulet which flowed through it; declaring at the ſame time, in the name of the Lord, that the waters ſhould ever be ſalutary and drinkable, and the land fertile, for the future. This prediction was juſtified by the event, for the water of the rivulet being thus cured, rendred the plain of Jericho not only one of the moſt agreeable, but likewiſe one of the moſt fruitful ſpots in all that country.

Eliſha wrought the miracle at Jordan for his own ſake, as Abarbinel obſerves; that he might make an experiment, whether the Divine influence which actuated Elijah, was now imparted to him. But this at Jericho, he wrought for the ſake of the ſons of the prophets, who reſided there; that they might know the hand of God was with him.

Ver. 23. And he went up from thence unto Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth little children out of the city, and mocked him, and ſaid unto him, Go up, thou bald head, go up, thou bald head.] From Jericho Eliſha proceeded to Beth el, in order to viſit the ſons of the prophets who dwelt in that city, and to comfort them for the loſs of Elijah; by letting them ſee the Spirit of God was upon him. In the way he was met by ſeveral little children, according to our tranſlation; but the Hebrew word naarim ſignifies alſo grown youths: For Iſaac, when he was twenty-eight years of age, is called Naar, Gen. xxii. 5, 12. As likewiſe was Joſeph, when he was in his thirtieth year, Gen. xli. 12. And Rehoboam, when he was forty, 2 Chron. xiii. 7. And the paſſage before us is to be underſtood of adult perſons, who hated the prophet.

Theſe profligate wretches mocked the venerable prophet in the moſt inſolent manner; and the repetition of their opprobious expreſſions added new malignity to their contempt of his perſon, and ſhewed their violent inveteracy againſt him. To which we may add, that when they called upon him to go up, they ſeem to have derided the late aſcenſion of Elijah to Heaven: The tydings of which had been brought to Beth-el, and reported by the prophets of that place. In a word, it is as if they had ſaid, Let the ſpirit take thee alſo, and caſt thee upon ſome inacceſſible mountain, that we may be rid of thee, as we are of thy maſter.

This impious contempt of Eliſha, not as a man merely, but as a prophet; provoked the anger of God, who moved Eliſha to lay a curſe upon them, and likewiſe to puniſh them, as Moſes did Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. The prophet accordingly pronounced a juſt execration againſt them, and immediately two ſhe-bears ruſhed out of a wood, and deſtroyed two and forty of this deteſtable crew. This was done by an extraordinary direction from God, who cauſed the two ſavage animals to iſſue out of the wood, the moment Eliſha had uttered his curſe; and to make make ſo great a havock among the ſcoffers, when two or three would have been ſufficient to ſatisfy their hunger.

Eliſha went from thence to mount Carmel, where he intended to be a while retired, and he then returned to Samaria, in order to teſtify againſt the idolatry of the inhabitants. It is probable there was a college of prophets even in Samaria, as there was in Beth-el and Jericho, and he might think it neceſſary to be preſent among them, that he might fortify them by his example and inſtructions.

CHAP. III.

1 Jehoram's reign. 4 Meſha rebelleth. 6 Jehoram, with Jehoſhaphat, and the king of Edom, being diſtreſſed for want of water, by Eliſha obtaineth water, and promiſe of victory. 21 The Moabites deceived by the colour of the water, coming to ſpoil, are overcome. 26 The king of Moab, by ſacrificing the king of Edom's ſon, raiſeth the ſiege.

NOW Jehoram the ſon of Ahab began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, the eighteenth year of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years.

2 And he wrought evil in the ſight of the LORD, but not like his father, and like his mother; for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made.

3 Nevertheleſs he cleaved unto the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, which made Iſrael to ſin; he departed not therefrom.

4 ¶ And Meſha king of Moab was a ſheep-maſter, and rendred unto the king of Iſrael an hundred thouſand lambs, and an hundred thouſand rams, with the wooll.

5 But it came to paſs when Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled againſt the king of Iſrael.

6 ¶ And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the ſame time, and numbred all Iſrael.

7 And he went and ſent to Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, ſaying, The king of Moab hath rebelled againſt me: wilt thou go with me againſt Moab to battle? And he ſaid, I will go up: I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horſes as thy horſes.

8 And he ſaid, Which way ſhall we go up? And he anſwered, The way through the wilderneſs of Edom.

9 So the king of Iſrael went, and the king of Judah, and the king of Edom: and they fetcht a compaſs of ſeven days journey: and there was no water for the hoſt, and for the cattle that followed them.

10 And the king of Iſrael ſaid, Alas, that the LORD hath called theſe three kings together to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

11 But Jehoſhaphat ſaid, Is there not here a prophet of the LORD, that we may enquire of the LORD by him? And one of the king of Iſraels ſervants anſwered and ſaid, Here is Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

12 And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, The word of the LORD is with him. So the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat, and the king of Edom went down to him.

13 And Eliſha ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto him, Nay: for the LORD hath called theſe three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

14 And Eliſha ſaid, As the LORD of hoſts liveth, before whom I ſtand, ſurely, were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor ſee thee.

15 But now bring me a minſtrel. And it came to paſs when the minſtrel played, that the hand of the LORD came upon him.

16 And he ſaid, Thus ſaith the LORD, Make this valley full of ditches.

17 For thus ſaith the LORD, Ye ſhall not ſee wind, neither ſhall ye ſee rain; yet that valley ſhall be filled with water, that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beaſts.

18 And this is but a light thing in the ſight of the LORD: He will deliver the Moabites alſo into your hand.

19 And ye ſhall ſmite every fenced city, and every choice city, and ſhall fell every good tree, and ſtop all wells of water, and mar every good piece of land with ſtones.

20 And it came to paſs in the morning when the meat-offering was offered, that behold, there came water by the way of Edom, and the country was filled with water.

21 ¶ And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight againſt them, they gathered all that were able to put on armour, and upward, and ſtood in the border.

22 And they roſe up early in the morning, and the ſun ſhone upon the water, and the Moabites ſaw the water on the other ſide as red as blood:

23 And they ſaid, This is blood: the kings are ſurely ſlain, and they have ſmitten one another: now therefore, Moab, to the ſpoil.

24 And

24 And when they came to the camp of Iſrael, the Iſraelites roſe up, and ſmote the Moabites, ſo that they fled before them: but they went forward ſmiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land caſt every man his ſtone, and filled it, and they ſtopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: only in Kir-haraſeth left they the ſtones thereof: howbeit, the ſlingers went about it, and ſmote it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab ſaw that the battle was too ſore for him, he took with him ſeven hundred men that drew ſwords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldeſt ſon that ſhould have reigned in his ſtead, and offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall: and there was great indignation againſt Iſrael: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

Ver 1. Now Jehoram the ſon of Ahab, began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, the eighteenth year of Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, &c.] Ahaziah, the brother of Jehoram, began his reign of two years, in the ſeventeenth year of Jehoſhaphat, 1 Kings xxii. 51. that is, he reigned part of the ſeventeenth year and part of the eighteenth, which ſpace of time was computed at two years. In the latter end of which his brother Jehoram began to reign; when Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat had reigned two years with his father.

Ver. And he wrought evil in the ſight of the Lord, but not like his father, and like his mother; for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made.] He did not break it in pieces, as he would have done if he had heartily hated it; but only removed it out of the temple; thro' an apprehenſion that the judgments of God would prove fatal to him as they had been to his father, if he ſuffered that deteſtable idol to be publicly worſhipped any longer. And the king of Moab being now in rebellion againſt him, Jehoſhaphat perhaps refuſed to aſſiſt him whilſt he continued a worſhipper of Baal.

Ver. 3. Nevertheleſs, he cleaved unto the ſin of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, &c.] It was eaſier for him to remove the image of Baal, than to put away the golden calves; that being new, but the other of long ſtanding, and they likewiſe proved the moſt effectual expedient that could be thought of, for keeping up the diviſion of the two kingdoms.

Ver. 4. And Meſha king of Moab was a ſheep-maſter.] The riches not only of private perſons, but even of kings themſelves, in ancient times, conſiſted much in ſheep and cattle, which they tended themſelves. And thus the greateſt part of the world lived for near four thouſand years; but this rural manner of life did not hinder them from being, at the ſame time, a brave and warlike people, as appears by the ancient Romans who were thus bred; and yet ſubdued all Italy, and at laſt made themſelves Maſters of the world. For this ſort of life was the cauſe of their great ſtrength; rendring their bodies robuſt, and hardened to labour; by which means they were eaſily habituated to all the ſeverities of military diſcipline. The celebrated Cato the cenſor, who had paſſed through all the great offices of the Roman Republic; and governed provinces, commanded armies, and was a great orator, lawyer, and politician, did not think it beneath him to write a treatiſe on all the methods neceſſary for the improvement of lands; with directions for building proper ſtables and houſes for ſeveral ſorts of cattle, and making preſſes for wine and oil, &c. Inſomuch that one may ſee, that he was perfectly acquainted with all the branches of country employments; and that he did not write for oſtentation, but for the real benefit of mankind.

——— And rendered unto the king of Iſrael an hundred thouſand lambs, and an hundred thouſand rams, with the wool.] This indeed was a prodigious number; but we are to conſider, that theſe countries abounded with ſheep; inſomuch that Solomon offered an hundred and twenty thouſand, at the ſolemn dedication of the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 5. And the Reubenites drove from the Hagarenes, an hundred and fifty thouſand, 1 Chron. v. 7. Pliny ſhews us that this was the moſt ancient tribute, lib. 18. Nat. Hiſt. cap. 3. Ludolphus, however, obſerves, that the number of cattle mentioned in this verſe, was not an annual tribute from the king of Moab, but a compenſation for thoſe damages the Iſraelites ſuſtained in their war with his ſubjects, or by the revolt of theſe from their government. To which he adds, that the Hebrew word Ajil, ſhould not be tranſlated, a Ram, but a Weather. For one Ram will ſuffice for many ſheep. Lib. 1. Comment. in Hiſtor. Æthiop. cap. 3. N. 30.

Ver. 5. But it came to paſs when Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled againſt the king of Iſrael.] This was obſerved before chap. 1. 1 and is here repeated, in order to introduce the following hiſtory.

Ver. 6 And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the ſame time, and numbred all Iſrael.] As ſoon as this prince was ſettled in his kingdom, his firſt buſineſs was to raiſe an army to reduce Moab to obedience.

Ver 7. And he went and ſent to Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, ſaying, the king of Moab hath rebelled againſt me: Wilt thou go with me againſt Moab to battle? And he ſaid I will go up, I am as thou art, &c.] Jehoſhaphat returns the ſame anſwer to the king of Iſrael, as he had given to Ahab his father, when he deſired his aſſiſtance againſt Syria, 1 Kings xxii. 4. But the ill ſucceſs he then had, ſhould have made him more cautious how he entered into a new confederation with his ſon; eſpecially ſince he ſeemed to have been afraid to have any tranſactions with his brother Ahaziah, 1 Kings xxii. 49. But as Jehoram had made ſome reformation in his dominions, the king of Judah perhaps entertained a better opinion of him, and might hope that an amicable conduct toward this prince, would induce him to proceed farther in the re-eſtabliſhment of the Divine Worſhip. We may add to this, that the Moabites had lately invaded the territories of Jehoſhaphat, and this inſult might make him deſirous of an opportunity to chaſtiſe them for it.

Ver. 8. And he ſaid, Which way ſhall we go up? and he anſwered, the way through the wilderneſs of Edom.] Jehoram choſe to march his troops this way, that he might have the aſſiſtance of the Edomites, who were his tributaries. And it is probable, that Moab was but weakly fortified on that ſide.

Theſe princes took a compaſs of ſeven days march thro' the deſerts of Edom, and were there greatly diſtreſſed for want of water; for either there was a great drought in thoſe parts, or they had miſtaken their way.

Ver. 10. And the king of Iſrael ſaid, Alas! that the Lord hath called theſe kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.] The three kings were himſelf, the king of Judah, and the king of Edom who had joined them with his forces. Jehoram did not cry to God for help, but only bewailed the ſtraits to which they were then reduced; and which his own guilt made him imagine God had contrived for their deſtruction.

Ver. 11. But Jehoſhaphat ſaid, is not there here a prophet of the Lord, that we may enquire of the Lord by him.] This was ſpoken like a pious man; but it was a fault that he did not enquire before for direction in this war; as he formerly did in that againſt the Syrians, 1 Kings xxii. 5.

——— And one of the king of Iſrael's ſervants anſwered and ſaid, here is Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.] That is, was his ſervant, and miniſtred unto him.

Ver. 12. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, the word of the Lord is with him.] Jehoſhaphat had undoubtedly been informed, how Elijah had choſen this diſciple of his for his ſucceſſor; and what wonders he had already wrought.

——— So the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat, and the king of Edom went down to him.] The particular place to

to which they went is not mentioned; but it is very obſervable, Firſt, how much they honoured the prophet, whom they did not order to come to them, but they went to him. And ſecondly, how deſirous the prophet was to do good, in that he followed the camp into this wilderneſs. For it is not likely, that theſe kings went back to Samaria, where the hiſtory left Elijah, in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter. For this would have been a journey of ſeven days, and the army might have been loſt in the mean time. It is evident, beſide, from ver. 16. that Elijah was not far from them, and the ſervant in the foregoing verſe ſpeaks of him as preſent, ſaying, Here is Eliſha.

Ver. 13. And Eliſha ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother.] He refuſes with great diſdain, to have any converſation with that unrighteous prince, and bids him conſer with thoſe who he knew were unable to ſerve him, in any inſtance whatever.

——— And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto him, Nay:] That is, I will not conſult thoſe prophets; but intreat thee to direct us how we may be brought out of this great diſtreſs.

——— For the Lord hath called theſe three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.] Tho' Eliſha had refuſed to do any thing for the ſake of Jehoram, yet this prince beſeeches him to have reſpect to the other two kings, who without his aid, muſt periſh as well as himſelf.

Ver. 14. And Eliſha ſaid, As the Lord of hoſts liveth, before whom I ſtand.] It is obſervable, that the ſons of the prophets are ſaid to ſit before their maſters the prophets, when theſe inſtructed them; but the prophets themſelves ſtood before the Lord their maſter, when he ſent them upon any meſſage.

Surely were it not that I regard the preſence of Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, I would not look toward thee, nor ſee thee.] Eliſha was ſilent with regard to the king of Edom; knowing him to be a dependant upon Jehoſhaphat, whoſe piety he eſteemed, and had ſome reſpect to all who belonged to him.

Ver. 15. But now bring me a minſtrel.] One who could play well on an inſtrument of muſic.

——— And it came to paſs when the minſtrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him.] Every one knows that ſome ſort of muſic wonderfully quiets and compoſes the ſpirits when they are diſordered; and raiſes them when they are flat and heavy; and therefore holy men did not neglect ſuch helps as were proper to inſpire them with a diſpoſition fit to receive Divine Inſpirations. We may likewiſe ſuppoſe, that the perſon who now played to Eliſha, accompanied his inſtrument with ſome rapturous hymn in the praiſes of God, and of his wonderful works; whereby the ſpirit of the prophet, which perhaps had been diſturbed by his indignation at the king of Iſrael, was now ſweetly compoſed. From hence we may conclude, there were excellent muſicians in Iſrael, as well as in Judah, where David had ſettled Divine Muſic in great perfection.

Elijah was now actuated by the energy of the Divine Spirit; he aſſumed the prophetic ſtrain, and aſſured the kings, that if they cut ditches along the valley where they were then incamped, theſe ſhould, without wind or rain, be filled with water in a miraculous manner; and he added, that God would deliver Moab into their hands. The prediction was ſoon accompliſhed, for the waters ſuddenly flowed the next morning, by the way of Edom, and filled all the country.

The Moabites, being by this time alarmed, got together all the people who were able to bear arms, and early in the morning ſeeing the water on the eaſt ſide of their country appear as red as blood, by the reflexion of the ſun-beams, and never ſuſpecting it to be water in that dry deſert, and in ſo great a quantity, they immediately concluded it to be blood; and what blood could it be, but that of the confederate troops? who, as the Moabites imagined, had turned their arms againſt one another, in conſequence of a diſagreement between them. Upon which, they thought they had nothing more to do than to ſeize the ſpoil. With this perſuation they ran in a confuſed manner to the camp of the allies, but ſoon found their miſtake, for not being able to ſuſtain the firſt attack made upon them by their enemies, they preſently turned their backs, and great numbers of them were ſlain, by the victorious foe, who purſued them into the very heart of their country, waſted their lands, and demoliſhed all their cities, except Kir-hareſeth, in which the king of Moab had ſhut himſelf up. But when he found that this place would be unable to hold out long againſt the enemy, he ſallied out with ſeven hundred choſen men, upon the quarters of the king of Edom, which it ſeems were the weakeſt: And he therefore hoped to break through them and eſcape; but he and his men were repulſed, and compelled to make a precipitate retreat.

Hereupon the king of Moab took his eldeſt ſon, and ſacrificed him upon the city-wall, as the laſt deſperate remedy; hoping to obtain a powerful aid from his gods, by the immolation of the perſon who was deareſt to him. For it is well known, that it was cuſtomary for the Pagans to offer up their own children upon their altars, in times of great diſtreſs. Eu ebius mentions ſeveral nations who uſed theſe ſacrifices (lib. v. Præpar. Evangel.) And Cæſar ſaith of the Gauls, that when they were afflicted with grievous diſeaſes, or when they were engaged in war, or found themſelves involved in great danger, they offered men for ſacrifices, or vowed they would offer them. For they imagined, that God would not be appeaſed, niſi pro vita hominis reddatur vita hominis. Unleſs the life of a man was rendred for the life of a man.

Abarbinel thinks, that this barbarous prince ſacrificed the eldeſt ſon of the king of Edom, after he had taken him priſoner in the laſt ſally: But there is not the leaſt reaſon for ſuch a ſuppoſition: For the Sacred Hiſtorian expreſly declares, that the king of Moab took his eldeſt ſon, that ſhould have reigned in his ſtead, ver. 27. and who therefore could not be the king of Edom's ſon. But the ſame author acknowleuges, that their wiſe men in Peſikta, and the Sanhedrin underſtand this fact in the manner we have repreſented it. And that ſome of them believe the king of Moab offered up his own ſon in imitation of Abraham, to the God of Iſrael, hoping thereby to move him to be favourable to him.

This action raiſed great indignation againſt Iſrael, ver. 27. Or, as the words in the Hebrew may be more properly tranſlated, there was great repentance, in or among Iſrael. That is, they were extremely afflicted at this barbarous ſacrifice, and wiſhed they had not puſhed the war ſo far, ſince it ended in ſuch a horrid action as was likely to bring a general odium upon them. They therefore raiſed the ſiege by common conſent, and returned home, that no other barbarity of this nature might be committed on their account.

CHAP. IV.

1 Eliſha multiplieth the widow's oil. 8 He giveth a ſon to the good Shunammite. 18 He raiſeth again her dead ſon. 38 At Gilgal he healeth the deadly pottage. 42 He ſatisfieth an hundred men with twenty loaves.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of the ſons of the prophets unto Eliſha, ſaying, Thy ſervant my huſband is dead, and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear the LORD: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two ſons to be bondmen.

2 And Eliſha ſaid unto her, What ſhall I do for thee? tell me, what haſt thou in the houſe? And ſhe ſaid, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the houſe, ſave a pot of oil.

3 Then he ſaid, Go borrow thee veſſels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty veſſels, borrow not a few.

24 And when they came to the camp of Iſrael, the Iſraelites roſe up, and ſmote the Moabites, ſo that they fled before them: but they went forward ſmiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land caſt every man his ſtone, and filled it, and they ſtopped all the wells of water, and felled all the good trees: only in Kir-haraſeth left they the ſtones thereof: howbeit, the ſlingers went about it, and ſmote it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab ſaw that the battle was too ſore for him, he took with him ſeven hundred men that drew ſwords, to break through even unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldeſt ſon that ſhould have reigned in his ſtead, and offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall: and there was great indignation againſt Iſrael: and they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

Ver 1. Now Jehoram the ſon of Ahab, began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, the eighteenth year of Jehoſhaphat, king of Judah, &c.] Ahaziah, the brother of Jehoram, began his reign of two years, in the ſeventeenth year of Jehoſhaphat, 1 Kings xxii. 51. that is, he reigned part of the ſeventeenth year and part of the eighteenth, which ſpace of time was computed at two years. In the latter end of which his brother Jehoram began to reign; when Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat had reigned two years with his father.

Ver. And he wrought evil in the ſight of the Lord, but not like his father, and like his mother; for he put away the image of Baal that his father had made.] He did not break it in pieces, as he would have done if he had heartily hated it, but only removed it out of the temple; thro' an apprehenſion that the judgments of God would prove fatal to him as they had been to his father, if he ſuffered that deteſtable idol to be publicly worſhipped any longer. And the king of Moab being now in rebellion againſt him, Jehoſhaphat perhaps refuſed to aſſiſt him whilſt he continued a worſhipper of Baal.

Ver. 3. Nevertheleſs, he cleaved unto the ſin of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, &c.] It was eaſier for him to remove the image of Baal, than to put away the golden calves; that being new, but the other of long ſtanding, and they likewiſe proved the moſt effectual expedient that could be thought of, for keeping up the diviſion of the two kingdoms.

Ver. 4. And Meſha king of Moab was a ſheep-maſter.] The riches not only of private perſons, but even of kings themſelves, in ancient times, conſiſted much in ſheep and cattle, which they tended themſelves. And thus the greateſt part of the world lived for near four thouſand years; but this rural manner of life did not hinder them from being, at the ſame time, a brave and warlike people, as appears by the ancient Romans who were thus bred; and yet ſubdued all Italy, and at laſt made themſelves Maſters of the world. For this ſort of life was the cauſe of their great ſtrength; rendring their bodies robuſt, and hardened to labour; by which means they were eaſily habituated to all the ſeverities of military diſcipline. The celebrated Cato the cenſor, who had paſſed through all the great offices of the Roman Republic; and governed provinces, commanded armies, and was a great orator, lawyer, and politician, did not think it beneath him to write a treatiſe on all the methods neceſſary for the improvement of lands; with directions for building proper ſtables and houſes for ſeveral ſorts of cattle, and making preſſes for wine and oil, &c. Inſomuch that one may ſee, that he was perfectly acquainted with all the branches of country employments; and that he did not write for oſtentation, but for the real benefit of mankind.

——— And rendered unto the king of Iſrael an hundred thouſand lambs, and an hundred thouſand rams, with the wool.] This indeed was a prodigious number; but we are to conſider, that theſe countries abounded with ſheep; inſomuch that Solomon offered an hundred and twenty thouſand, at the ſolemn dedication of the temple, 2 Chron. vii. 5. And the Reubenites drove from the Hagarenes, an hundred and fifty thouſand, 1 Chron. v. 7. Pliny ſhews us that this was the moſt ancient tribute, lib. 18. Nat. Hiſt. cap. 3. Ludolphus, however, obſerves, that the number of cattle mentioned in this verſe, was not an annual tribute from the king of Moab, but a compenſation for thoſe damages the Iſraelites ſuſtained in their war with his ſubjects, or by the revolt of theſe from their government. To which he adds, that the Hebrew word Ajil, ſhould not be tranſlated, a Ram, but a Weather. For one Ram will ſuffice for many ſheep. Lib. 1. Comment. in Hiſtor. Æthiop. cap. 3. N. 30.

Ver. 5. But it came to paſs when Ahab was dead, that the king of Moab rebelled againſt the king of Iſrael.] This was obſerved before chap. i. 1 and is here repeated, in order to introduce the following hiſtory.

Ver. 6 And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the ſame time, and numbred all Iſrael.] As ſoon as this prince was ſettled in his kingdom, his firſt buſineſs was to raiſe an army to reduce Moab to obedience.

Ver 7. And he went and ſent to Jehoſhaphat the king of Judah, ſaying, the king of Moab hath rebelled againſt me: Wilt thou go with me againſt Moab to battle? And he ſaid I will go up, I am as thou art, &c.] Jehoſhaphat returns the ſame anſwer to the king of Iſrael, as he had given to Ahab his father, when he deſired his aſſiſtance againſt Syria, 1 Kings xxii. 4. But the ill ſucceſs he then had, ſhould have made him more cautious how he entered into a new confederation with his ſon; eſpecially ſince he ſeemed to have been afraid to have any tranſactions with his brother Ahaziah, 1 Kings xxii. 49. But as Jehoram had made ſome reformation in his dominions, the king of Judah perhaps entertained a better opinion of him, and might hope that an amicable conduct toward this prince, would induce him to proceed farther in the re-eſtabliſhment of the Divine Worſhip. We may add to this, that the Moabites had lately invaded the territories of Jehoſhaphat, and this inſult might make him deſirous of an opportunity to chaſtiſe them for it.

Ver. 8. And he ſaid, Which way ſhall we go up? and he anſwered, the way through the wilderneſs of Edom.] Jehoram choſe to march his troops this way, that he might have the aſſiſtance of the Edomites, who were his tributaries. And it is probable, that Moab was but weakly fortified on that ſide.

Theſe princes took a compaſs of ſeven days march thro' the deſerts of Edom, and were there greatly diſtreſſed for want of water, for either there was a great drought in thoſe parts, or they had miſtaken their way.

Ver. 10. And the king of Iſrael ſaid, Alas! that the Lord hath called theſe kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.] The three kings were himſelf, the king of Judah, and the king of Edom who had joined them with his forces. Jehoram did not cry to God for help, but only bewailed the ſtraits to which they were then reduced; and which his own guilt made him imagine God had contrived for their deſtruction.

Ver. 11. But Jehoſhaphat ſaid, is not there here a prophet of the Lord, that we may enquire of the Lord by him.] This was ſpoken like a pious man; but it was a fault that he did not enquire before for direction in this war; as he formerly did in that againſt the Syrians, 1 Kings xxii. 5.

——— And one of the king of Iſrael's ſervants anſwered and ſaid, here is Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat, which poured water on the hands of Elijah.] That is, was his ſervant, and miniſtred unto him.

Ver. 12. And Jehoſhaphat ſaid, the word of the Lord is with him.] Jehoſhaphat had undoubtedly been informed, how Elijah had choſen this diſciple of his for his ſucceſſor; and what wonders he had already wrought.

——— So the king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat, and the king of Edom went down to him.] The particular place to

to which they went is not mentioned; but it is very obſervable, Firſt, how much they honoured the prophet, whom they did not order to come to them, but they went to him. And ſecondly, how deſirous the prophet was to do good, in that he followed the camp into this wilderneſs. For it is not likely, that theſe kings went back to Samaria, where the hiſtory left Elijah, in the laſt verſe of the preceding chapter. For this would have been a journey of ſeven days, and the army might have been loſt in the mean time. It is evident, beſide, from ver. 16. that Elijah was not far from them, and the ſervant in the foregoing verſe ſpeaks of him as preſent, ſaying, Here is Eliſha.

Ver. 13. And Eliſha ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, What have I to do with thee? get thee to the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother.] He refuſes with great diſdain, to have any converſation with that unrighteous prince, and bids him conſer with thoſe who he knew were unable to ſerve him, in any inſtance whatever.

——— And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto him, Nay:] That is, I will not conſult thoſe prophets; but intreat thee to direct us how we may be brought out of this great diſtreſs.

Ver. 14. And Eliſha ſaid, As the Lord of hoſts liveth, before whom I ſtand.] It is obſervable, that the ſons of the prophets are ſaid to ſit before their maſters the prophets, when theſe inſtructed them; but the prophets themſelves ſtood before the Lord their maſter, when he ſent them upon any meſſage.

Ver. 15. But now bring me a minſtrel.] One who could play well on an inſtrument of muſic.

——— And it came to paſs when the minſtrel played, that the hand of the Lord came upon him.] Every one knows that ſome ſort of muſic wonderfully quiets and compoſes the ſpirits when they are diſordered; and raiſes them when they are flat and heavy; and therefore holy men did not neglect ſuch helps as were proper to inſpire them with a diſpoſition fit to receive Divine Inſpirations. CHAP. IV.

1 Eliſha multiplieth the widow's oil. 8 He giveth a ſon to the good Shunammite. 18 He raiſeth again her dead ſon. 38 At Gilgal he healeth the deadly pottage. 42 He ſatisfieth an hundred men with twenty loaves.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of the ſons of the prophets unto Eliſha, ſaying, Thy ſervant my huſband is dead, and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear the LORD: and the creditor is come to take unto him my two ſons to be bondmen.

2 And Eliſha ſaid unto her, What ſhall I do for thee? tell me, what haſt thou in the houſe? And ſhe ſaid, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the houſe, ſave a pot of oil.

3 Then he ſaid, Go borrow thee veſſels abroad of all thy neighbours, even empty veſſels, borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, thou ſhalt ſhut the door upon thee, and upon thy ſons, and ſhalt pour out into all thoſe veſſels, and thou ſhalt ſet aſide that which is full.

5 So ſhe went from him, and ſhut the door upon her, and upon her ſons, who brought the veſſels to her, and ſhe poured out.

6 And it came to paſs when the veſſels were full, that ſhe ſaid unto her ſon, Bring me yet a veſſel. And he ſaid unto her, There is not a veſſel more. And the oil ſtayed.

7 Then ſhe came and told the man of God: and he ſaid, Go, ſell the oil, and pay thy debt, and live thou and thy children of the reſt.

8 ¶ And it fell on a day, that Eliſha paſſed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and ſhe conſtrained him to eat bread. And ſo it was, that as oft as he paſſed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

9 And ſhe ſaid unto her husband, Behold now, I perceive that this is an holy man of God, which paſſeth by us continually.

10 Let us make a little chamber, I pray thee, on the wall, and let us ſet for him there a bed, and a table, and a ſtool, and a candleſtick: and it ſhall be when he cometh to us, that he ſhall turn in thither.

11 And it fell on a day that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber, and lay there.

12 And he ſaid to Gehazi his ſervant, Call this Shunammite. And when he had called her, ſhe ſtood before him.

13 And he ſaid unto him, Say now unto her; Behold, thou haſt been careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? wouldſt thou be ſpoken for to the king, or to the captain of the hoſt? And ſhe anſwered, I dwell among mine own people.

14 And he ſaid, What then is to be done for her? And Gehazi anſwered, Verily ſhe hath no child, and her husband is old.

15 And he ſaid, Call her. And when he had called her, ſhe ſtood in the door.

16 And he ſaid, About this ſeaſon, according to the time of life, thou ſhalt embrace a ſon. And ſhe ſaid, Nay, my lord, thou man of God, do not lye unto thine handmaid.

17 And the woman conceived, and bare a ſon at that ſeaſon that Eliſha had ſaid unto her, according to the time of life.

18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father to the reapers.

19 And he ſaid unto his father, My head, my head. And he ſaid to a lad, Carry him to his mother.

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to his mother, he ſat on her knees till noon, and then died.

21 And ſhe went up, and laid him on the bed of the man of God, and ſhut the door upon him, and went out.

22 And ſhe called unto her husband, and ſaid, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the aſſes, that I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he ſaid, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to day? it is neither new-moon, nor ſabbath. And ſhe ſaid, It ſhall be well.

24 Then ſhe ſaddled an aſs, and ſaid to her ſervant, Drive, and go forward; ſlack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

25 So ſhe went, and came unto the man of God to mount Carmel: and it came to paſs when the man of God ſaw her afar off, that he ſaid to Gehazi his ſervant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite:

26 Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and ſay unto her, Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And ſhe anſwered, It is well.

27 And when ſhe came to the man of God to the hill, ſhe caught him by the feet: but Gehazi came near to thruſt her away. And the man of God ſaid, Let her alone, for her ſoul is vexed within her: and the LORD hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then ſhe ſaid, Did I deſire a ſon of my lord? did I not ſay, Do not deceive me?

29 Then he ſaid to Gehazi, Gird up thy loyns, and take my ſtaff in thine hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, ſalute him not; and if any ſalute thee, anſwer him not again: and lay my ſtaff upon the face of the child.

30 And the mother of the child ſaid, As the LORD liveth, and as thy ſoul liveth, I will not leave thee. And he aroſe, and followed her.

31 And Gehazi paſſed on before them, and laid the ſtaff upon the face of the child, but there was neither voice, nor hearing: where-wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, ſaying, The child is not awaked.

32 And when Eliſha was come into the houſe, behold, the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He went in therefore, and ſhut the door upon them twain, and prayed unto the LORD.

34 And he went up, and lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and he ſtretched himſelf upon the child, and the fleſh of the child waxed warm.

35 Then he returned, and walked in the houſe to and fro, and went up, and ſtretched himſelf upon him: and the child ſneezed ſeven times, and the child opened his eyes.

36 And he called Gehazi, and ſaid, Call this Shunammite. So he called her: and and when ſhe was come in unto him, he ſaid, Take up thy ſon.

37 Then ſhe went in, and fell at his feet, and bowed her ſelf to the ground, and took up her ſon, and went out.

38 ¶ And Eliſha came again to Gilgal, and there was a dearth in the land, and the ſons of the prophets were ſitting before him: and he ſaid unto his ſervant, Set on the great pot, and ſeethe pottage for the ſons of the prophets.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap-full, and came and ſhred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat: and it came to paſs as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and ſaid, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot: and they could not eat thereof.

41 But he ſaid, Then bring meal: and he caſt it into the pot; and he ſaid, Pour out for the people, that they may eat: and there was no harm in the pot.

42 ¶ And there came a man from Baal-ſhaliſha, and brought the man of God bread of the firſt-fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the huſk thereof: and he ſaid, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

43 And his ſervitour ſaid, What, ſhould I ſet this before an hundred men? He ſaid again, Give the people, that they may eat: for thus ſaith the LORD, They ſhall eat, and ſhall leave thereof.

44 So he ſet it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the LORD.

Ver. 1. Now there cried a certain woman of the wives of the ſons of the prophets unto Eliſha, ſaying, Thy ſervant my huſband is dead, and thou knoweſt that thy ſervant did fear the Lord; and the creditor is come to take unto him my two ſons to be bondmen.] Tho' Eliſha had been ſo inſtrumental in preſerving the confederate army, no man remembred or rewarded his ſervices: But God honoured him with the ability to perform many noble miracles. A widow of one of the ſons of the prophets complained to Eliſha, that her huſband being dead, and ſhe left very poor, a creditor came to take her two ſons and make ſlaves of them; becauſe ſhe was in no condition to pay the debts her huſband had contracted. In which caſe the Hebrews had ſuch a power over their children, that they might ſell them to pay what they owed, and the creditor might force them to it. Huetius thinks, that from the Jews this cuſtom was propagated to the Athenians; and from them to the Romans. The Hebrew doctors fancy, that the huſband of this widow was Obadiah, who is mentioned, 1 Kings xviii. 3. and that the creditor was Jehoram the ſon Ahab; which is utterly ungrounded.

We take it for granted, that the poverty of this unfortunate woman was not occaſioned by the idleneſs or prodigality of her deceaſed huſband, but merely by his piety, becauſe he would not comply with the king's way of worſhip, but ſacrificed all worldly advantages to the preſervation of his integrity and the teſtimony of a good conſcience. Eliſha therefore took compaſſion on her, and finding that ſhe had nothing in her houſe, but a jar of oil, he ordered her to go and borrow veſſels of her neighbours; and then to ſhut herſelf up with her two ſons, and pour the oil into the veſſels. The widow purſued his directions, and poured out ſuch a miraculous quantity of oil as was more than ſufficient to diſcharge the debt her huſband had contracted. Eliſha then ordered her to ſell as much of it as would pay the creditor, and then to live upon the remainder. For we ought firſt to do juſtice, and then expect God's bleſſing upon the proviſion we make for ourſelves and family.

This miracle, ſaith St. Gregory, was a figure of that abundant effuſion of the grace of the Holy Spirit, which ſhould one day fill the Church, repreſented by this widow. St. Bernard declares, that we muſt without ceaſing deſire a ſhare of this holy and wonder working oil, that our hearts may be filled with it: In order to which, we muſt keep them empty of vain imaginations, and ſenſual ſatisfactions. For the unction of the Holy Spirit, typified by this widow's oil, can fill no veſſels but ſuch as are void of all ſinful prepoſſeſſions. 'Tis in vain, continues this father, for any man to attempt a union between God and Mammon; Jeſus Chriſt and this world; the fleſh and the ſpirit: And it is impoſſible at the ſame time, to taſte and reliſh the pleaſures of earth and thoſe of Heaven.

Ver. 8 And it fell out on a day, that Eliſha paſſed to Shunem, where was a great woman; and ſhe conſtrained him to eat bread. And ſo it was, that as oft as he paſſed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.] At Shunem, a city in the tribe of Iſſachar, and in the road between Samaria and Carmel, lived a woman, whoſe huſband had a plentiful eſtate, and delighted in hoſpitality. She one day invited Eliſha to take a repaſt at her houſe; and treated him with ſo much civility and reſpect, that he made no ſcruple, when he paſſed that way, to ſtop and refreſh himſelf at her houſe; which in all probability ſhe had invited him to do. And when ſhe became ſenſible, by frequent converſation with him, that he was not only a prophet, but likewiſe a perſon of uncommon ſanctity and vertue; ſhe deſired her huſband to build and furniſh a private apartment for him, where he might retire, in order to devote himſelf to prayer and meditation; and to follow his ſacred ſtudies without any interruption or diſturbance. Eliſha, in gratitude for this favour, deſired to know, if he could be ſerviceable to her in any inſtance, either at court, or with the general of the forces; for tho' he himſelf had not been diſtinguiſhed by any favours or preferments, and was not ſolicitous to obtain them; he, however, might juſtly ſuppoſe, that any proper recommendation of his,

after the ſervice he had rendred his country, would not be diſregarded at court. The Shunammite then replied, That ſhe dwelt among her own people, ver. 13. The meaning of which expreſſion is, that whatever vexation the inhabitants who lived on the borders of the country might ſuffer from the ſoldiers, ſhe lived quietly among her friends and neighbours; and had no occaſion to ſue to the king or his miniſters for any favour. When ſhe had ſaid this, ſhe retired, but the prophet being ſtill deſirous of making ſome return for the civilities he had received from her and her husband, asked his ſervant Gehazi, what was then to be done for her? ver. 14. for he imagined, that as this ſervant of his, had opportunities of obſerving all that paſt in the houſe more than himſelf, he could the better tell what would be moſt welcome to her. Gehazi then acquainted him that ſhe had no children, and that her husband was old, upon which the prophet, who knew how afflictive the want of iſſue was to the Jewiſh women, ordered his ſervant to call her to him; and when ſhe came, he aſſured her, that ſhe ſhould embrace a ſon, about that ſeaſon, according to the time of life, ver. 16. That is, ſhe ſhould have a child the next year, after ſhe had gone the uſual time. From the word habeketh, which we tranſlate, thou ſhalt embrace, ſome of the Hebrew doctors conjecture, that this ſon was afterward the prophet Habakkuk: Which is a mere fancy, rejected by Abarbinel and others, who repreſent Habakkuk as propheſying in the time of Manaſſeh, or Joſiah.

The Shunammite looked upon what Eliſha had promiſed her, as altogether incredible, and deſired him not to deceive her with expectations, ſhe thought ſhe had ſo little reaſon to entertain. The prediction was, however, accompliſhed, and ſhe became the mother of a ſon at the time ſpecified by the prophet. When the child was grown up, and paſt the perils of infancy, he one day went out to his father, in a field where the reapers were at work; and was there ſeized with a ſudden illneſs which affected his head, and made him complain of the violent pain he ſuffered in that part. His father ordered a young ſervant to carry him home to his mother, that ſhe might tend him, and provide what was proper for him; but notwithſtanding all her care, the youth died in a few hours. The ſorrowful parent then carried the dead body into Eliſha's chamber, and laid it upon his bed, in hopes of receiving aid from him, whoſe maſter, as ſhe undoubtedly muſt have heard, had reſtored a child to life. But as Eliſha was then abſent, ſhe ſent for her husband, and deſired him to let her have one of the young men, and one of the aſſes, that ſhe might haſten to the man of God. Her husband was ſurpriſed that ſhe ſhould think of going to the prophet that day; it being neither new moon nor ſabbath, v. 23. From hence it appears, that the prophets were the public inſtructors of the people; and their houſes a kind of ſchool or ſynagogue, unto which their auditors reſorted on the days here mentioned, to be taught their duty out of the law of God, and to have their doubts ſolved. The mother of the dead child then replied, it ſhall be well, or, according to the Hebrew, it is peace. That is, ſhe intreats her husband to believe, that her intention in going to the prophet, was for his, as well as her own benefit.

She then haſtened to Eliſha, and found him on mount Carmel, which was much frequented by him, as it had likewiſe been by Elijah: this makes it credible there was a ſchool of the prophets here, it being a mountain finely ſhaded by trees, which rendered it a commodious ſituation for ſacred exerciſes. As ſoon as Eliſha ſaw his hoſpitable benefactreſs, he ſent his ſervant to her, with orders to make a particular enquiry after all who were moſt dear to her and likewiſe after her own welfare. To this ſhe anſwered it is well, ver. 26. ſome tranſlate it, it ſhall be well, which is needleſs, for ſhe and her husband were well, and ſhe did not think fit to tell Gehazi all the truth; but to diſcloſe it to the prophet himſelf. She then came to him, and caught him by the feet; ver. 27. after the manner of a moſt humble ſupplicant, and with a reſolution not to let him ſtir from thence till he had granted her requeſt. Gehazi, who beheld the uncommon humility of her deportment, came with an intention to thruſt her away, for he believed his maſter did not expect any ſuch abaſements; eſpecially from her, who had been ſo kind and friendly to them. Eliſha then ſaid to his ſervant, Let her alone, for her ſoul is vexed within her, and the Lord hath hid it from me: ver. 27. Do not diſturb her; for ſhe is too full of grief already; and God hath not ſhewn me the cauſe of it. It appears from hence, that the prophets knew no more, than what God was pleaſed to impart to them: for the ſpirit was not in them after the manner of a ſupernatural faculty, or an infuſed habit, whereby they might act what and when they pleaſed: Moſes himſelf, the great prophet, not being able to determine ſome things, till he had conſulted the Divine Majeſty.

The afflicted Mother than addreſſed herſelf to Eliſha in the following manner. Did I deſire a ſon of my Lord? did I not ſay, do not deceive me? ver. 28. I was well ſatisfied without a ſon; and did neither deſire ſuch a gift, nor was forward to believe I ſhould enjoy it, when freely promiſed: But now to loſe him in this manner, after he has been beſtowed upon me, is an inſupportable affliction to me.

Eliſha then ordered Gehazi to take his ſtaff, and go and lay it upon the face of the child, ver. 29. thinking it might work a miracle, as the rod of Moſes, and the mantle of Elijah had formerly done. But the woman not believing that this method would be ſufficient, entreated Eliſha to go himſelf. Abarbinel thinks the prophet had no thoughts of reviving the child by this expedient, but only ordered his ſtaff to be laid upon his face, to preſerve him from putrefaction, which ſurely muſt be thought a very low conceit.

Eliſha being overcome by her importunity, and his own kindneſs to ſo worthy a friend, aroſe and followed her; while Gehazi paſſed on before them, and laid the prophet's ſtaff upon the face of the child; but finding no appearance of life, he went out to meet his maſter, and told him that the child was not awaked, ver. 31. He ſpeaks of death as a ſleep, in which the youth continued, notwithſtanding the performance of Eliſha's order. And it is likely, that the power which otherwiſe might have accompanied the ſtaff, was with-held, becauſe the prophet chang'd the method of his proceeding, in working this miracle, when the woman would have him go himſelf: and therefore did not pray to God that the child might revive when the ſtaff was laid on his face.

When Eliſha came to the houſe, he went into the chamber, where the dead ſon of the Shunammite was laid upon his bed; and ſhut the door, that he might not be interrupted in his prayer to God. He then ſtretched himſelf upon the corpſe, as Elijah had formerly done upon the like occaſion; and the fleſh of the child waxed warm, ver. 34. not from any heat communicated from the body of the prophet, but from an inward principle of life, which was now reſtored, and began to operate within him. Eliſha then took a turn or two in the houſe, to refreſh himſelf, after the fervent pains he had taken in prayer; and then returned to his chamber, where he ſtretched himſelf a ſecond time upon the child. For the miracle of his recovery was not wrought in an inſtant, but gradually, and by earneſt and continued prayer to the Almighty. The youth at laſt ſneezed ſeven times, ver. 35. which purged his head, wherein the pain which killed him lay, and then opened his eyes. Upon which the prophet ſent for his mother, and ordered her to take up her living ſon. Her joy at this wonderful event, was now as great as her ſorrow had been before: ſhe threw herſelf at the feet of the prophet, giving thanks to God and him, with all the reverence ſhe could expreſs; ſhe then took her ſon, and we may well ſuppoſe that ſhe publiſhed this wonderful work of God to all her family and neighbourhood, who made it known abroad.

Ver. 38. And Eliſha came again to Gilgal, and there was a dearth in the land, and the ſons of the prophets were ſitting before him: and he ſaid unto his ſervant, ſet on the great pot, and ſeeth pottage for the ſons of the prophets.] Eliſha was at Gilgal with his maſter Elijah, a little before his aſſumption into heaven; and he loved to frequent thoſe places where he had been with that great prophet; that he might work new wonders there, and confirm the people in the belief that he himſelf was a prophet. The inhabitants of that part of the country, were then afflicted with a great ſcarcity of proviſions; and the ſons of the prophets were now ſitting before Eliſha, which was the poſture of diſciples when their maſters taught them. Whence Bertram obſerves, their ſchools and accademies were called Iſhiboth, which ſignifies Seſſions. We may add to this, that Eliſha's ordering his ſervant to prepare food for for the ſons of the prophets, ſhews that they lived together in ſociety, and, after their lectures, were wont to eat together with their maſter; who ordered his ſervants to provide very plain and common food for them, ſuch as the gardens or fields would afford, without much labour, and at a ſmall expence, Eliſha having given orders for a moderate repaſt of this nature, a ſervant went into the field to gather what green herbage could be there found; there being no pot-herbs in their own garden at home, by reaſon of the drought. This perſon among the other productions of the field, happened to find a wild vine, and gathered his lap full of the gourds it produced. This plant is thought to have been Coloquintida, whoſe leaf has ſome reſemblance to that of a vine, and purges exceedingly. This was ſhred into the pottage, for neither the perſon who had gathered its leaves, nor thoſe who ſhred them, knew what they were, but imagined them to be the leaves of a wild vine. But their malignant quality ſoon appeared, when the pottage was ſerved up at table; and one of the company cried out to Eliſha, O thou man of God, there is death in the pot, ver. 40. The taſte was ſo bitter and diſagreeable, that they concluded there was ſome venomous herb in the pot; in which they were not miſtaken, for the herb they complained of is a poiſon, if not qualified, and taken in a moderate quantity.

The prophet then ordered meal to be brought and caſt into the pot; upon which the hurtful was converted into wholeſome food, not from any vertue in the meal, but from the immediate power of God. The Jews therefore juſtly reckon this as the eighth miracle wrought by Eliſha after he was made a prophet.

Ver. 42. And there came a man from Baal-ſhaliſha, and brought the man of God bread of the firſt fruits, twenty loaves of barley, and full ears of corn in the husk thereof: and he ſaid, Give unto the people, that they may eat.] This was a ſeaſonable preſent, in a time of dearth, when bread was very ſcarce. And it being called Biccurim, (which was the name for the firſt fruits belonging to the prieſts) makes it probable, this was not ſuch a preſent as men uſually made when they came to ask a prophet any queſtion, and to be reſolved of their doubts; but a free-will offering for the better ſubſiſtence of the prophet. Unto whom pious people, perhaps, gave that portion which was aſſigned by God for the prieſts, to whom the firſt fruits could not now be carried, they being in the land of Judah. And we ſuppoſe, the ſchools of the prophets might be partly maintained by ſuch means as theſe.

Eliſha then ordered the proviſion he had thus received to be ſet before the people, by whom the ſons of the prophets are meant; upon which his ſervant replied in a ſurpriſe, What ſhall I ſet this before an hundred men? The Apoſtles made much the ſame anſwer to our Bleſſed Saviour, when he intended to feed a greater multitude with leſs food. Had the twenty loaves of barley, which were preſented to Eliſha, been very large, they, together with the ears of corn, might have ſufficed for an hundred men without a miracle; we therefore may conclude them to have been but ſmall; and as they yet were more than ſufficient to ſatisfy ſuch a number of perſons, this fact may juſtly be conſidered as another wonderful work which God thought fit to accompliſh in favour of his ſervants, by the inſtrumentality of Eliſha.

CHAP. V.

1 Naaman, by the report of a captive maid is ſent to Samaria to be cured of his leproſy. 8 Eliſha ſending him to Jordan, cureth him. 15 He refuſing Naaman's gifts, granteth him ſome of the earth. 20 Gehazi, abuſing his maſter's name unto Naaman, is ſmitten with leproſy.

NOW Naaman captain of the hoſt of the king of Syria, was a great man with his maſter, and honourable, becauſe by him the LORD had given deliverance unto Syria: he was alſo a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper.

2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Iſrael a little maid, and ſhe waited on Naamans wife.

3 And ſhe ſaid unto her miſtreſs, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria: for he would recover him of his leproſy.

4 And one went in, and told his lord, ſaying, Thus and thus ſaid the maid that is of the land of Iſrael.

5 And the king of Syria ſaid, Go to, go, and I will ſend a letter unto the king of Iſrael. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of ſilver, and ſix thouſand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Iſrael, ſaying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith ſent Naaman my ſervant to thee, that thou mayſt recover him of his leproſy.

7 And it came to paſs when the king of Iſrael had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and ſaid, Am I God, to kill, and to make alive, that this man doth ſend unto me to recover a man of his leproſy? wherefore conſider, I pray you, and ſee how he ſeeketh a quarrel againſt me.

8 ¶ And it was ſo, when Eliſha the man of God had heard that the king of Iſrael had rent his clothes, that he ſent to the king, ſaying, Wherefore haſt thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he ſhall know that there is a prophet in Iſrael.

9 So Naaman came with his horſes, and with his chariot, and ſtood at the door of the houſe of Eliſha.

10 And Eliſha ſent a meſſenger unto him, ſaying, Go and waſh in Jordan ſeven times, and thy fleſh ſhall come again unto thee, and thou ſhalt be clean.

11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and ſaid, Behold, I thought, He will ſurely come out to me, and ſtand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and ſtrike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damaſcus, better than all the waters of Iſrael? may I not waſh in them and be clean? So he turned, and went away in a rage.

13 And his ſervants came near, and ſpake unto him, and ſaid, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do ſome great thing, wouldſt thou not have done it? how much

after the ſervice he had rendred his country, would not be diſregarded at court. The Shunammite then replied, That ſhe dwelt among her own people, ver. 13. The meaning of which expreſſion is, that whatever vexation the inhabitants who lived on the borders of the country might ſuffer from the ſoldiers, ſhe lived quietly among her friends and neighbours; and had no occaſion to ſue to the king or his miniſters for any favour. Unto whom pious people, perhaps, gave that portion which was aſſigned by God for the prieſts, to whom the firſt fruits could not now be carried, they being in the land of Judah. And we ſuppoſe, the ſchools of the prophets might be partly maintained by ſuch means as theſe.

Eliſha then ordered the proviſion he had thus received to be ſet before the people, by whom the ſons of the prophets are meant; upon which his ſervant replied in a ſurpriſe, What ſhall I ſet this before an hundred men? The Apoſtles made much the ſame anſwer to our Bleſſed Saviour, when he intended to feed a greater multitude with leſs food. Had the twenty loaves of barley, which were preſented to Eliſha, been very large, they, together with the ears of corn, might have ſufficed for an hundred men without a miracle; we therefore may conclude them to have been but ſmall; and as they yet were more than ſufficient to ſatisfy ſuch a number of perſons, this fact may juſtly be conſidered as another wonderful work which God thought fit to accompliſh in favour of his ſervants, by the inſtrumentality of Eliſha.

CHAP. V.

1 Naaman, by the report of a captive maid is ſent to Samaria to be cured of his leproſy. 8 Eliſha ſending him to Jordan, cureth him. 15 He refuſing Naaman's gifts, granteth him ſome of the earth. 20 Gehazi, abuſing his maſter's name unto Naaman, is ſmitten with leproſy.

NOW Naaman captain of the hoſt of the king of Syria, was a great man with his maſter, and honourable, becauſe by him the LORD had given deliverance unto Syria: he was alſo a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper.

2 And the Syrians had gone out by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Iſrael a little maid, and ſhe waited on Naamans wife.

3 And ſhe ſaid unto her miſtreſs, Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria: for he would recover him of his leproſy.

4 And one went in, and told his lord, ſaying, Thus and thus ſaid the maid that is of the land of Iſrael.

5 And the king of Syria ſaid, Go to, go, and I will ſend a letter unto the king of Iſrael. And he departed, and took with him ten talents of ſilver, and ſix thouſand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Iſrael, ſaying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith ſent Naaman my ſervant to thee, that thou mayſt recover him of his leproſy.

7 And it came to paſs when the king of Iſrael had read the letter, that he rent his clothes, and ſaid, Am I God, to kill, and to make alive, that this man doth ſend unto me to recover a man of his leproſy? wherefore conſider, I pray you, and ſee how he ſeeketh a quarrel againſt me.

8 ¶ And it was ſo, when Eliſha the man of God had heard that the king of Iſrael had rent his clothes, that he ſent to the king, ſaying, Wherefore haſt thou rent thy clothes? let him come now to me, and he ſhall know that there is a prophet in Iſrael.

9 So Naaman came with his horſes, and with his chariot, and ſtood at the door of the houſe of Eliſha.

10 And Eliſha ſent a meſſenger unto him, ſaying, Go and waſh in Jordan ſeven times, and thy fleſh ſhall come again unto thee, and thou ſhalt be clean.

11 But Naaman was wroth, and went away, and ſaid, Behold, I thought, He will ſurely come out to me, and ſtand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and ſtrike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

12 Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damaſcus, better than all the waters of Iſrael? may I not waſh in them and be clean? So he turned, and went away in a rage.

13 And his ſervants came near, and ſpake unto him, and ſaid, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do ſome great thing, wouldſt thou not have done it? how much rather then, when he ſaith to thee, Waſh and be clean?

14 Then went he down, and dipped himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, according to the ſaying of the man of God: and his fleſh came again like unto the fleſh of a little child, and he was clean.

15 ¶ And he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came and ſtood before him: and he ſaid, Behold, now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Iſrael: now therefore, I pray thee, take a bleſſing of thy ſervant.

16 But he ſaid, As the LORD liveth, before whom I ſtand, I will receive none. And he urged him to take it, but he refuſed.

17 And Naaman ſaid, Shall there not then, I pray then, be given to thy ſervant two mules burden of earth? for thy ſervant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor ſacrifice unto other gods, but unto the LORD.

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy ſervant, that when my maſter goeth into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon: when I bow down my ſelf in the houſe of Rimmon, the LORD pardon thy ſervant in this thing.

19 And he ſaid unto him, Go in peace. So he departed from him a little way.

20 ¶ But Gehazi the ſervant of Eliſha the man of God ſaid, Behold, my maſter hath ſpared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, and take ſomewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman: and when Naaman ſaw him running after him, he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and ſaid, Is all well?

22 And he ſaid, All is well: my maſter hath ſent me, ſaying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of the ſons of the prophets: give them, I pray thee, a talent of ſilver, and two changes of garments.

23 And Naaman ſaid, Be content, take two talents. And he urged him, and bound two talents of ſilver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his ſervants, and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the tower, he took them from their hand, and beſtowed them in the houſe; and he let the men go, and they departed.

25 But he went in, and ſtood before his maſter: and Eliſha ſaid unto him, Whence comeſt thou, Gehazi? And he ſaid, Thy ſervant went no whither.

26 And he ſaid unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and olive-yards, and vineyards, and ſheep, and oxen, and men-ſervants, and maid-ſervants?

27 The leproſy therefore of Naaman ſhall cleave unto thee, and unto thy ſeed for ever. And he went out from his preſence a leper as white as ſnow.

Ver. 1. Now Naaman captain of the hoſt of the king of Syria, was a great man with his maſter, and honourable, becauſe by him the Lord had given deliverance unto Syria; he was alſo a mighty man in valour, but he was a leper.] If the riches and honourable preferments of this world could ſecure their poſſeſſors from the diſtempers which attack the body of men in all parts, and in a thouſand various forms, an indefatigable purſuit of wealth and dignities would ſeem much more rational than it appears at preſent. But alas, we are ſenſible by daily inſtances which occur to our obſervation, that thoſe who enjoy theſe imaginary bleſſings, are not exempted from any of the calamities to which the reſt of human race are ſubject. Naaman is a remarkable example of what we here advance. He was raiſed to one of the firſt employments in the ſtate; being general of the army of Benhadad, king of Syria. He was highly eſteemed by his maſter, and honoured by all the people, having been victorious in the battles he had fought, and thereby cauſed himſelf to be conſidered as the deliverer of Syria. But all the glory and honours he had acquired, were more than counterballanced by the ſhocking diſtemper, which waſted his body, and rendered him an odious ſpectacle to all who beheld him. The Leproſy under which he languiſhed was counted incurable by any natural means, and it eluded all the preſcriptions of the moſt skilful and experienced phyſicians. Travellers, who have ſeen lepers in the eaſt, ſay, That this diſeaſe attacks principally the feet. Proſper Albinus declares it to be a common malady in Egypt: and our learned and accurate countryman Mr. Maundrell, informs us, in his travels from Aleppo to Jeruſalem, that he had ſeen lepers in Paleſtine; and that their feet were ſwelled like thoſe of Elephants; from which ſymptom, and the horrid gaps this diſtemper occaſions in the skin, it is ſuppoſed to have derived its Latin name Elephantiaſis.

The common mark, whereby phyſicians tell us that an inveterate leproſy may be diſcerned, are theſe that follow. It makes the voice hoarſe, like that of a dog who has been barking a long time; and the voice comes through the noſe rather than the mouth. The pulſe of the diſeaſed perſon is ſmall and heavy, ſlow and diſordered. His blood abounds with white corpuſcles of a bright hue, like the ſeeds of Millet. It is all a ſcurfy ſerum, without any of that mixture which is natural to it, ſo that the ſalt which any one puts into it cannot melt. It is ſo dry, that when vinegar is mixed with it, it bubbles up; and is ſo ſtrongly knit together by imperceptible ſhreads, that calcined lead thrown into it, will eaſily ſwim on its ſurface. The urine of a leper is undigeſted, ſettled, aſh-coloured, and thick, and the ſediment of it appears like meal mixed with bran. The face of the unfortunate perſon is like a coal half extinguiſhed, ſhining, unctuous, bloated, and thick ſet with very hard pimples, with kernels round the bottoms of them. His eyes are red and inflamed, and glare like thoſe of a cat; they likewiſe come come forward out of his head, but cannot be moved either to the right or the left. His ears are ſwelled and red, eaten up with ulcers about the root of them, and encompaſſed with ſmall kernels. His noſe ſinks, becauſe the cartilage rots. His noſtrils are open, and the paſſages ſtopped with ulcers at the bottom. His tongue is dry and black, ſwelled and ulcerated, ſhortned and divided by ridges, and beſet with little white pimples. The skin of it is uneven, hard, and inſenſible; and if it be cut, or a hole made in it, inſtead of blood, nothing but a putrified liquor iſſues from it.

The nature and cauſes of a leproſy have been much argued upon. The generality are of opinion, that the cauſe of it is inward, namely, in the blood and humours, and that it does not appear outwardly, till it has corrupted all within. We think it neceſſary to diſtinguiſh two ſorts of leproſies; one proceeding from ſome inward corruption, the other acquired by outward communication with a leprous perſon. Corruption of the blood may be, in different reſpects, the cauſe and effect of a leproſy. It is the cauſe of it, when the blood being inwardly corrupted either by bad diet, or ſome other injurious accident; produces ſuch external effects, as are obſervable in leproſies. It is likewiſe the effect of this diſeaſe, when it is caught by touching any perſon who is infected with it, or any thing belonging to him; for a leproſy is very eaſily communicated, for which reaſon Moſes has taken ſo much precaution to prevent lepers having any intercourſe with perſons in good health. And his care extended even to dead bodies thus infected, directing that they ſhould not be buried with others.

It has been likewiſe thought, that leproſies, and other diſeaſes which have any relation to it, are cauſed by an infinite number of ſmall imperceptible worms, which inſinuate themſelves between the skin and the fleſh; gnaw the epidermis and cuticula, and afterward the extremities of the nerves and fleſh; and there produce all the effects which are to be obſerved in the beginning, progreſs, and fatal completion of this diſtemper.

Learned men have been much divided, with relation to the cure of this dreadful malady. Some affirm that phyſical preparations have power to remove it, even in its worſt ſymptoms, and Voſſius has tranſcribed ſome remedies to this effect, from Dioſcordes, and Pliny the naturaliſt. [Voſſ. de origine & progreſſu idololatriæ lib. 4. cap. 45.] Celſus mentions different kinds of this diſtemper, and declares that thoſe of them which he calls Alphos and Melas, may be eaſily healed; but adds, that the Leuce, another ſpecies of it, is incurable, or at leaſt can never be perfectly removed (Celſ. de Medicina, lib. 5. cap. 28. paragr. 17 and 19.) In a word, this terrible diſtemper has been thought by many, to be beyond the reach of all medicinal preſcriptions; and that God, who chaſtiſed the ſons of men with this devouring and odious deformity, was alone able to heal it. It has likewiſe been remarked, that no leper, either in the Old Teſtament, or the New, is ſaid to have been cured by the art of any phyſician, or by the efficacy of any ſecond cauſe; and that all thoſe whoſe cure is recorded in thoſe Sacred Books, are repreſented as having obtained it by ſome miraculous means. For this reaſon, ſays Dr. Hammond, our bleſſed Saviour, in his anſwer to the meſſenger of John the Baptiſt, joins the cure of the leproſy, with thoſe of the blind and deaf, and even with the reſurrection of perſons from the dead; in order to intimate, that all theſe operations equally depended on the infinite power of him who formed the body of man.

We may naturally ſuppoſe, that Naaman, who was afflicted with this loathſome diſtemper, had recourſe to all that human art could offer for his relief: But his endeavours had hitherto proved ineffectual, and his immenſe riches could not purchaſe him the leaſt mitigation of his malady. For, as on the one hand, our lives would be a complication of miſery and pain, were we never to obtain relief from the creatures; ſo on the other, we ſhould be apt to idolize them, were they always to ſupply us with what we require from them.

While Naaman was far from entertaining any thoughts of applying to the true God for aid, and, perhaps, began to deſpair of his cure, that God, who is frequently found by thoſe who ſought him not, furniſhed him with the means of recovering his health. Some of the Syrian troops had made an incurſion into Paleſtine, and among the reſt of their booty, carried off a young Iſraelite maiden, who was afterward preſented to the wife of Naaman, and waited on her as a ſervant. This damſel being informed of the melancholy condition of Naaman, expreſſed her earneſt wiſh to her miſtreſs, that her Lord were with the prophet, who was then in Samaria, meaning Eliſha: adding, that ſhe was fully aſſured his health would be reſtored to him by that holy man. For though Eliſha had not as yet manifeſted the efficacy of his power with reſpect to any leprous perſon, yet this young Iſraelite was fully perſwaded, that the ſame prophet who had multiplied the widows oil, and raiſed the ſon of the Shunammite from the dead, could as eaſily relieve her maſter from the diſtemper which rendered his life ſo miſerable.

When the Syrian general was informed of what the Hebrew maid had declared, he imparted the particulars to the king, who permitted him to ſet out for Samaria, and furniſhed him with a very preſſing letter to the king of Iſrael. Naaman being now impatient for the promiſed cure, and judging of Eliſha by the prieſts of the Syrian idols; took care to provide himſelf with ten talents of ſilver; ſix thouſand pieces of gold, and ten changes of raiment, ver. 5. hoping that ſo conſiderable a preſent would engage the prophet to work an immediate cure upon him. When he arrived at Samaria, he preſented his maſter's letter to Jehoram, king of Iſrael, and it was couched in the following haughty ſtrain. "Now when this letter is come "unto thee, Behold I have therewith ſent Naaman my "ſervant to thee, that thou mayſt recover him of his le-"proſy." ver. 6. Was this the humble Ben-hadad, who a few years before had implored the mercy of Ahab, in the moſt abject manner? And was it poſſible for him to forget thoſe viciſſitudes by which heaven can make the proudeſt monarchs ſenſible they are but men? The diſtance between a throne of majeſty, in a ſumptuous palace, and a weight of ſhackles in a dungeon, is far from being infinite. The children of men ought always to be humble in proſperity; leſt any future calamities which their pride may draw upon them, ſhould cauſe them to be inſulted in their turn, by thoſe whom they have treated with indignity.

The letter of Ben-hadad was not only arrogant, but likewiſe unjuſt: for could he poſſibly imagine, that Jehoram was inveſted with the power of miracles? Or could he even compel Eliſha to cure the Syrian general, if that prophet had not thought it conſiſtent with the honour of God?

The reading of this letter ſtruck a terror into the ſoul of Jehoram, who was already intimidated by the hoſtilities of the Syrians. He accordingly cried out amidſt his conſternation, Am I a God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth ſend unto me, to recover a man of his leproſy? When princes are only intent to receive honours, they have often been willing to be treated as gods; and have even exacted that ſervile impiety from their ſubjects: but when the laws of nature are to be ſuſpended, they are compelled to acknowledge their audacious vanity, and that in reality they are but weak and imperfect men. Thus Herod Agrippa, who had ſuffered a fawning crowd, to dignify him with the title of a god, no ſooner perceived himſelf ſtruck by the arm of the Almighty, whoſe glory he had uſurped in ſo inſolent a manner, than he cried out to thoſe who ſurrounded his throne. "Behold the man "whom you flattered with immortality: behold him now "expiring: and let this inevitable fate, to which I muſt "now ſubmit, convince you of the falſhood you have ut-"tered. Joſeph. Antiq. Jud. lib. 15. cap. 7.

The king of Iſrael was perſuaded that Benhadad only ſought a pretext to quarrel with him, and renew the former hoſtilities againſt his dominions. The moſt ambitious conquerors are deſirous of being thought juſt in their proceedings, but the manifeſtos they publiſh on thoſe occaſions, are frequently the moſt glaring proofs they can well give of their rapacious and deſtructive deſigns.

Whatever might be the intention of Ben-hadad, it is certain that the king of Iſrael was greatly alarmed at his conduct. But while he was tortured by his fears, the prophet Eliſha, who was guided by the ſpirit of that God to whom all things are poſſible, ſent a meſſenger to comfort him, and to aſſure him that he needed only to ſend Naaman to him; who ſhould be made ſenſible by happy experience, that a prophet of the true God reſided in Iſrael. This ſhould have been Jehoram's firſt proceeding, had his faith and piety been greater than they were. For he was not unacquainted with the prodigies that had been wrought by Eliſha, and he ought to have been perſuaded, that God who favoured this prophet with ſuch a miraculous power, would, if he thought fit, enable him to cure the leproſy of Naaman.

Eliſha's meſſage was very grateful to the king of Iſrael, and to the Syrian general, who immediately departed with his whole retinue, and ſtopped at the door of Eliſha's houſe, in a full perſuaſion that the prophet would think himſelf highly honoured by a viſit from a perſon of his rank, and that he would certainly come in perſon to receive him, and work an immediate cure upon him. He, however, was diſappointed in his expectations; for Eliſha, inſtead of preſenting himſelf before him, ſent the following meſſage to him by his ſervant; "Go, and waſh in Jor-"dan ſeven times, and thy fleſh ſhall come again unto "thee, and thou ſhalt be clean," ver. 10. The prophet acted in this manner, not from any diſpoſition of pride, or an apprehenſion of being infected by the leproſy of Naaman, but meerly by the influence of the Sacred Spirit within him, that the faith of the Syrian might be proved on this occaſion. Naaman, however, thought himſelf treated in a very contemptuous manner, and was highly offended, not only at the prophet's neglect to come out and ſalute him, but likewiſe at the preſcription he had ordered for his cure. He thought it ridiculous to go and bathe himſelf in Jordan, whoſe waters he imagined could not have more efficacy than thoſe of his own country. Thus men ſlight common and eaſy things, and admire thoſe which are rare and difficult; and, in their paſſion, reject that which God himſelf propounds to them, if it be not agreeable to their irregular humours and conceits. In which paſſion if Naaman had continued, he had been a leper to his dying day.

Ver. 12. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damaſcus, better than all the rivers of Iſrael? May I not waſh in them and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage.] Naaman did not conſider, that he was now under the direction of a prophet, who was ſuppoſed to ſpeak from God, and might conſequently preſcribe what method ſoever the Divine Majeſty ſhould pleaſe to order for his cure, which was to proceed from his infinite power alone, and not from the virtue of any water whatſoever.

Damaſcus, and the rivers that water it, are ſo much celebrated in hiſtory, that we think a ſhort account of them may properly be introduced here.

It is generally agreed, that Uz, the eldeſt ſon of Aram, who was the fifth ſon of Shem, built Damaſcus, and gave name to the country about that city; but which is different from the land of Uz, where Job dwelt, and which lay toward Edom. This city is one of the moſt venerable for antiquity in the whole world, and was the birth-place of Eliezer, Abraham's ſteward; nor has it been leſs conſiderable on account of its ſtrength and greatneſs, being for a long time the capital of Syria, and the reſidence of the Syrian kings, mentioned in the Old Teſtament. To paſs by other titles, it was ſtiled by Julian, the eye of the whole eaſt, (Julian. epiſt. 24.) and we think the account given of it by Mr. Maundrell well worth inſerting, as being the lateſt, and written by one who himſelf had ſeen the place, and was in all reſpects qualified to give a moſt juſt deſcription of it.

This author then acquaints us, that no place in the world can promiſe the beholder, at a diſtance, greater voluptuouſneſs; inſomuch that the Turks have a tradition, that their prophet Mohammed coming near Damaſcus, took his ſtation on a certain precipice for ſome time, in order to view the city; and when he had conſidered the raviſhing beauty and delightfulneſs of it, he would not tempt his frailty by entring into it; but inſtantly departed, with this reflection upon it, that there was but one Paradiſe deſigned for man, and for his part he was reſolved not to take his in this world.

Damaſcus is ſituated in a level plain of ſo great an extent, that you can but juſt diſcern the mountains which compaſs it on the farther ſide. It ſtands on the weſt ſide of the plain, not above two miles in diſtance from the place where the river Barrady breaks out from between the mountains. The city it ſelf is of a long ſtrait figure, its ends pointing near north eaſt, and ſouth weſt. It is very ſlender in the middle, but ſwells bigger at each end, eſpecially at that to the north eaſt. In its length, as far as I could gueſs by my eye, ſays Mr. Maundrell, it may extend near two miles. It is thick ſet with moſchs and ſteeples, the uſual ornaments of the Turkiſh cities, and is encompaſſed with gardens, extending no leſs, according to common eſtimation, than thirty miles round, which makes it look like a noble city in a vaſt wood. The gardens are planted thick with fruit-trees of all kinds, kept freſh and verdant by the waters of Barrady. A great number of turrets, ſteeples, and ſummer-houſes, ſhoot up among the green boughs, and may be conceived to add no ſmall advantage and beauty to the proſpect. On the north ſide of this vaſt wood, is a place called Solkees, where the moſt beautiful ſummer-houſes and gardens are to be found.

The greateſt part of this pleaſantneſs and fertility proceeds from the waters of Barrady, which ſupply both the gardens and the city in great abundance. This river, as ſoon as it iſſues out from between the cleft of the mountain into the plain, is immediately divided into three ſtreams, of which the middlemoſt and largeſt runs directly to Damaſcus, through a ſpacious open field, called Ager Damaſcenus, and is diſtributed to all the ciſterns and fountains of the city. The other two (which ſeem to be the work of art) are drawn round, one to the right hand, the other to the left, on the borders of the gardens, into which they are let, as they paſs along, by little currents, and ſo diſperſed over the vaſt wood. Inſomuch, that every garden has a fine quick ſtream running through it, which not only waters the place, but is alſo improved into fountains and other water-works, very delightful, tho' not contrived with that variety of exquiſite art which is uſed in Chriſtendom.

Barrady being thus divided, is almoſt wholly drunk up by the city and gardens. What ſmall part of it eſcapes, is united (as Mr. Maundrell was informed) in one channel again, on the ſouth eaſt ſide of the city; and after about three or four hours courſe, finally loſes it ſelf in a bog, without ever arriving at the ſea.

The Greeks, and from them the Romans, called this river Chryſorrhoas, which ſignifies golden ſtream. But as for Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damaſcus, mentioned 2 Kings v. 12. I could find, ſaith our author, no memory of ſo much as the names remaining. They muſt doubtleſs have been only two branches of the river Barrady, and one of them was probably the ſame ſtream that now runs through the Ager Damaſcenus, directly to the city, and which ſeems, by its ſerpentine courſe, to be a natural channel. The other, continues Mr. Maundrell, I know not well where to find; but it is no wonder, ſeeing they may and do turn and alter the courſes of this river, according to their own convenience and pleaſure.

The garden-walls are of a very ſingular ſtructure: they are built of great pieces of earth, made in the faſhion of brick, and hardened in the ſun. In their dimenſions they are two yards long each, and ſomewhat more than one broad, and half a yard thick. Two rows of theſe, placed edge-way one upon another, make a cheap, expeditious, and, in this dry country, a durable wall.

In paſſing between the gardens, we obſerved their method of ſcouring the channels. They put a great bough of a tree in the water, and faſten it to a yoke of oxen; upon the bough ſits a good weighty fellow, to preſs it down to the bottom, and to drive the oxen. In this equipage the bough is dragged all along the channel, and ſerves at once both to cleanſe the bottom, and alſo to mud and fatten the water, for the greater benefit of the gardens.

The ſtreets of this city are narrow, as is uſual in hot countries; and the houſes are all built on the outſide, of no better a material, than either ſunburnt brick, or Flemiſh wall, daubed over in as coarſe a manner as can be ſeen in the pooreſt cottages. From this dirty way of building, they have this, among other inconveniencies, that upon any violent rain, the whole city becomes as it were a quagmire, by the waſhing of the houſes.

It may be wondered what ſhould induce the people to build in this baſe manner, when they have in the adjacent mountains ſuch plenty of good ſtones for nobler fabricks. I can give no reaſon for it, ſays our author, unleſs this may paſs for ſuch, that thoſe who firſt planted here, finding ſo delicious a ſituation, were in haſte to come to the enjoyenjoyment of it, and therefore nimbly ſet up theſe extemporary habitations; being unwilling to defer their pleaſures ſo long, as whilſt they might erect more magnificent ſtructures: which primitive example their ſucceſſors have followed ever ſince.

But, however, on theſe mud-walls you find the gates and doors adorned with marble portals, carved and inlaid with great beauty and variety. It is an object not a little ſurpriſing to ſee mud and marble, ſtate and ſordidneſs, ſo mingled together.

On the inſide, the houſes diſcover a very different face from what is ſeen without. Here you generally find a large ſquare court beautified with fragrant trees, and marble fountains, and compaſſed round with ſplendid apartments and duans; which latter are a ſort of low ſtages, ſeated in the pleaſanteſt part of the room, and elevated about ſixteen or eighteen inches above the floor. They are ſpread with carpets, and furniſhed all round with bolſters for leaning upon. 'Tis on theſe the Turks eat, ſleep, ſmoak, receive viſits, ſay their prayers, &c. Their whole delight is in lolling on them; and in furniſhing them richly out is their greateſt luxury. They are floored and adorned on the ſides with variety of marble, mixt in Moſaic knots and mazes. The cielings and traves are after the Turkiſh manner, richly painted and gilded. They have generally artificial fountains ſpringing up before them in marble baſons; and as for carpets and cuſhions, are furniſhed out to the height of luxury. Of theſe duans, they have generally ſeveral on all ſides of the court, being placed at ſuch different poinrs, that at one or other of them you may always have either the ſhade or the ſun, which you pleaſe.

Such as I have deſcribed, ſaith Mr. Maundrell, was the houſe of an eminent Turk we went to ſee, and I was told the reſt reſemble the ſame deſcription.

In the next place, we went to ſee the church of St. John Baptiſt, now converted into a moſch, and held too ſacred for Chriſtians to enter. However, we had three ſhort views of it, looking in at three ſeveral gates. Its gates are vaſtly large, and covered with braſs, ſtampt all over with Arab characters, and in ſeveral places with the figure of a chalice, ſuppoſed to be the ancient enſign or arms of the Mamlûks. On the north ſide of the church is a ſpacious court, which ſeemed to be not leſs than one hundred and fifty yards long, and eighty or one hundred broad. It is paved all over, and encloſed on the ſouth ſide by the church, and on the other three ſides by a double cloyſter, ſupported by two rows of granate pillars of the Corinthian Order, exceeding lofty and beautiful.

The church within is ſpacious and lofty, built with three iſles, between which are poliſhed pillars of a ſurpriſing, if not ſurpaſſing beauty. In this church are kept the head of St. John, and ſome other relicts, eſteemed ſo holy, that it is death even for a Turk to preſume to go into the room where they are kept. The Turks have a tradition, that Chriſt is to deſcend into this moſch, at the day of judgment, as Mohammed is to do in that of Jeruſalem.

The caſtle ſtands about two furlongs weſtward from the church. It is a good building, of a Ruſtic manner; in length it is three hundred and forty paces, and in breadth ſomewhat leſs.

As to the Ager Damaſcenus, afore-mentioned, it is a long beautiful meadow, juſt without the city on the weſt ſide. It is divided in the middle by that branch of the river Barrady, which ſupplies the city; and it is taken notice of, becauſe of a tradition which is current here, that Adam was formed of the earth of this field.

The laſt thing Mr. Maundrell tells us that he and his companions went to ſee, was the ſtreet called ſtraight, Acts ix. 11. It is about half a mile in length, running from eaſt to weſt through the city. It being narrow, and the houſes jutting out in ſeveral places on both ſides, you can't have a clear proſpect of its length and ſtraitneſs. In this ſtreet is ſhewn the houſe of Judas, with whom St. Paul lodged; and in the ſame houſe is an old tomb, ſaid to be that of Ananias; but how he ſhould come to be buried here, the Turks cannot tell; however, they have a reverence for his tomb, and maintain a lamp always burning over it.

This is the account given us of Damaſcus by Mr. Maundrell, who likewiſe acquaints us, that it lies near due eaſt from Sidon, and is uſually eſteemed three days journey from it; the road lying over the mountains Libanus and Antilibanus, out of the laſt of which the river Barrady pours down with great rapidity, and with ſo vaſt a body of water, that it abundantly ſupplies all the thirſty gardens, and the city of Damaſcus. It may not be altogether immaterial to ſubjoin here, that from theſe gardens were originally tranſplanted the fruit-tree thence called the Damaſcen, and the roſe for the ſame reaſon called the Damask Roſe. And the branchings of ſilks and linnens, &c. being one of the inventions of the inhabitants of this city, at leaſt theſe ſorts of commodities being firſt brought into our parts of the world from thence, are therefore called by the name of Damasks. But, after all, Damaſcus is not more famous either for its great trade, or fine gardens, than it is for the converſion of St Saul, the great Apoſtle of the Gentiles.

The Arabians call this city Damaſchk, or Demeſchk, or Scham, which is the name of the province whereof Damaſcus is the capital. Several writers have been of opinion, that Cain and Abel dwelt near Damaſcus, and ſome derive the name of Damaſchk, or Damſak, from the Hebrew words dam, blood, and ſak, a righteous perſon, as it were to denote that the place where this city now ſtands was polluted with the blood of Abel.

Ver. 13. And his ſervants came near, and ſpake unto him, and ſaid, My father, if the prophet had bid thee do ſome great thing, wouldſt thou not have done it? How much rather then, when he ſaith to thee, Waſh and be clean?] Happy are they who have ſuch excellent ſervants as theſe, who had the courage to ſpeak the truth to their maſter, and the prudence to order it with all ſubmiſſion and reverence. For, My father, was a title of honour in that country; and they called their lords by that name. Theſe ſervants, perhaps, had heard the young Iſraelite damſel, who waited on Naaman's wife, talk much of the power of Eliſha, which made them deſirous to ſee their maſter comply with his advice. They, therefore, repreſented to him, that it was the advice of a prophet, who was guided by God, in the direction he had now given; and that he had ordered nothing but what might be performed without any trouble or pain. They likewiſe deſired him to conſider, that if the prophet had preſcribed to him the ſevereſt operation, he certainly would have ſubmitted to it for the recovery of his health, and therefore it was unreaſonable not to comply with his direction, when he required him only to go and waſh himſelf in the river Jordan, which he might eaſily do in his way home, without expoſing himſelf to any pain by the experiment.

Naaman acknowledged the reaſonableneſs of his ſervant's advice, which ſhews him to have been a perſon of great diſcretion; who was not in ſuch a rage, but he could hear reaſon, and did not refuſe good counſel even from his ſervants. He then went and bathed himſelf ſeven times in Jordan, and was reſtored to perfect health. God was not ſo angry with him as he himſelf had been with Elijah; but upon his repentance, and conformity to the prophet's directions, vouchſafed him a compleat cure.

The ſurpriſe and joy of Naaman muſt certainly have been inexpreſſible, when he found himſelf delivered from the loathſome diſtemper, which had ſo long embittered all the comforts of his life, and rendered it inſupportable to him. He then directed his thoughts to the hand which had thus operated in his favour, and haſten'd to teſtify his gratitude to God, in the preſence of his prophet.

As ſoon as he was admitted into the apartment of Eliſha, who now no longer refuſed to ſee him, he cried out in a pious tranſport of Soul, "Now I know that there is no "God in all the earth, but in Iſrael," ver. 15. It was impoſſible for him to doubt the reality of the miracle which had been wrought in his own perſon, and muſt have been ſenſible by long experience, that his paſt leproſy was not to be cured by any human skill. It was likewiſe natural for him to conclude, that the waters of Jordan had not the efficacy he had experienced from any natural cauſe, and was therefore convinced that the happy change he now felt within himſelf, was granted to him by the God of Eliſha, whom he now acknowledged to be the Lord of the univerſe, and the only proper object of the homage and adoration of all mankind.

When he had thus expreſſed the faith that prevailed in his ſoul, he was deſirous to teſtify his gratitude to the prophet, by entreating his acceptance of the preſent he then offered him. There are many caſes wherein the ſervants of God may lawfully receive the liberalities which are offered to them for their ſubſiſtence; but there are alſo others, wherein ſuch an acceptance would be criminal. They are not to traffic in things that are ſacred, or to inſiſt upon any mercenary recompence for performing their proper functions. This is a conduct which degrades religion, and cauſes thoſe Eccleſiaſtics who purſue it to be conſidered as mean and ſelf-intereſted perſons, who are only ſolicitous after gain, inſtead of being attentive to the ſalvation of mankind, and the glory of their great Maſter.

Eliſha was not to be enſnared by any temptations of this nature; and was altogether diſintereſted and zealous for the honour of the God he worſhipped. He accordingly gave Naaman to underſtand, that ſuch miraculous cures as he had experienced, were not to be purchaſed, and that the prophets of the true God differed in every reſpect from the prieſts of pagan idols. Theſe latter received preſents, but wrought no cures, whereas the others reſtored health to the diſeaſed, without any other view than to cauſe truth to triumph over error, and to gain ſouls to God.

Ver. 17. And Naaman ſaid, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy ſervant two mules burden of earth? for thy ſervant will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor ſacrifice unto other gods, but unto the Lord.] Naaman judged it reaſonable to have an altar out of God's land, becauſe he was now ſenſible, that the Divine Majeſty dwelt peculiarly in Iſrael. And tho' he might have taken enough in his way home, yet he deſired it as a gift from the prophet; imagining, perhaps, that he would infuſe a greater vertue into it, by his bleſſing, as he had done with reſpect to the waters of Jordan. Ralbag therefore thinks, that Naaman deſired to have this earth out of Eliſha's houſe; and, Abarbinel ſays, from under his very feet in the place where he ſtood; of which, however, there is no certainty. But it is evident, that he deſired to receive it from the prophet, who had convinced him there was no God like to his; who had ſuch unlimited power, and rendered men ſo virtuous, as to be above the love of money.

Ver. 18. In this thing the Lord pardon thy ſervant, that when my maſter goeth into the houſe of Rimmon to worſhip there, and he leaneth on my hand, and I bow myſelf in the houſe, &c.] Naaman hoped he might, without offence to the Divine Majeſty, whom alone he reſolved to worſhip for the future, keep the great office he had under the king, his maſter, and conſequently bow himſelf when he ſupported him in the temple of Rimmon: He who ſees into the hearts of men, knowing it was no intended act of worſhip to that idol; but only a neceſſary reſpect for his maſter. An Iſraelite, indeed, was forbidden to bow before an idol, whatever his mind or intention might be in that act; but this law did not extend to a ſtranger. Therefore when Naaman went into the temple, not of his own accord, but meerly to wait upon his maſter, and perform the duty of his office; and as he likewiſe profeſſed himſelf a worſhipper of the moſt High God alone, out of whoſe land he brought earth, and ſacrificed only upon the altar made of it; all, he thought, might underſtand, he did not worſhip Rimmon, but only paid his reſpects to the king, when he bowed with him.

The Syrians had many idols among them of very ancient repute; among whom we may reckon Rimmon, to whom a temple was erected in Damaſcus; and he ſeems to have been the principal god of Damaſcene. Rimmon, in Hebrew, ſignifies a pomegranate; and ſome have been inclined from hence to think, that this Heathen deity was Venus, to whom ſuch fruit was ſacred. Scaliger, however, takes Rimmon to be Jupiter the thunderer; but our learned Selden will have it to be Elion, or the god moſt high of the Phœnicians; and he derives the name Rimmon from rum, which ſignifies high, or lofty. Whence Heſychius declares, that ὁ Ραμὰς ſignifies ὕψιστος Θεὸς, the moſt high God.

Ver. 19. And he ſaid unto him, Go in peace] The prophet bid him not be uneaſy at his being obliged to attend the king his maſter to the temple of Rimmon; ſince he did not offend againſt the law of God, which was not to bind foreigners like himſelf. Some of the Jews, however, think, that theſe words, Go in peace, relate to the preceding verſe, and mean, that Naaman need not trouble himſelf about carrying earth with him out of the land of Iſrael, to make an altar; and ſo left this matter of bowing in the houſe of Rimmon undetermined. And no leſs a perſon than Bochart hath a large diſſertation on this whole affair, wherein he endeavours to defend the opinion of thoſe who think Naaman begs pardon for what he had done in times paſt, not for what he ſhould continue to do; and renders the words in ver. 18, (as Dr. Lightfoot alſo doth) when I have bowed, &c. But this ſeems altogether improbable; for then he would not have mentioned what he did as the king's ſervant; but only the idolatry he himſelf had committed in worſhipping Rimmon. Beſide, the Oriental Verſions, as well as the Greek and the Vulgate, and the Hebrew doctors generally, as well as Chriſtian interpreters, underſtand it as we do, that he ſpeaks of the future act of bowing; which being only a civil action, and he declaring himſelf publicly, to be a worſhipper only of the God of Iſrael, he hoped would not be imputed to him as a ſin. And ſo the famous Buxtorf, in a letter to Hackſpan ſaith, omnes quotquot vidi interpretes referunt ad futurum, &c. "All the interpreters I have "ſeen refer this paſſage to the future, and not to the time "paſt: And ſo doth the Chaldee paraphraſt himſelf."

Ver. 20. But Gehazi the ſervant of Eliſha the man of God, ſaid, Behold, my maſter hath ſpared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought: but as the Lord liveth, I will run after him, and take ſomewhat of him.] Naaman having received ſo favourable an anſwer, departed with a heart full of gratitude to the God of Iſrael, and reſpect to his illuſtrious prophet. But Gehazi the ſervant of Eliſha, who was altogether as ſordid and avaricious, as his maſter was generous and diſintereſted, could not bear that ſo favourable an opportunity, as he thought it, of receiving a rich preſent, ſhould be thus neglected. He therefore ran after Naaman, who ſeeing him approach with ſo much precipitation, imagined he himſelf had committed ſome error, and therefore enquired of him, with an air of impatience, whether all was well? ver. 21. Gehazi ſoon gave him ſatisfaction in that particular, and then joining falſhood to avarice, he, in his maſter's name, deſired Naaman, to ſend him a talent of ſilver, and two changes of raiment, that he might relieve the neceſſities of two ſons of the prophets, who were then with him. This was the firſt fruit of Gehazi's covetouſneſs, which put him upon inventing ſuch an infamous ſlander on his maſter. For why ſhould Eliſha deſire ſo much ſilver for two young ſcholars? This proceeding likewiſe might tempt Naaman to think, that tho' the prophet publicly refuſed a preſent from him, yet he ſecretly deſired it. The Syrian commander, however, was ſo generous as to give the ſervant of Eliſha double the ſum he requeſted of him, and likewiſe the changes of apparel; ordering two perſons of his own retinue, to carry this preſent before Gehazi, who, we ſuppoſe, was forward enough to congratulate himſelf on the ſucceſs of his ſtratagem. In their return toward Samaria, they came to a private place, or, as others will have it, to the eminence on which Samaria was built, and Gehazi being unwilling to be ſeen with the two domeſtics of Naaman, thought it proper to eaſe them of their burden, and ſend them back to their lord; after which he depoſited the money and apparel, in a houſe where the people who lived in it were ready to oblige him on this occaſion.

He then returned to his maſter's houſe, and had the confidence to preſent himſelf before the prophet, in as unconcerned a manner as if he had not been guilty of any crime, or at leaſt was fully ſecured from all diſcovery. Eliſha then asked him whence he came? Upon which his ſervant, as if he had been deſtitute of reaſon as well as virtue, replied, that he had not been abſent from the houſe upon any occaſion. But this impious endeavour to deceive the Spirit of God, whoſe miniſter Eliſha was, ſoon ended in his confuſion.

Ver. 26. And he ſaid unto him, Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee?] Thou wicked and perfidious ſervant, did not God repreſent to my mind, as if I had been actually preſent, in what manner thou didſt haſten after the Syrian, and and how he deſcended from his chariot to meet thee? Canſt thou think I am ignorant of what thou ſaidſt to him, and what he gave thee? For Eliſha undoubtedly recited all that paſſed between them, to convince his ſervant of his folly in thinking to impoſe upon him.

——Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and olive-yards, and vine-yards, and ſheep, and oxen, and men-ſervants, and maid-ſervants?] Which Gehazi intended to purchaſe with the two talents: But at a very unſeaſonable time, when the nation, for their ſins, were in danger of being carried captive out of their land.

Ver. 27. The leproſy therefore of Naaman ſhall cleave unto thee, and unto thy ſeed for ever. And he went out from his preſence a leper as white as ſnow.] The Divine Majeſty, by whom the knowledge of Gehazi's wicked conduct had been imparted to the prophet, now authorized him to puniſh that treacherous ſervant according to his demerit. The ſhameful avarice of this guilty man, his infidelity to his maſter, and the ſcandalous falſhoods to which he had recourſe, firſt, for the accompliſhment of his deſign, and afterward for its concealment, were of ſo malignant a nature, that his own perſonal puniſhment can hardly be thought too ſevere: But perhaps it may be asked why his poſterity, who were innocent of his crimes, ſhould be involved in the puniſhment, which was then inflicted on him? We hope the following remark will clear up this ſeeming difficulty.

When God compreliends the innocent in the puniſhment of the guilty, the ſtroke extends only to temporal afflictions, and never excludes them from the eternal happineſs of a better ſtate, but when they diſqualify themſelves for it, by their impenitency in this life. The moſt vertuous perſons have many inſtances of miſconduct to mourn over, and tho' they be guiltleſs of the crimes committed by their anceſtors, they ought to conſider, that the ſhare they ſuffer of their puniſhment will be amply recompenſed in another world, if they be duly careful to walk uprightly and humbly before God in this. When the off-ſpring therefore of a guilty parent, are puniſhed for his offences, it will be natural for them to reflect on the odious nature of ſin, which produces ſuch ſad effects; and if they then act with the leaſt reaſon, they will be ſedulous to conduct themſelves as unblameably as poſſible; ſince they may well ſuppoſe, that their own perſonal tranſgreſſions will prove more fatal to them, than thoſe of their parent; and when ſuch a diſpoſition is once created in them, the puniſhment they ſuffer for an anceſtor's crimes, may juſtly be conſidered as a bleſſing.

We ſhall conclude our remarks on this chapter with obſerving, that the puniſhment which was thus inflicted on Gehazi, is ſaid to have furniſhed Naaman with an opportunity of diſplaying a noble inſtance of his generoſity, the good effects of which ſubſiſt to this day. For near the walls of Damaſcus, is an hoſpital richly endowed for the reception of lepers, and it is ſaid to have been originally built by Naaman, for the ſervant of Eliſha. CHAP. VI.

1 Eliſha giving leave to the young prophets to enlarge their dwellings, cauſeth iron to ſwim. 8 He diſcloſeth the king of Syria his counſel. 13 The army which was ſent to Dothan to apprehend Eliſha, is ſmitten with blindneſs. 19 Being brought into Samaria, they are diſmiſſed in peace. 24 The famine in Samaria, cauſeth women to eat their own children. 30 The king ſendeth to ſlay Eliſha.

AND the ſons of the prophets ſaid unto Eliſha, Behold now, the Place where we dwell with thee, is too ſtrait for us.

2 Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he anſwered, Go ye.

3 And one ſaid, Be content, I pray thee, and go with thy ſervants. And he anſwered, I will go.

4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, they cut down wood.

5 But as one was felling a Beam, the ax-head fell into the water: and he cried, and ſaid, Alas, maſter, for it was borrowed!

6 And the man of God ſaid, Where fell it? And he ſhewed him the place. And he cut down a ſtick, and caſt it in thither, and the iron did ſwim.

7 Therefore ſaid he, Take it up to thee. And he put out his hand and took it.

8 ¶ Then the king of Syria warred againſt Iſrael, and took counſel with his ſervants, ſaying, in ſuch and ſuch a place ſhall be my camp.

9 And the man of God ſent unto the king of Iſrael, ſaying, Beware that thou paſs not ſuch a place; for thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Iſrael ſent to the place which the man of God told him, and warned him of, and ſaved himſelf there not once nor twice.

11 Therefore the heart of the king of Syria was ſore troubled for this thing, and he called his ſervants, and ſaid unto them, Will ye not ſhew me which of us is for the king of Iſrael?

12 And one of his ſervants ſaid, None, my lord, O king: but Eliſha the prophet, that is in Iſrael, telleth the king of Iſrael the words that thou ſpeakeſt in thy bed-chamber.

13 And he ſaid, Go and ſpy where he is, that I may ſend and fetch him. And it was told him, ſaying, Behold he is in Dothan.

14 Therefore ſent he thither horſes, and chariots, and a great hoſt: and they came by night, and compaſſed the city about.

15 And when the ſervant of the man of God was riſen early, and gone forth, behold, an hoſt compaſſed the city, both with horſes and chariots: and his ſervant ſaid unto him, Alas, my maſter, how ſhall we do?

16 And he anſwered, Fear not: for they that be with us, are more than they that be with them.

17 And Eliſha prayed, and ſaid, LORD, I pray thee, open his eyes, that he may ſee. And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man, and he ſaw: and behold, the mountain was full of horſes, and chariots of fire round about Eliſha.

18 And when they came down to him, Eliſha prayed unto the LORD, and ſaid, Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindneſs.

neſs. And he ſmote them with blindneſs, according to the word of Eliſha.

19 And Eliſha ſaid unto them, This is not the way, neither is this the city: follow me, and I will bring you to the man whom ye ſeek. But he led them to Samaria.

20 And it came to paſs when they were come into Samaria, that Eliſha ſaid, LORD open the eyes of theſe men, that they may ſee. And the LORD opened their eyes, and they ſaw, and behold, they were in the mids of Samaria.

21 And the king of Iſrael ſaid unto Eliſha, when he ſaw them, My father, ſhall I ſmite them? ſhall I ſmite them?

22 And he anſwered, Thou ſhalt not ſmite them: wouldſt thou ſmite them whom thou haſt taken captive with thy ſword, and with thy bow? ſet bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their maſter.

23 And he prepared great proviſion for them: and when they had eaten and drunk, he ſent them away, and they went to their maſter. So the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Iſrael.

24 ¶ And it came to paſs after this, that Ben-hadad king of Syria gathered all his hoſt, and went up and beſieged Samaria.

25 And there was a great famine in Samaria: and behold, they beſieged it, until an aſſes head was ſold for fourſcore pieces of ſilver, and the fourth part of a cab of doves dung for five pieces of ſilver.

26 And as the king of Iſrael was paſſing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, ſaying Help, my lord, O king.

27 And he ſaid, if the LORD do not help thee, whence ſhall I help thee? out of the barn-floor, or out of the wine-preſs.

28 And the king ſaid unto her, What aileth thee? and ſhe anſwered, This woman ſaid unto me, Give thy ſon, that we may eat him to day, and we will eat my ſon to morrow.

29 So we boiled my ſon, and did eat him: and I ſaid unto her on the next day Give thy ſon, that we may eat him: and ſhe hath hid her ſon.

30 ¶ And it came to paſs when the king heard the words of the woman, that he rent his clothes, and he paſſed by upon the wall, and the people looked, and behold, he had ſackcloth within upon his fleſh.

31 Then he ſaid, God do ſo and more alſo to me, if the head of Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat ſhall ſtand on him this day.

32 But Eliſha ſat in his Houſe (and the elders ſat with him) and the king ſent a man from before him: but e're the meſſenger came to him, he ſaid to the elders, See ye how this ſon of a murderer hath ſent to take away mine head? look when the meſſenger cometh, ſhut the door, and hold him faſt at the door: is not the ſound of his maſter's feet behind him?

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the meſſenger came down unto him: and he ſaid, Behold, this evil is of the LORD; what ſhould I wait for the LORD any longer?

Ver. 1. And the ſons of the prophets ſaid unto Eliſha, Behold now, the place where we dwell with thee is too ſtraight for us.] The ſons of the prophets had their colleges ſometimes in cities, as in Beth-el for inſtance; ſometimes in the fields, and ſometimes on mountains. It is probable that the college meant in this verſe, was in the fields, where Eliſha for the preſent, was reſident among thoſe who were trained up there: But their number was ſo much increaſed under ſuch an eminent maſter as Eliſha, that they began to be incommoded for want of room; and yet, as they were under his government, they would not take the liberty to remove to another ſituation without his conſent. They therefore deſired his permiſſion to go to Jordan, in order to ſupply themſelves with timber, to build them a larger habitation; this he granted, and at their requeſt, accompanied them to the bank of that river, where they employed themſelves in cutting down the wood they wanted. But as one of theſe poor induſtrious men was felling a piece of timber, the head of his ax dropt into the water; upon which he expreſſed a great concern to the prophet at the loſs of it; becauſe he had borrowed it of another perſon. Good men are religiouſly careful that none ſhould ſuffer by their kindneſs to them. It likewiſe appears from hence, that as theſe ſons of the prophets wrought with their own hands, in laborious works, ſo ſome of them were but poor, being not furniſhed with the tools neceſſary for their work, but obliged to borrow of others.

Eliſha obſerving the concern of this honeſt and induſtrious perſon at the loſs of his neighbour's ax, ordered him to ſhew him that part of the river into which it fell; which he having done, the prophet threw a ſtick into the water, and the iron, contrary to its nature, ſwam upon the ſurface. God here wrought a double miracle by his prophet, as the Jews repreſent it; for the iron which had ſunk to the bottom of the river, not only roſe up, and floated to the ſtick, but was likewiſe joined to it at its helve; for to what purpoſe, ſay they, could Eliſha caſt the ſtick into the ſtream, if he did not intend it ſhould be a handle to the ax, in the room of that which was broken, when the head flew off?

Ver. 8. Then the king of Syria warred againſt Iſrael, and took counſel with his ſervants, ſaying, In ſuch and ſuch a place ſhall be my camp.] Soon after the return of Naaman to Damaſcus, king Ben-hadad began to form ſome private deſigns againſt Jehoram king of Iſrael; and as it does not appear, that Naaman was employed on this occaſion; ſome have concluded, that he either died, before this expedition was undertaken, or elſe reſigned his poſt, or was diſcharged by his maſter. Mr. Bedford, in his Scripture chronology, p. 627. tells us, without the leaſt heſitation, that Naaman loſt his office of general, for refuſing to worſhip Rimmon; but the argument on which his aſſertion is founded, ſeems to be very weak. For he thinks Naaman was diſplaced becauſe the king of Syria commanded his own army in perſon; to which he adds, that the inexperience of this prince in the function he now exerciſed, was the reaſon of his conſulting the officers of his army, who are called his ſervants, in the verſe before us. But did not Ben-hadad command his army twice in perſon before; once at Samaria, and once in the fatal day of Aphek? Why then ſhould he not command it a third time? And for for what reaſon muſt he be ſo ignorant in military affairs If he committed his army to the conduct of another, in any former expeditions, muſt it be thought that he always did ſo? In a word, what wiſe king ever thought it beneath him to conſult his general officers on all occaſions of any importance? It is certainly wrong in a writer, to be poſitive in matters of palpable darkneſs, and to be fond of an hypotheſis which he has nothing but his own authority to ſupport.

Notwithſtanding all the precautions taken by the king of Syria, and the privacy with which he conducted his hoſtile deſigns, he had the mortification to find them continually fruſtrated, before he could bring them to maturity. He at laſt began to ſuſpect the fidelity of ſome about him; but in order to remove ſo dangerous an impreſſion from his breaſt, he was told, that Eliſha muſt certainly be the perſon who diſconcerted all his meaſures; he being indued with ſuch a wonderful degree of knowledge, that nothing could be concealed from him, tho' tranſacted with the greateſt privacy imaginable. Ben-hadad had heard enough concerning that prophet, from Naaman, to incline him to believe as much, and therefore by a ſtrange abſence of thought reſolved to have him ſeized; as if Eliſha could not as eaſily know this, as he did the other meaſures that were taken againſt Iſrael. The king of Syria being informed, that the prophet was then at Dothan, a town at the diſtance of twelve miles northward from Samaria, detached a ſtrong party of troops thither; and they came by night and ſurrounded the place, that no intelligence might be carried to Samaria. The prophet's ſervant going out early the next morning, was ſtruck with terror to behold the town encompaſſed with horſes and chariots, and immediately acquainted his maſter with what he had ſeen. Eliſha, in order to diſſipate the young man's fears, aſſured him, that their defenders were more numerous than their enemies; and to give him an ocular demonſtration of that truth, he begged of God to open his eyes, that he might ſee in what manner they were protected. The prophet's requeſt was granted, and the ſervant then beheld the mountain filled with horſes and chariots of fire. He ſaw the camp of God, (as the angels are call'd, Gen. xxxii. 2) ready at hand to defend his maſter: Legions of mighty angels, much more numerous and powerful than the Syrian army which encompaſſed the city. The enemy then advancing toward them, Eliſha intreated the Lord to ſmite them with blindneſs, or rather, with ſuch a deception of ſight as might diſqualify them from the execution of their deſign. God granted this ſecond requeſt of his ſervant, upon which he went out to the Syrians, and promiſed to conduct them to the prophet they ſought after. They readily came into this propoſal, and he led them into the very city of Samaria. Here, cry the Jews, was a double miracle accompliſhed; the ſervant of Eliſha ſaw that which appeared to none but his maſter and himſelf; but the Syrians could not diſcern that which was viſible to every one elſe.

The prophet having thus ſucceeded in his deſign, begged of God to open the eyes of the Syrians, which was accordingly done, and they were not a little aſtoniſhed to find themſelves in the midſt of Samaria. The king of Iſrael was as much ſurpriſed, in his turn, to ſee his enemies in his power; and as he was ſenſible that the prophet was the author of this favourable event, he addreſſed himſelf to him in a very reſpectful manner, and he deſired that he might be permitted to put them all to the ſword. But Eliſha, inſtead of conſenting to his requeſt, replied, Wouldſt thou ſmite thoſe whom thou haſt taken captive with thy ſword and thy bow? ver. 22. As much as to ſay, thou ſurely wouldſt not be ſo cruel as in cold blood to kill even thoſe whom thou thy ſelf haſt taken priſoners in a battle. Much more then are theſe to be ſpared, who are not thy captives, but God's: Thou haſt not taken them with thy ſword, or with thy bow, but he hath brought them to thee, and delivered them into thine hand; not that thou may'ſt kill them, but uſe them kindly. The prophet then adviſed him to ſet food before them, and entertain them in a hoſpitable manner, and after that, to ſend them away to their maſter. The king complied with this generous counſel; and when the Syrians, upon their return into their own country, made a report to Ben-hadad of the prophet's power, and the humanity of the king of Iſrael; that prince thought it proper to diſcontinue the war at that time. Joſephus declares, that he only gave over his private deſigns, and now reſolved to wage open war with Jehoram. [Antiq. l. 9. c. 2.] And certain it is, that if he then had any pacific diſpoſition, it did not ſubſiſt long; and he marched againſt Samaria once more This city he beſieged with his whole force, and reduced the inhabitants to ſuch ſtraits for want of proviſions, that an aſs's head was ſold for as many ſhekels as were equal to five pound of our money; and, according to our tranſlation, the fourth part of a cab of doves dung was ſold for five pieces of ſilver, ver. 25. as moſt verſions have rendered the Hebrew word chirionim, by doves dung, they have given commentators a vaſt deal of trouble to find out ſuch a uſe for it as might anſwer this exceſſive price which was given for ſo ſmall a quantity of it, that a cab, or a meaſure which held but ſix eggs, ſhould ſell for above eleven ſhillings. It would be endleſs to mention all their various conjectures, and we prefer the verſion of the learned Bochart, who proves that the word chirionim, ſignifies, among other things, a kind of pea, common in all thoſe countries, and which the Jews in particular, uſed to parch over the fire for food, in the ſame manner as they did their corn. This paſſage therefore, ought to have been rendered thus, and the fourth part of a cab of pulſe for five pieces of ſilver.

How long this ſiege had laſted, is not eaſy to gueſs; but what might increaſe this grievous famine was, that it had begun ſome years before in the land; inſomuch that Eliſha, who timely foreſaw it, ſent his kind hoſteſs the Shunammite, out of the kingdom, chap. viii. 1. to ſeek for food where ſhe could get it; whilſt himſelf continued in the college, and now and then afforded them a miraculous ſupply of food, as we have already ſeen, till the Syrian army forced him into the city.

By this time the extremity to which Samaria was reduced, ſeemed either to have obliterated the memory of all the former ſervices Eliſha had rendered to the king of Iſrael; or, perhaps, cauſed him to be ſuſpected of being ſince gained over to the Syrian intereſt; ſince he ſuffered the city to labour under theſe difficulties, without interpoſing his miraculous power, as he had done in other conjunctures. The king's ſuſpicion at length broke out with unuſual fury, upon the following occaſion. He was taking a melancholly turn round the walls of the city, when a woman came to him, and begged for juſtice againſt another woman whom ſhe had admitted to eat a ſhare of her boiled child, upon condition that when they had made an end of him, her own child ſhould be likewiſe dreſt for food to ſupply their common want; inſtead of doing which, that woman had now hid her child, and refuſed to let the other partake of it. Such a ſhocking ſtory, accompanied with all the tokens of deſpair, could not but fill the diſtreſſed monarch with the utmoſt horror; he rent his clothes, and diſcovered the ſackcloth which was under them; and not knowing how to vent his grief otherwiſe, he ſwore that the head of Eliſha ſhould pay for the diſtreſs of the people; and immediately ſent an officer to take it off. The prophet, however, was aware of this barbarous deſign, and was complaining of the king's cruelty to the elders of Iſrael, who were at his houſe juſt as the meſſenger of death was entring it. Eliſha found means to have him ſtopped at the door till the king himſelf appeared; and the prophet then repreſented to him the unreaſonableneſs of puniſhing an innocent perſon, for a calamity which was ſent from above. The text, however, is ſomewhat obſcure here: the words of which run literally thus: "And behold the meſſenger came down unto "him, and he (but whether the prophet, or the meſſen-"ger, or the king, is not eaſy to determine) ſaid, Lo! "this judgment is from the Lord; and what, or why, "ſhould I wait any longer for the Lord?" They ſeem to have been the language of a perſon in deſpair, and to have been rather ſpoken by Jehoram, with this implication, "If it be true that this evil, or this famine, is ſent "us from the Lord, it is in vain to wait any longer for a "deliverance from him." Perhaps the king had deſigned, before the unnatural affair with reſpect to the two mothers and the child happened, to have ſurrendered the city to the king of Syria, and had been diſſuaded from it by Eliſha, upon his promiſe of ſome ſpeedy relief. But when he ſaw the city reduced to ſuch dreadful circumſtances, he upbraids Eliſha as the cauſe of them. "Has God, ſaid

" he, reduced us to ſuch extremities, that mothers are " compelled to eat their own children, and wouldſt thou " ſtill flatter me with vain hopes of relief, till all my ſub- " jects are cut off by hunger and miſery, when I might " and ought to have ſaved their lives by a timely ſur- " render?" Or, the words of the text may be thus interpreted, (taking the former part of them to be ſpoken by the prophet, and the latter by the king.) And he ſaid, that is, the prophet ſaid, acknowledge the hand of God in this evil, which comes from him alone. To which the king replied, And what can I expect from the Lord, but ſuch plagues as theſe? No, rejoins Eliſha, in the firſt words of the next chapter, the inhabitants ſhall have ſufficient plenty here to-morrow.

CHAP. VII.

1 Eliſha propheſieth incredible plenty in Samaria. 3 Four lepers venturing on the hoſt of the Syrians, bring tidings of their flight. 22 The king finding by ſpies the news to be true, ſpoileth the tents of the Syrians. 17 The lord, who would not believe the propheſy of plenty, having the charge of the gate, is trodden to death in the preſs.

THEN Eliſha ſaid, Hear ye the word of the LORD, Thus ſaith the LORD, To morrow about this time ſhall a meaſure of fine flour be ſold for a ſhekel, and two meaſures of barley for a ſhekel, in the gate of Samaria.

2 Then a lord on whoſe hand the king leaned, anſwered the man of God, and ſaid, Behold, if the LORD would make windows in heaven, might this thing be? And he ſaid, Behold, thou ſhalt ſee it with thine eyes, but ſhalt not eat thereof.

3 ¶ And there were four leprous men at the entring in of the gate: and they ſaid one to another, Why ſit we here until we die?

4 If we ſay we will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we ſhall die there: and if we ſit ſtill here, we die alſo. Now therefore come and let us fall unto the hoſt of the Syrians: if they ſave us alive, we ſhall live; and if they kill us, we ſhall but die.

5 And they roſe up in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermoſt part of the camp of Syria, behold, there was no man there.

6 For the LORD had made the hoſt of the Syrians to hear a noiſe of chariots, and a noiſe of horſes, even the noiſe of a great hoſt: and they ſaid one to another, Lo, the king of Iſrael hath hired againſt us the kings of the Hittites, and the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.

7 Wherefore they aroſe and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and their horſes, and their aſſes, even the camp as it was, and fled for their life.

8 And when theſe lepers came to the uttermoſt parts of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence ſilver, and gold, and raiment, and went and hid it; and came again, and entred into another tent, and carried thence alſo, and went and hid it.

9 Then they ſaid one to another, We do not well: this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, ſome miſchief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the kings houſhould.

10 So they came, and called unto the porter of the city: and they told them, ſaying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and behold, there was no man there, neither voice of man, but horſes tied, and aſſes tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters, and they told it to the kings houſe within.

12 ¶ And the king aroſe in the night, and ſaid unto his ſervants, I will now ſhew you what the Syrians have done to us: they know that we be hungry, therefore are they gone out of the camp, to hide themſelves in the field, ſaying, When they come out of the city, we ſhall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And one of his ſervants anſwered and ſaid, Let ſome take, I pray thee, five of the horſes that remain, which are left in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Iſrael that are left in it: behold, I ſay, they are even as all the multitude of the Iſraelites that are conſumed) and let us ſend and ſee.

14 They took therefore two chariot-horſes, and the king ſent after the hoſt of the Syrians, ſaying, Go and ſee.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan, and lo, all the way was full of garments and veſſels, which the Syrians had caſt away in their haſte: and the meſſengers returned, and told the king.

16 And the people went out, and ſpoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a meaſure of fine flour was ſold for a ſhekel, and two meaſures of barley for a ſhekel, according to the word of the LORD.

17 ¶ And the king appointed the lord on whoſe hand he leaned, to have the charge of the gate: and the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had ſaid, who ſpake when the king came down to him.

18 And it came to paſs as the man of God had ſpoken to the king, ſaying, Two meaſures of barley for a ſhekel, and a meaſure ſure of fine flour for a ſhekel, ſhall be to morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria:

19 And that lord anſwered the man of God, and ſaid, Now, behold, if the LORD ſhould make windows in heaven, might ſuch a thing be? And he ſaid, Behold, thou ſhalt ſee it with thine eyes, but ſhalt not eat thereof.

20. And it ſo fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

Ver. 1. Then Eliſha ſaid, Here ye the word of the Lord, Thus ſaith the Lord, To-morrow about this time ſhall a meaſure of fine flour be ſold for a ſhekel, and two meaſures of barley for a ſhekel, in the gate of Samaria.] The king of Iſrael having vented his indignation againſt Eliſha, for the extremities to which the famine had reduced the city of Samaria, the holy prophet endeavoured to comfort him, and the people, who were quite ſpent and faint, with a ſolemn promiſe in the name of God; that the next day about that time, fine flour and barley would be as cheap, as they were then dear and ſcarce. A meaſure, ſaid he, of fine flour, (which is about an Engliſh peck) ſhall be ſold for a ſhekel, (or fifteen pence) and double that quantity of barley for the ſame price. It was difficult for the diſtreſſed Samaritans to credit a prophecy which ſeemed ſo contradictory to all reaſon and probability. One of the king's great officers hereupon replied, Were the Lord to open the cataracts of heaven, and ſhower down proviſions, would even thoſe be ſufficient to ſupply the cravings of ſuch a famiſhed multitude? This incredulity coſt him dear, for Eliſha immediately aſſured him, that his own eyes ſhould ſee the promiſed plenty, but that he himſelf ſhould not partake of it; and the prediction was accompliſhed in the following manner.

Four leprous perſons, who lodged on the outſide of the gate, and whom the Jews, in Gemara Sanhedrin, p. 416. Edit. J. Cóch. ſay were Gehazi, the late ſervant of Eliſha, and his three ſons, were deliberating that very night how they ſhould diſpoſe of themſelves, in the calamitous condition to which they were reduced. They were excluded by the Moſaic law from all commerce with their own countrymen; but had there been no ſuch law, yet what temptation could they have, for entring a city whoſe inhabitants were on the point of periſhing by famine? They therefore encouraged one another to venture into the Syrian camp, and deliver themſelves up to the enemy, who perhaps might pity their condition, or at the worſt could but kill them, which they thought far more eligible than to pine away with hunger. This then they reſolved upon, as the beſt expedient; but when they came to the camp, they were extremely ſurprized to find the tents full of proviſions and baggage, but empty of inhabitants; for God had ſtruck the Syrian army with a general terror, by cauſing them to hear the ſound of chariots and horſes, reſembling the noiſe of a mighty army marching in military array, and ready to ruſh upon them. They therefore concluded, that Jehoram had hired the kings of the Hittites and Egypt to come to his relief; the apprehenſion of which ſo terrified Ben-hadad and all his troops, that they fled from their camp with unſpeakable precipitation, leaving their tents, horſes, and all their baggage behind them.

Who thoſe imaginary auxiliaries, the kings of the Hittites, ſhould be, ſeems very uncertain. Thoſe of the Canaanites who once dwelt about Hebron and Beerſheba, and were diſtinguiſhed by the name of Hittites, had been rooted out by the Iſraelites; but perhaps the ſhatter'd remains of this people fled and ſettled themſelves in ſome neighbouring country, where, in proceſs of time, they grew populous, and the ſeveral cantons of them were governed by princes of their own. Joſephus calls them the kings of the iſlands, as if Chittim were the ſame with Cetim, by which latter name all iſles, ſaith he, are called. But of what particular kings of iſlands the Syrians could then be apprehenſive, is above our capacity to determine.

The lepers finding themſelves ſo unexpectedly maſters of the enemies camp, began to ſatisfy their hunger with what they found at hand; after which they ventured farther into the camp, and found it ſtill the ſame. So favourable an opportunity of enriching themſelves, they thought was not to be neglected, and they accordingly carried off a large quantity of gold and ſilver, which they hid in ſome private place. But when they began to conſider how injurious they all this while were to the poor inhabitants of Samaria, in concealing theſe good tidings from them, they went to the gate of the city, and acquainted the guards with the ſtate of the Syrian camp. The king, as ſoon as he was acquainted with the particulars, ſuſpected the whole to be a ſtratagem contrived by the enemy to entice him out of the city; but whilſt he was irreſolute in what manner to proceed, one of his ſervants adviſed him to the following effect. "Let ſome take, "I pray thee, five of the horſes that remain, which are "left in the city (behold they are all as the multitude "of Iſrael that are left in it: behold, I ſay, they are even "as all the multitude of the Iſraelites that are conſumed) "and let us ſend and ſee, ver. 13." The ſenſe of which is this; We are now almoſt conſumed with hunger, and muſt ſhortly periſh like the reſt of the Iſraelites and horſes, whom the famine has already deſtroyed. Therefore if theſe few horſes and men which I now adviſe may be ſent to the camp, ſhould happen to be taken by the Syrians, we ſhall ſuſtain no great loſs, ſince they muſt certainly periſh in a very ſhort time, if they remain in Samaria.

The king approved of this counſel, and upon his ſending a party to examine farther into the matter, found that the Syrians were really fled in ſo much conſternation and diſorder, that they had left their tents, horſes, and baggage behind them; and that all the way, as far as Jordan, was ſtrewed with the garments which they had caſt away, to facilitate their flight.

As ſoon as theſe meſſengers had made their report to the king of what they had ſeen, the almoſt ſtarved inhabitants of Samaria flocked out of the city, to plunder the tents of the Syrians, where they found ſuch a prodigious quantity of proviſions, that meal and barley were ſold in the city at the ſame price Eliſha had foretold the king. And, at the ſame time, the other part of his prophecy, with relation to the incredulous nobleman, was exactly accompliſhed. For the king having commanded him to take charge of the city gate, to prevent any diſorders which might happen on that occaſion; he, notwithſtanding all his care, was trodden to death by the crowding people; ſo that he ſaw the plenty which the prophet had predicted, but did not live to enjoy any part of it.

This miracle was wrought, in order to make it evident to the Syrians, and all the world, that the God of Iſrael was the only true God; and to encourage a ſmall perſecuted remnant in that land to perſevere in his ſacred worſhip, to which they had hitherto adhered under ſo many difficulties.

It is impoſſible, ſaith St. Ambroſe, not to admire the wiſdom and power of God, in the wonderful events which are here ſet down; when we ſee that all contingent futurities are preſent with him, and which he diſcovers when ever he pleaſes to his ſervants, as if they had been already tranſacted. We ſee him here ſaving Samaria in a miraculous manner, and alone fighting againſt her enemies, whom he ſtrikes with a general conſternation, making them fly for their lives when none purſued them. We ſee a city delivered, even before its inhabitants were aware of it. Four lepers, whom Eliſha had not healed, tho' he cured a Syrian idolater, were appointed by God to publiſh this deliverance. And when all the people were tranſported with joy for this their unexpected preſervation, one great man is trodden to death by them, as they crowded through the gate to plunder the Syrian camp; that he might teach us, by his tragical end, how dangerous it is to entertain too high thoughts of the power of man, and too mean conceptions of the omnipotence of God; and that we affront the Divine Majeſty, when we diſbelieve the truth uttered by the mouth of his ſervants, whom we cannot deſpiſe, without deſpiſing him who ſends them.

CHAP.

CHAP. VIII.

1 The Shunammite having left her country ſeven years, to avoid the forewarned famine, for Eliſha's miracle ſake, hath her land reſtored by the king. 7 Hazael being ſent with a preſent by Ben-hadad to Eliſha at Damaſcus, after he had heard the propheſy, killeth his maſter, and ſucceedeth him. 16 Jehoram's wicked reign in Judah. 20 Edom and Libnah revolt. 23 Ahaziah ſucceedeth Jehoram. 25 Ahaziah's wicked reign. 28 He viſiteth Jehoram wounded at Jezreel.

THEN ſpake Eliſha unto the woman (whoſe ſon he had reſtored to life) ſaying, Ariſe, and go thou and thine houſhold, and ſojourn whereſoever thou canſt ſojourn: for the LORD hath called for a famine, and it ſhall alſo come upon the land ſeven years.

2 And the woman aroſe, and did after the ſaying of the man of God: and ſhe went with her houſhould and ſojourned in the land of the Philiſtines ſeven years.

3 And it came to paſs at the ſeven years end, that the woman returned out of the land of the Philiſtines: and ſhe went forth to cry unto the king for her houſe, and for her land.

4 And the king talked with Gehazi the ſervant of the man of God, ſaying, Tell me, I pray thee, all the great things that Eliſha hath done.

5 And it came to paſs as he was telling the king how he had reſtored a dead body to life, that behold, the woman whoſe ſon he had reſtored to life, cried to the king for her houſe, and for her land. And Gehazi ſaid, My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her ſon, whom Eliſha reſtored to life.

6 And when the king asked the woman, ſhe told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain officer, ſaying, Reſtore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field, ſince the day that ſhe left the land, even till now.

7 ¶ And Eliſha came to Damaſcus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was ſick, and it was told him, ſaying, The man of God is come hither.

8 And the king ſaid unto Hazael, Take a preſent in thine hand, and go meet the man of God, and enquire of the LORD by him, ſaying, Shall I recover of this diſeaſe?

9 So Hazael went to meet him, and took a preſent with him, even of every good thing in Damaſcus, forty camels burden, and came and ſtood before him, and ſaid, Thy ſon Ben-hadad king of Syria hath ſent me to thee, ſaying, Shall I recover of this diſeaſe?

10 And Eliſha ſaid unto him, Go, ſay unto him, Thou mayſt certainly recover: howbeit, the LORD hath ſhewed me, that he ſhall ſurely die.

11 And he ſettled his countenance ſtedfaſtly, until he was aſhamed: and the man of God wept.

12 And Hazael ſaid, Why weepeth my lord? And he anſwered, Becauſe I know the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Iſrael: their ſtrong holds wilt thou ſet on fire, and their young men wilt thou ſlay with the ſword, and wilt daſh their children, and rip up their women with child.

13 And Hazael ſaid, But what is thy ſervant a dog, that he ſhould do this great thing? And Eliſha anſwered, The LORD hath ſhewed me that thou ſhalt be king over Syria.

14 So he departed from Eliſha, and came to his maſter, who ſaid to him, What ſaid Eliſha to thee? And he anſwered, He told me that thou ſhouldſt ſurely recover.

15 And it came to paſs on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth, and dipt it in water, and ſpread it on his face, ſo that he died: and Hazael reigned in his ſtead.

16 ¶ And in the fifth year of Joram, the ſon of Ahab king of Iſrael, Jehoſhaphat being then king of Judah, Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah began to reign.

17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned eight years in Jeruſalem.

18 And he walked in the ways of the kings of Iſrael, as did the houſe of Ahab: for the daughter of Ahab was his wife: and he did evil in the ſight of the LORD.

19 Yet the LORD would not deſtroy Judah, for David his ſervants ſake, as he promiſed him to give him alway a light, and to his children.

20 ¶ In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over themſelves.

21 So Joram went over to Zair, and all the chariots with him, and he roſe by night, and ſmote the Edomites which compaſſed him about: and the captains of the chariots and the people fled into their tents.

22 Yet Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. Then Libnah revolted at the ſame time.

23 And the reſt of the acts of Joram, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

24 And

24 And Joram ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and Ahaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

25 ¶ In the twelfth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab king of Iſrael, did Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign.

26 Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jeruſalem; and his mothers name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri king of Iſrael.

27 And he walked in the way of the houſe of Ahab, and did evil in the ſight of the LORD, as did the houſe of Ahab; for he was the ſon-in-law of the houſe of Ahab.

28 ¶ And he went with Joram the ſon of Ahab, to the war againſt Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead, and the Syrians wounded Joram.

29 And king Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel, of the wounds which the Syrians had given him at Ramoth, when he fought againſt Hazael king of Syria: and Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram king of Judah went down to ſee Joram the ſon of Ahab in Jezreel, becauſe he was ſick.

Ver. 1. Then ſpake Eliſha unto the woman, (whoſe ſon he had reſtored to life) ſaying, Ariſe, and go thou and thine houſhold, and ſojourn whereſoever thou canſt ſojourn; for the Lord hath called for a famine, and it ſhall alſo come upon the land ſeven years.] Seven years famine was inflicted on the land of Iſrael, and Dr. Lightfoot reckons it continued from the firſt, to the end of the ſeventh year of Jehoram king of Judah, Jehoram the ſon of Ahab then reigning in Iſrael; tho' for the connexion of the hiſtory, the whole is put together in this chapter, and the ſeveral years are not diſtinguiſhed in the Sacred Text. During the miniſtry of Elijah, there were three years and a half of famine; but the calamity continued as much longer, becauſe the people were ſtill obſtinate and incorrigible, amidſt many judgments, and under the powerful miniſtry of Eliſha, who confirmed his doctrine with many glorious miracles. And Moſes had declared to Iſrael, in the name of the Lord; "If ye walk contrary unto me, I "will bring ſeven times more plagues upon you, accord-"ing to your ſins". Levit. xxvi. 21,—24. Some Jews will have this famine to be the terrible puniſhment ſpoken of by the prophet Joel, who, they fancy, lived in thoſe days. And four years of it, they ſay, was cauſed by noxious creatures, which devoured all the fruits of the earth; and the other three were occaſioned by a drought.

At the beginning of the famine, Eliſha, who retained a grateful remembrance of the kindneſs he had received from the Shunammite, whoſe ſon he had reſtored to life, warned her to provide for her family, by removing to ſome other country where ſhe might find plenty. She accordingly removed to the land of the Philiſtines, but continued there no longer than was neceſſary. For there ſhe could not celebrate the ſabbaths and new moons, as ſhe had done in her own country, among the ſchools of the prophets. Upon her return, ſhe found herſelf kept out of the poſſeſſion of her eſtate, upon which ſhe applied for redreſs to the king, who was then converſing with Gehazi the leper, concerning the miracles Eliſha had wrought. Some of the Jews think, that the king obſerving this perſon, asked him how he came to be leprous? Upon which, Gehazi related to him the hiſtory of Naaman the Syrian; which made the king deſirous to hear all the other miracles Eliſha had performed; but without any intention to be convinced by them, and turn to God. But then here ariſes a queſtion; namely, how Gehazi, who was a leper, could be admitted to ſpeak to the king; perſons in his condition not being ſuffered to come into any company, much leſs into the royal preſence? This difficulty, ſome think, cannot be ſolved without affirming, that this converſation between the king and Gehazi, happened before the latter was diſmiſſed from his maſter's ſervice; ſuch ὑστερολογία, or after relations of what ſhould have been mentioned before, being frequent in ſcripture; and the Jews in Seder Olam Rabba, place this famine before the ſtory of Naaman, which deſtroys what they ſay with reſpect to the occaſion of this conference. But there is no need to aſſert this, for Gehazi might converſe with the king at a due diſtance, as he walked in the field for his recreation; and deſired to be entertained with a particular account of Eliſha's miracles. Thus Naaman converſed with the family of that prophet at a diſtance, and the lepers called to our bleſſed Saviour, as he went along the high-way, Luke xvii. 12.

Gehazi was relating to the king, the manner in which Eliſha had raiſed the child of his Shunammitiſh hoſteſs to life; and of his ſending her and her family to provide for their ſubſiſtence out of the kingdom, during the ſeven years of famine; and had ſcarce finiſhed his relation, when the woman herſelf came, in a fortunate hour, to petition the king for her land, which had been confiſcated during her abſence; and gave Gehazi, who preſently called her to mind, an opportunity of being both an evidence, and an advocate in her favour. So many circumſtances could not but render her ſuit ſucceſsful; but the king granted her even more than ſhe asked, and ordered an officer to accompany her, and ſee that ſhe had not only her land, but likewiſe the ſeven years income of it refunded to her.

Ver 7. And Eliſha came to Damaſcus; and Ben-hadad the king of Syria was ſick, and it was told him, ſaying, The man of God is come hither.] Soon after the deliverance of Samaria from the Syrian army, Eliſha went to Damaſcus, perhaps by a Divine Impulſe, that the Sacred Nature of his prophetic office might be rendered evident by the accompliſhment of a new prediction. Ben-hadad, king of Syria, muſt by this time have been far advanced in years; and whether he had contracted ſome illneſs by the fatigue of his flight from Samaria, and the violence of his ſurprize, or whether his ſpirits were broken by ſo repeated a ſhame, he took to his bed. As he lay ſick, it was told him that the prophet Eliſha was arrived at Damaſcus; whereupon the king ſent Hazael, the captain of his hoſt, with forty camels load of the choiceſt productions of that country, to conſult the prophet concerning his indiſpoſition. Joſephus ſays, the prophet was not yet arrived at Damaſcus, and that Hazael was ſent out to meet him. Others ſuppoſe he was juſt entring into the city; but theſe are immaterial circumſtances. This, however, is certain, that the preſent which Ben-hadad ſent to Eliſha was a very noble one, and the largeneſs of it has cauſed ſome to think, that this holy man was accompanied by many ſons of the prophets: but whether he accepted or refuſed it, is not mentioned by the Sacred Hiſtorian. Hazael accoſted the prophet in the moſt reſpectful manner on the behalf of Ben-hadad, and the anſwer he received from Eliſha was as follows. "Go, ſay unto him, thou mayſt "certainly recover: howbeit, the Lord hath ſhewed me "that he ſhall certainly die," ver. 10. The king's diſeaſe was not of ſuch a nature as would endanger his life; and if he died, as the prophet foreſaw he would, his death muſt proceed from ſome other cauſe, as in fact it did. Eliſha having expreſſed himſelf in this dark manner, fixed his eyes upon Hazael, till he put the man out of countenance. This ſeems to be the moſt natural explication of the words in ver. 11. Hazael beheld the prophet with an eye of veneration, and, as one who was infinitely his ſuperior, and therefore was abaſhed when Eliſha fixed his eyes ſo ſtedfaſtly upon him. The prophet then burſt into tears; at which Hazael being amazed, and humbly deſiring to know the cauſe of that ſorrow, was anſwered by Eliſha, that he was to ſucceed Ben-hadad, and would be a cruel and unrelenting perſecutor of the Iſraelites; that he would ſet their ſtrong holds on fire; ſlay their young men with the ſword; daſh their children, and rip up their women with child. This laſt expreſſes the higheſt degree of inhumanity, and which for there could be no occaſion. For if he did but kill the pregnant women, the children would die with them, without ripping up the unfortunate parents. Therefore the learned Gouſſet, looking on this as an unheard of barbarity, will have the Hebrew word haroth not to ſignify women with child, but caſtles, or fortified places, which Hazael would demoliſh. Tho' he cannot but acknowledge, that the above-mentioned cruelty to the women naturally follows, Slaying their young men, and daſhing their children. And he ſhould have taken notice, that the firſt evil which Eliſha propheſies ſhould be performed by Hazael, is ſetting their ſtrong holds on fire.

Hazael proteſted not to underſtand what the prophet meant, nor could conceive how ſo mean a perſon as himſelf ſhould ever have it in his power to commit ſuch outrages. The text runs thus; But what is thy ſervant, a dog, that he ſhould do this great thing? Whereby moſt have underſtood, that he diſclaimed ſuch barbarity as the prophet foretold of him, but the real meaning of this paſſage is, But what is thy ſervant? truly no better than a dog, alluding to his mean condition, which would never afford him an opportunity to commit thoſe cruelties which none but a prince had power to perpetrate. This explication is confirmed by the prophet's anſwer, that he was to be king of Syria, which follows very naturally; and ſignifies, that how mean ſoever he might then think himſelf, the time would come when regal power would enable him to be the barbarian, the prophet had deſcribed.

Hazael then returned to his maſter, who by his ſolicitous meſſage to Eliſha, unknowingly ſhortned the time of his own life. Hazael flattered him with hopes of recovery, but the next day ſtifled him with a thick cloth dipped in water.

Thus ended the reign of the great Ben-hadad the ſecond, who having adorned Damaſcus with noble ſtructures, as it is ſaid, and added the glory of Syria, was advanced to be a god, and under the ſtyle of Adad or Ader, was conſidered by the Syrians as their moſt glorious and auſpicious deity. This fancied god, and others of the ſame ſtamp, who after him have been complimented with deification, flouriſhed as long as the ancient Syrians were maſters of Damaſcus. But both they and their gods, in great meaſure, ſubmitted to fate, when Syria was conquered and tranſplanted by Tiglath-pileſer.

Adad is alſo called Adod, the king of the gods; and Adad is interpreted one. Selden and Iſaac Voſſius are very nice in deducing the true import of this name, but we ſhall not tranſcribe what they have advanced on this ſubject, becauſe it appears to us, that, according to the Scripture orthography, it ought to be ſpelt Hadad. Joſephus, writing of the great Ben-hadad, the ſecond of that name in the Sacred Books, informs us, that he was honoured with Divine Worſhip, as was alſo his ſucceſſor Hazael. Here we have the firſt account of their deifying Adad, or, as the Scripture ſtyles him, Ben-hadad, who, if we except his ſucceſſor Hazael, was the greateſt prince the ancient Syrians could boaſt of. And we are clearly of opinion, that this celebrated god, Hadad, or Adad, is no other than the deified Ben-hadad; and from thence it appears, that there were Syrian princes of the name of Adad, before they had any deity ſo called. By Adad they meant the ſun, and pictured him with rays darting downward, to expreſs his beneficence, and to ſhew that the chief influence of the Heavens is in the beams of this glorious luminary. This high ſtrain of ſuperſtitious adulation might have ſuited better with Hazael, whoſe reign was a continued ſeries of proſperity, than with Ben-hadad, who was frequently unfortunate: But, as Joſephus tells us, they were both deified, and as Hadad, or Adad, was a name common to all the kings of Syria, as appears both by Scripture, and from Nicholas of Damaſcus. [Apud Joſeph. Antiq. l. viii. c. 6.] It may have been the Hazael of Scripture who was ſo highly revered by the Syrians.

Perhaps Hazael was the chief promoter of this deification of Ben-hadad, in order to cover his own guilt: For he ſeems, by his manner of diſpatching that prince, to have been afraid it ſhould be known that he was the murderer of his maſter.

Ver. 16. And in the fifth year of Joram the ſon of Ahab king of Iſrael, Jehoſhaphat being then king of Judah, Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat king of Judah began to reign.] All the ſeeming contradictions between this verſe, and chap. i. 17. and chap. iii. 1. are thus briefly reconciled by Huetius. Jehoram beginning to reign with his father Jehoſhaphat, in his ſeventeenth year, and Joram king of Iſrael in his eighteenth, the firſt year of Joram king of Iſrael will fall out in the ſecond year of Jehoram king of Judah: Whoſe father dying in the twenty-ſecond year of his reign, Jehoram king of Judah began to reign alone, in the fifth year of Joram king of Iſrael. [Demonſtr. Evang. propos. 4. p. 204.]

Ver. 17. Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned eight years in Jeruſalem.] Dr. Lightfoot obſerving three dates of the beginning of this prince's reign, accounts for them in the following manner. The firſt was, when he was made viceroy with his father Jehoſhaphat, at the time when this latter went out of the land to aſſiſt Ahab king of Iſrael in the recovery of Ramoth-gilead. The ſecond was, when his father accompanied Jehoram king of Iſrael in his expedition againſt Moab; from which time our author thinks the beginning of his reign is fixed here, and in 2 Chron. xxi. 20. For after this time, Jehoſhaphat was ſeldom at Jeruſalem, but abroad, either in his own land, through which he took a progreſs, in order to reduce the people to the true religion; or in Moab, to bring that people into ſubjection, 2 Chron. xix. 20. And laſtly, at his father's death, he was compleatly king of Judah, 2 Chron. xxi. 1. [Harm. of the Evang. Prolegom. ſect. 6.] So that the cleareſt ſolution of the difficulty in the foregoing verſe, conſiſts in allowing three different æras to the commencement of Jehoram's reign. One in the 17th year of Jehoſhaphat, when his father deſigned him to be king. The ſecond in the twenty-third year of his father, when he was crowned; and the laſt when his father died, after he had reigned twenty-five years. Thus Solomon was made king before his father died, and again after his death.

Ver. 18. And he walked in the way of the kings of Iſrael, as did the houſe of Ahab: for the daughter of Ahab was his wife; and he did evil in the ſight of the Lord.] Being ſeduced by his wife Athaliah, the daughter of Ahab, to forſake the religion of his pious father and grandfather. Thus Ahab himſelf was led to the worſhip of Baal by his wife Jezabel. So hazardous is it to marry with idolaters. For this wife of Jehoram, was, in all probability, the author of that cruel policy of murdering all his brethren, to prevent their diſturbing him in his kingdom, 2 Chron. xxi. 2, 3, 4.

Ver. 20. In his days Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and made a king over themſelves.] The kingdom of Edom continued under the houſe of David till the days of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, being governed by deputies or viceroys, appointed by the kings of Judah. And tho' the Sacred Hiſtorian mentions a king of Edom, who aſſiſted Jehoram king of Iſrael, and Jehoſhaphat king of Judah, in the reduction of the Moabites, chap. iii. 9. yet he there ſpeaks only in the latitude of Scripture phraſe, for that king, as he is called, attended upon Jehoſhaphat as a vaſſal, and not as an auxiliary. This ſubjection of the Edomites to the houſe of David, verified the prophecy of Iſaac, namely, that Eſau ſhould ſerve his brother, Gen. xxvii. 40. or, in other words, that the poſterity of Eſau, ſhould be ſubject to that of Jacob. But we are now come to that period, when the other part of that patriarch's prediction was accompliſhed, namely, that Eſau ſhould break his yoke from off the neck of Jacob, Gen. xxvii. 40. For finding a fair opportunity to recover their ancient liberty, the Edomites embraced it, and ſucceeded in the reign of Jehoram king of Judah. They had already ſhewn how ill they were diſpoſed, even toward Jehoſhaphat, when a body of them joined the Moabites and Ammonites, in an attempt to ſurpriſe him when he was unprepared for ſuch an invitation. The deſign of theſe confederates being carried on with ſuch ſecrecy and diſpatch, that they entered the kingdom of Judah by the way of Edom, and were got to Hazazontamar or En-gedi, on the weſt of the Dead Sea, before Jehoſhaphat had any notice of their motions. That good prince was greatly diſmayed at the news, and being unprepared for the reception of his enemies, had recourſe to God, who promiſed him by the prophet Jahaziel, to deliver him from his enemies without his ſtriking a blow. And it happened accordingly. For while Jehoſhaphat and his army, in confidence of the prophecy, were marching toward the enemy with the prieſts and ſingers at their head, praiſing God; the confederate nations deſtroyed one another, by falling into the ambuſhes which themſelves had ſet againſt the men of Judah; ſo that the Ammonites and Moabites firſt fell upon their allies of Edom; and having put them to the ſword, began to ſlaughter one another, till none were left alive. And when Jehoſhaphat and his people came up with them, they had no more to do than to ſeize the plunder, which was very rich, and in ſuch abundance, that they were three days in gathering it. This event is not related among the other particulars of Jehoſhaphat's reign, in the book of the Kings, but the reader will find it recorded at large in 2 Chron. xx. 1.—25.

In the days of Jehoram the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, the whole nation of Edom aroſe, and either aſſaſſinating or expelling their viceroy, made themſelves a king of their own liking; and upon adviſe, that Jehoram was coming with a formidable power to reduce them, they advanced toward that prince who was then at Zair, ver. 21. which word being differently written from Seir, doth not ſignify any part of the country of Edom; but ſome city near it. The Edomites then concerted their motions, ſo as to ſurround Jehoram in the night time. But even this project was diſconcerted with great ſlaughter, and they were driven back to their camp. This was but an indifferent beginning of their revolt, but ſo it happened, that the Edomites could not be annexed again to the houſe of David, ver. 21, 22.

Thus was the long wiſhed for revolution brought about by this people, after one hundred and fifty years of oppreſſion; but who was their chief upon this occaſion, or what he did farther, or who ſucceeded him, are particulars of which no account can be given from hiſtory. But as after this event, they had no attempts made upon them by the kings of Judah, for upward of ſixty years, they undoubtedly muſt have had ſufficient time to retrieve their ancient ſplendor, in a great meaſure.

Ver. 22. ——Then Libnah revolted at the ſame time.] Which, perhaps, was the reaſon why Jehoram could not purſue his victory over the Edomites, and regain their country; this defection of his ſubjects at home giving him ſufficient employment. For Libnah was a conſiderable city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 42. and was conſigned to the prieſts, Joſh. xxi. 13. It is likewiſe probable that other cities followed the example of Libnah, whoſe inhabitants now revolted againſt Jehoram, becauſe he attempted to ſet up his idolatrous worſhip among them, contrary to the law of God, and of the kingdom, 2 Chron. xxi. 10, 11.

There are ſeveral other particulars of this king's reign recorded in the ſecond book of Chronicles, and which will be conſidered by us in their proper place. Soon after the revolt of Libnah, he was ſeized with an incurable diſeaſe which ended in his death. He was buried in a ſepulchre by himſelf, probably by reaſon of the corruption and ſtench which attended his diſtemper, and without the uſual ceremony of burning ſpices and other odoriferous drugs about his body, or any other royal pomp. His diſeaſe having rendered him incapable of governing his kingdom, he was obliged to conſtitute his ſon Jehoahaſh, otherwiſe called Ahaziah, viceroy, who ſucceeded him about a year after, and in the twelfth year of Jehoram, king of Iſrael.

Ver. 26. Twenty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jeruſalem.] But it is ſaid, in 2 Chron. xxii. 2. that he was forty two years of age when he began to reign. Dr. Lightfoot, and ſeveral learned men, have endeavoured to reconcile this ſtrange contradiction; but what they have offered to this effect is ſo diſtorted, and unnatural, that we cannot poſſibly ſubſcribe to their ſentiments, and think it much more reaſonable to believe, that the number of years in the above cited paſſage of the Chronicles, is an error in the Hebrew. For, as the Septuagint Verſion has not in that place, forty two, but twenty, it is thought by other learned and good men, that the ancient Hebrew copies were agreeable thereunto; but, by the careleſſneſs of tranſcribers, forty came to be inſerted inſtead of twenty. And we think it is better to acknowledge this plainly, than recur to the pedantic expedient of conſtrained interpretations, which are of no uſe but to ſhew the vanity of thoſe who are fond of them.

——And his mother's name was Athaliah, the daughter of Omri, king of Iſrael.] So ſhe is alſo called in 2 Chron xxii. 2. tho' it is certain that ſhe was the daughter of Ahab. But we have already obſerved more than once, that grand-children are in the language of Scripture frequently called, the ſons and daughters of their grand-parents.

Ver. 27. And he walked in the way of the houſe of Ahab.] He not only worſhipped the golden calves, but likewiſe Baal the Sidonian idol.

——For he was the ſon-in-law of the houſe of Ahab.] And was therefore corrupted in his religion by the affinity he contracted with that impious family, into which Jehoſhaphat married his ſon, hoping, perhaps, to re-unite the two kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah. But this ſcheme proved the ruin of his family, as appears by the book of Chronicles.

Ver. 28. And he went with Joram the ſon of Ahab, to the war againſt Hazael king of Syria in Ramoth-gilead.] Juſt as Jehoſhaphat went with Ahab to the ſame place: which Joram, it ſeems, endeavoured to recover back to Iſrael, as his father had done.

——— And the Syrians wounded Joram.] Not mortally, as they did Ahab: but in ſuch a manner as obliged him to leave the field, in order to be cured of his wounds in Jezreel.

Ver. 29. ——And Ahaziah the ſon of Jehoram king of Judah, went down to ſee Joram the ſon of Ahab in Jezreel, becauſe he was ſick.] This journey proved fatal to him, for the ſecret providence of God ordered it ſo, that both theſe kings were killed by Jehu, as a puniſhment for their idolatry.

CHAP. IX.

1 Eliſha ſendeth a young prophet with inſtructions to anoint Jehu at Ramoth-gilead. 4 The prophet having done his meſſage, fleeth. 11 Jehu being made king by the ſoldiers, killeth Joram in the field of Naboth. 27 Ahaziah is ſlain at Gur, and buried at Jeruſalem. 30 Proud Jezebel is thrown down out of a window, and eaten by dogs.

AND Eliſha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets, and ſaid unto him, Gird up thy loyns, and take this box of oyl in thine hand, and go to Ramoth-gilead.

2 And when thou comeſt thither, look out there Jehu the ſon of Jehoſhaphat the ſon of Nimſhi, and go in, and make him ariſe up from among his brethren, and carry him to an inner chamber.

3 Then take the box of oyl, and pour it on his head, and ſay, Thus ſaith the LORD, I have anointed thee king over Iſrael: then open the door, and flee, and tarry not.

4 ¶ So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.

5 And when he came, behold, the captains of the hoſt were ſitting; and he ſaid, I have an errand to thee, O captain. And Jehu ſaid, Unto which of all us? And he ſaid, To thee, O captain.

6 And he aroſe, and went into the houſe, and he poured the oyl on his head, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Iſrael, I have anointed thee king over the people of the LORD, even over Iſrael.

7 And thou ſhalt ſmite the houſe of Ahab thy maſter, that I may avenge the blood of my ſervants the prophets, and the blood of all the ſervants of the LORD, at the hand of Jezebel.

8 For the whole houſe of Ahab ſhall periſh, and I will cut off from Ahab, him that piſſeth againſt the wall, and him that is ſhut up, and left in Iſrael.

9 And I will make the houſe of Ahab like the houſe Jeroboam, the ſon of Nebat, and like the houſe of Baaſha the ſon of Ahijah.

10 And the dogs ſhall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, and there ſhall be none to bury her. And he opened the door and fled.

11 ¶ Then Jehu came forth to the ſervants of his lord, and one ſaid unto him, Is all well? wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? And he ſaid, unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication.

12 And they ſaid, It is falſe, tell us now. And he ſaid, Thus and thus ſpake he to me, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD, I have anointed thee king over Iſrael.

13 Then they haſted, and took every man his garment, and put it under him on the top of the ſtairs, and blew with trumpets, ſaying, Jehu is king.

14 So Jehu the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, the ſon of Nimſhi, conſpired againſt Joram: (Now Joram had kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Iſrael, becauſe of Hazael king of Syria:

15 But king Joram was returned to be healed in Jezreel, of the wounds which the Syrians had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu ſaid, If it be your minds, then let none go forth, nor eſcape out of the city, to go to tell it in Jezreel.

16 So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel (for Joram lay there) and Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to ſee Joram.

17 And there ſtood a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he ſpied the company of Jehu as he came, and ſaid, I ſee a company. And Joram ſaid, Take an horſeman, and ſend to meet them, and let him ſay, Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horſeback to meet him, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu ſaid, What haſt thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, ſaying, The meſſenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

19 Then he ſent a ſecond on horſeback, which came to them, and ſaid, Thus ſaith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu anſwered, What haſt thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the Watchman told, ſaying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi; for he driveth furiouſly.

21 And Joram ſaid, Make ready. And his chariot was made ready. And Joram king of Iſrael, and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot, and they went out againſt Jehu, and met him in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to paſs when Joram ſaw Jehu, that he ſaid, Is it peace, Jehu? And he anſwered, What peace, ſo long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel, and her witchcrafts are ſo many?

23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and ſaid to Ahaziah, There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu drew a bow with his full ſtrength, and ſmote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he ſunk down in his chariot.

25 Then ſaid Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and caſt him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite: for remember, how that when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, the LORD laid this burden upon him.

26 Surely, I have ſeen yeſterday the blood of Naboth, and the blood of his ſons, ſaid the LORD, and I will requite thee in this plat, ſaith the LORD. Now therefore take and caſt him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the LORD.

27 ¶ But when Ahaziah the king of Judah ſaw this, he fled by the way of the garden houſe: and Jehu followed after him, and ſaid, Smite him alſo in the chariot: And they did ſo, at the going up to Gur, which is by Ibleam: and he fled to Megiddo, and died there.

28 And his ſervants carried him in a chariot to Jeruſalem, and burried him in his ſepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

29 And in the eleventh year of Joram the ſon of Ahab, began Ahaziah to reign over Judah.

30 And

30 ¶ And when Jehu was come to Jezreel, Jezebel heard of it, and ſhe painted her face, and tired her head, and looked out at a window.

31 And as Jehu entred in at the gate, ſhe ſaid, Had Zimri peace, who ſlew his maſter?

32 And he lift up his face to the window, and ſaid, Who is on my ſide, who? And there looked out to him two or three eunuchs.

33 And he ſaid, Throw her down. So they threw her down; and ſome of her blood was ſprinkled on the wall, and on the horſes: and he trode her under foot.

34 And when he was come in, he did eat and drink, and ſaid, Go ſee now this curſed woman, and bury her: for ſhe is a kings daughter.

35 And they went to bury her, but they found no more of her than the ſcull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands.

36 Wherefore they came again, and told him: and he ſaid, This is the word of the LORD, which he ſpake by his ſervant Elijah the Tiſhbite, ſaying, In the portion of Jezreel ſhall dogs eat the fleſh of Jezebel:

37 And the carcaſe of Jezebel ſhall be as dung upon the face of the field, in the portion of Jezreel, ſo that they ſhall not ſay, This is Jezebel.

Ver. 1. And Eliſha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets, and ſaid unto him, Gird up thy loins, and take this box of oil in thine hand, and go to Ramoth-gilead.] The prophet Elijah had been formerly commanded to do this which Eliſha was now about to perform; But Ahab's humiliation had moved God to defer the judgment pronounced upon him and his family; and ſo the execution of it was left to Eliſha, who did not go himſelf, becauſe he was known by moſt, and this affair required ſecrecy: or being old, he was unfit for ſuch a journey; for the laſt time we read of him he was at Damaſcus. The young man who now attended him, the Jews ſay in Seder Olam, was Jonah the ſon of Amittai.

Eliſha ordered this young prophet to proceed with expedition to Ramoth-gilead, there to anoint Jehu, king of Iſrael in a private manner, and then to haſten away as faſt as poſſible, leſt what he did ſhould be diſcovered, and himſelf ſeized as a traitor. The prophet went to Ramoth-gilead, where he found Jehu ſitting among the officers of the army in council, he himſelf being, as it is thought, commander in chief of the king of Iſrael's army: He then addreſſed himſelf to Jehu, and acquainted him, that his buſineſs with him required privacy; upon which, Jehu retired with him into a private apartment, where the young prophet performed the regal unction according to the direction of Eliſha, and then told Jehu, that he was appointed by God to execute his vengeance againſt the whole race of Ahab, and even on the impious Jezebel, whoſe carcaſs ſhould ſhortly be devoured by dogs, whilſt all the reſt of his family were condemned to periſh by the ſword. The moment the prophet had executed his commiſſion, he opened the door and fled with all ſpeed; which had ſuch an odd appearance, that the officers asked Jehu when he came out, what buſineſs that mad fellow had been tranſacting with him? The Jews obſerve, that there was ſomething in the looks and geſtures of theſe prophets, which made them paſs for mad-men among thoſe who did not know them. But what might ſtill add to the ſingularity of their figure and behaviour, was the oddneſs of their dreſs; their living by themſelves, and ſeldom appearing in places of publick reſort, but upon ſome extraordinary errand, which often proved of a dangerous nature, and put them under ſome dread while they were about it.

As ſoon as Jehu had acquainted the officers of the army with the ſecret, they all paid their homage to him, and made a kind of throne for him with their garments, which they put under him, in order to raiſe him above the reſt. The place where this is ſaid to be done, was upon the top of the ſtairs; which Gouſſet imagines were winding ſtairs in a turret, on the top of which they placed Jehu, that all the people might ſee him, and hear him proclaimed their king with the ſound of the trumpet. Jehu, however, did not think it proper to have this conſpiracy known till he had reached Jezreel, and ſurprized the wounded king there, before he could be in a condition to oppoſe him. He therefore told the people, that if their hearts agreed with their expreſſions in his favour, they ſhould ſuffer none to get out of Ramoth, leſt they ſhould go and acquaint the king with what had been tranſacted. For Jehu was ſenſible that ſecrecy and expedition were neceſſary to the execution of the great deſigns he had in view. He then rode with all ſpeed at the head of his men toward Jezreel, but as ſoon as he came within ſight of the place; the watch, alarmed at the appearance of a troop advancing with ſuch uncommon ſpeed, acquainted the court with what they had ſeen; upon which the intimidated king ſent two meſſengers ſucceſſively, to enquire whether they came peaceably or not. For he was apprehenſive that either the Syrians had defeated his army, or elſe that others of his ſubjects had revolted like thoſe of Libnah. Jehu having made both theſe meſſengers turn behind his chariot, and the centinel who then knew Jehu by the furious manner of his driving, for he was noted for eagerneſs in purſuing his deſigns, acquainted the king with what he ſaw and ſuſpected; upon which that prince ſent word to the king of Judah, who was come to viſit him in his illneſs, and theſe two marched out with their guards againſt Jehu. The place where they met one another was the vineyard for which Naboth had formerly loſt his life; and here the king of Iſrael asked him if he came peaceably? but Jehu ſoon gave him proof of the contrary, by upbraiding him with his and his mother Jezebel's murders and idolatries, and by putting himſelf in a hoſtile poſture againſt him. The terrified monarch cried out to the king of Judah, that they were betrayed, and then turned his chariot to eſcape from his enemy, but all in vain; for his fatal hour was now come, and Jehu pierced his heart with an arrow, and then ordered one of his captains to caſt his body in Naboth's field, there to be devoured, according to the prediction of Elijah. At the ſame time the king of Judah, who had been a ſpectator of this tragedy, endeavoured to avoid ſharing his brother's fate, by flying through the private road which led to the garden-houſe, which was built upon part of Naboth's vineyard; but Jehu commanded a party of his men to ride after him, which they did, and having overtaken him at the aſcent of Gur, they wounded him, tho' not mortally, and he then fled to Megiddo, which was not far from Samaria, whither his ſervants carried him, as being a ſafer place, and there he hid himſelf for fear of Jehu, as we read 2 Chron. xxii. 9. But being ſearched for and taken in Samaria, he was brought to Jehu at Jezreel, where he commanded him to be ſlain. Jehu here ſeems to have exceeded his commiſſion; but it ought to be conſidered, that as the king of Judah was an idolater, ſo he was of the bloody houſe of Ahab, by his mother's ſide, who was Ahab's daughter. And his deſtruction was of God, (as the author of the ſecond book of Chronicles obſerves xxii. 7.) who prompted Jehu thus to underſtand his command. And thus Abarbinel underſtands theſe words, he died there, ver. 27, not in Megiddo, mentioned before, but in that execution of God's judgments on the houſe of Ahab.

The dead body of this king was conveyed by his ſervants in a chariot to Jeruſalem, and buried with his anceſtors, he having reigned one year, and leaving only one ſon, a child, who afterward ſucceeded him, when he was yet but ſeven years of age.

While Jehu's men went in purſuit of Ahaziah king of Judah, Jehu himſelf marched directly toward the royal palace of Jezreel, where Jezebel, the queen mother, who by that time had been informed of her ſon's fate, was waiting to give the conqueror ſuch a haughty reception, as did not well ſuit with her preſent circumſtances; but ſhe poſſibly might hope, that Jehu would ſhew ſome regard, if not to her quality, yet at leaſt to her ſex. Perhaps alſo ſhe imagined that, notwithſtanding her years, ſhe had ſtill charms enough to captivate the new monarch, eſpecially after ſhe had improved them by art, and with the richeſt attire. She was looking out at a window when Jehu entered the palace, and in a haughty tone, asked him, whether he expected a milder recompence for his rebellion, than his predeceſſor Zimri had formerly received? Jehu would not vouchſafe her any reply, but obſerving ſome eunuchs ſtanding on each ſide of this impious queen, he commanded them to throw her out of the window, which they immediately did, and in the fall, ſome of her blood was daſhed againſt the wall, and her body preſently trampled to death by the horſes in Jehu's retinue. As ſoon as he and his company had refreſhed themſelves in the palace, he gave orders to ſome of Jezebel's ſervants to go and bury her corpſe, ſhe being the daughter of a king, which moved him to have this regard to her; but when word was brought to him, that the dogs had devoured all the body, except the skull, the palms of her hands, and her feet, he made uſe of that circumſtance to convince his attendants of the truth of Elijah's prophecy.

Such was the end of this miſerable princeſs, who was a great inſtrument of God's ſeverity, to purify and refine his ſervants by her implacable cruelty and violence. She knew the truth, ſaith St. Ambroſe, and yet perſecuted it; and having taken a reſolution, at any rate, to ſupport the intereſt of falſe prophets, who flattered and indulged her wicked and idolatrous humour, ſhe declared open war, and became a ſworn enemy to the true prophets of God. Her preſumption and vanity engaged her to be too buſy and intermedling in matters which related to God and religion; and her inveteracy againſt the pure worſhip of God, having put her upon endeavours wholly to exterminate the ſame, ſo that no traces of it might be left: God, in his juſt judgment ſuffered her not only to come to a moſt ſhameful and tragical end, but that even after death, ſcarce any remains of her body ſhould be left; that by theſe means her fate might be rendered a terror to all who might thereafter be inclinable to tread in her ſteps.

CHAP. X.

1 Jehu by his letters cauſeth ſeventy of Ahab's children to be beheaded. 8 He excuſeth the fact by the propheſy of Elijah. 12 At the ſhearing-houſe he ſlayeth two and forty of Ahaziah's brethren. 15 He taketh Jehonadab into his company, 18 By ſubtilty he deſtroyeth all the worſhippers of Baal. 29 Jehu followeth Jeroboam's ſins. 32 Hazael oppreſſeth Iſrael. 34 Jehoahaz ſucceedeth Jehu.

AND Ahab had ſeventy ſons in Samaria: and Jehu wrote letters, and ſent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel, to the elders, and to them that brought up Ahabs children, ſaying,

2 Now as ſoon as this letter cometh to you, ſeeing your maſters ſons are with you, and there are with you chariots and horſes, a fenced city alſo and armour.

3 Look even out the beſt and meeteſt of your maſters ſons, and ſet him on his fathers throne, and fight for your maſters houſe.

4 But they were exceedingly afraid, and ſaid, Behold, two kings ſtood not before him: how then ſhall we ſtand?

5 And he that was over the houſe, and he that was over the city, the elders alſo, and the bringers up of the children, ſent to Jehu, ſaying, We are thy ſervants, and will do all that thou ſhalt bid us; we will not make any king: do thou that which is good in thine eyes.

6 Then he wrote a letter the ſecond time to them, ſaying, If ye be mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, take ye the heads of the men your maſters ſons, and come to me to Jezreel by to morrow this time: (now the kings ſons being ſeventy perſons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up.)

7 And it came to paſs when the letter came to them, that they took the kings ſons, and ſlew ſeventy perſons, and put their heads in baskets, and ſent him them to Jezreel.

8 ¶ And there came a Meſſenger, and told him, ſaying, They have brought the heads of the kings ſons. And he ſaid, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entring in of the gate, until the morning.

9 And it came to paſs in the morning, that he went out, and ſtood, and ſaid to all the people, Ye be righteous: Behold I conſpired againſt my Maſter, and ſlew him: but who ſlew all theſe?

10 Know now, that there ſhall fall unto the earth nothing of the word of the LORD, which the LORD ſpake concerning the houſe of Ahab: for the LORD hath done that which he ſpake by his ſervant Elijah.

11 So Jehu ſlew all that remained of the houſe of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his kinsfolks, and his prieſts, until he left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he aroſe and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the ſhearing-houſe in the way.

13 Jehu met with the brethren of Ahaziah king of Judah, and ſaid, Who are ye? And they anſwered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah, and we go down to ſalute the children of the king, and the children of the queen.

14 And he ſaid, Take them alive. And they took them alive, and ſlew them at the pit of the ſhearing-houſe, even two and forty men; neither left he any of them.

15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he lighted on Jehonadab the ſon of Rechab, coming to meet him, and he ſaluted him, and ſaid to him, Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab anſwered, It is. If it be, give me thine hand:

hand: and he gave him his hand, and he took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he ſaid, Come with me, and ſee my zeal for the LORD: So they made him ride in his chariot.

17 And when he came to Samaria, he ſlew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, till he had deſtroyed him, according to the ſaying of the LORD, which he ſpake to Elijah.

18 ¶ And Jehu gathered all the people together, and ſaid unto them, Ahab ſerved Baal a little, but Jehu ſhall ſerve him much.

19 Now therefore call unto me all the prophets of Baal, all his ſervants, and all his prieſts, let none be wanting: for I have a great ſacrifice to do to Baal; whoſoever ſhall be wanting, he ſhall not live. But Jehu did it in ſubtilty, to the intent that he might deſtroy the worſhippers of Baal.

20 And Jehu ſaid, Proclaim a ſolemn aſſembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

21 And Jehu ſent through all Iſrael, and all the worſhippers of Baal came, ſo that there was not a man left that came not: and they came into the houſe of Baal; and the houſe of Baal was full from one end to another.

22 And he ſaid unto him that was over the veſtry, bring forth veſtments for all the worſhippers of Baal. And he brought them forth veſtments.

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the ſon of Rechab, into the houſe of Baal, and ſaid unto the worſhippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the ſervants of the LORD, but the worſhippers of Baal only.

24 And when they went in to offer ſacrifices and burnt-offerings, Jehu appointed fourſcore men without, and ſaid, If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands, eſcape, he that letteth him go, his life ſhall be for the life of him.

25 And it came to paſs as ſoon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, that Jehu ſaid to the guard, and to the captains, Go in, and ſlay them, let none come forth. And they ſmote them with the edge of the ſword, and the guard and the captains caſt them out, and went to the city of the houſe of Baal.

26 And they brought forth the images out of the houſe of Baal, and burnt them.

27 And they brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the houſe of Baal, and made it a draught-houſe unto this day.

28 Thus Jehu deſtroyed Baal out of Iſrael.

29 ¶ Howbeit, from the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, the golden calves, that were in Bethel, and that were in Dan.

30 And the LORD ſaid unto Jehu, Becauſe thou haſt done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and haſt done unto the houſe of Ahab according to all that was in mine heart, thy children of the fourth generation ſhall ſit on the throne of Iſrael.

31 But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the LORD God of Iſrael, with all his heart; for he departed not from the ſins of Jeroboam, which made Iſrael to ſin.

32 ¶ In thoſe days the LORD began to cut Iſrael ſhort: and Hazael ſmote them in all the coaſt of Iſrael;

33 From Jordan eaſt-ward, all the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Manaſſites, from Aroer (which is by the River Arnon) even Gilead and Baſhan.

34 Now the reſt of the acts of Jehu, and all that he did, and all his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

35 And Jehu ſlept with his fathers, and they buried him in Samaria, and Jehoahaz his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

36 And the time that Jehu reigned over Iſrael in Samaria, was twenty and eight years.

Ver. 1. And Ahab had ſeventy ſons in Samaria: and Jehu wrote letters, and ſent to Samaria, unto the rulers of Jezreel, to the elders, and to them that brought up Ahab's children] The ſentence of the prophet Elijah did not ſtop at the three impious perſons who were ſlain by Jehu; the whole race of Ahab was included in it, and he had left ſeventy ſons, who were all brought up under governors in Samaria. Jehu therefore did not think fit to enter that capital, till he had tried whether the chief magiſtrates of it had courage and reſolution enough to undertake any thing for the poſterity of their late king. To this end, he ſent letters to them, ſeemly to exhort them to chooſe one of the braveſt of Ahab's ſons, and to place him upon the throne. But they, who rightly gueſſed at the meaning of ſuch a meſſage, and were but too much intimidated by his late ſucceſs againſt the kings of Judah and Iſrael, choſe rather to ſacrifice the unhappy offspring of Ahab, to the known valour of Jehu, than to run the risk of turning it againſt themſelves. They therefore ſent a deputation to him, to acquaint him, that they would do nothing but by his commands, which they declared themſelves ready to execute as ſoon as they ſhould receive them: whereupon he ſent them an order to put all the young princes to death, and bring their heads to him by the next day; and this order was punctually complied with. The bloody preſent of ſeventy heads was ſent to Jezreel, and Jehu commanded them to be laid in two heaps at the gate of Samaria, in order to expoſe them to view in that place of public concourſe, that every one might might know, there was none of Ahab's poſterity left to reign over them. The next morning the elders of that city came, and preſented themſelves before him there, and as ſoon as he ſaw them he expreſſed himſelf to this effect. "You, in all probability, look upon me as the author "of all this bloodſhed; as the murderer of your late king, "and the uſurper of his throne; but if I conſpired againſt "Jehoram, did not you murder all theſe young princes, in "whoſe defence you might have ſtood, if you had thought "fit? Know ye therefore, that neither you nor I have "done more than executed the ſentence, which had been "pronounced againſt the poſterity of Ahab. But I have "not finiſhed my task as long as any of his kinſmen, "counſellors, prieſts, or any of the abettors of his crimes "are remaining." This was the next work, and he did not leave Jezreel, till he had put them all to death.

Jehu then took the road to Samaria, and in his way met forty two princes of the houſe of Judah, who were going to viſit thoſe of the houſe of Ahab; and Jehu cauſed all theſe to be ſlain upon the ſpot. The text calls them the brethren of Ahaziah, but it has been obſerved by us, that ſuch expreſſions in the Hebrew mean alſo brothers children, and theſe are accordingly ſo called by the author of the ſecond book of Chronicles, xxii. 8. The place where they were ſlain is called in the original Bor Beth-heked, or, the pit of the houſe for building or ſhearing; which was either a place of ſheep-ſhearing, or, as ſome fancy, took its name from the young princes being bound and put to death there. It is not unlikely neither, from the text, that they, having heard of the ſlaughter which had been made in Samaria, and that Jehu was going thither in perſon, might hide themſelves, either in that pit, or in ſome of the ſhepherds huts, to avoid falling into his hands.

After this execution was performed, Jehu met with Jehonadab the ſon of Rechab, a very pious and prudent perſon, as appears by his precepts to his ſon in the 35th of Jeremiah; and who hearing what Jehu had done, came, we ſuppoſe, to congratulate him on his happineſs in fulfilling God's commands; and to encourage him in his proceedings to deſtroy idolatry. Jehu finding his conduct approved by a man of ſo much conſequence, took him up into his chariot, that he might be an eye-witneſs of his intended zeal againſt the worſhippers of Baal.

The Rechabites, ſo famous in Scripture for the auſtere ſingularity of their life, were not content to excel in common and moral virtues, but affected to diſtinguiſh themſelves from the reſt of the world, by a peculiar abſtinence from wine, as likewiſe from either dwelling in or poſſeſſing houſes, vineyards, or fields, and from all kind of agriculture, Jer. xxxv. 6, 7.

Who the founder of this fraternity, and the author of their inſtitutions was, whether the Jehonadab here mentioned, or any other either before or after him, is far from being agreed. If we may believe a modern critic, he hath found the etymon of Rechab, in the rekeb, or chariot of Elijah, and that of the phariſees, his ſuppoſed diſciples, in the pharaſhim, or horſes of it, (J. Bolduc. Eccleſ. ante Leg. l. 3. c. 16.) So that, according to him, the words of Eliſha ſhould not be rendered as we do, My father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael and the horſes thereof, 2 Kings ii. 12. But, my father Rachab, &c. or at leaſt, continues our author, the former called themſelves Rechabites from the rechab, chariot; and the latter, phariſees, from the pherashim, or horſes of it. Purſuant to this he farther obſerves, that when Joaſh, king of Iſrael, came to viſit Eliſha, as he lay on his death bed, he addreſſed himſelf likewiſe to him in the ſame words, My father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, &c. chap. xiii. 14. He even endeavours to prove this inſtitution older than the flood, which, allowing his far fetched etymology, will be no difficult task, if we can but ſuppoſe that Enoch was tranſlated in the ſame kind of vehicle as that which carried off Elijah.

Scaliger, on the other hand, pretends that this order of men did not commence till about the time of Jeremiah, and that this Jehonadab, for whom Jehu teſtified ſo much regard, was only a perſon of the ſame name with the founder of that Rechabitiſh life, and that he was too great a courtier, and too fine a gentleman, to be the author of ſo impolite an inſtitution, (Scalig. Elench. Trihæreſ.) But his arguments on this occaſion having more of oratorial confidence than ſolid reaſoning, we ſhall not trouble our readers with them.

Between the extremes of theſe two above-mentioned authors, are thoſe who believe that Hobab, the ſon of Jethro, as he was, a Kenite, was the founder of the Rechabites; that Rechab was one of his names, and Jehonadab one of his deſcendants: and laſtly, that Heber the Kenite was an obſerver of the Rechabitiſh inſtitution, (Vid. int. al. Arr. Montan. in Judic. 1. Snactiu. in Jerem. xxxv. Minerval. cap. 13. & ſeq.) Serrarius is of the ſame opinion in moſt of theſe points, but diſtinguiſhes two ſorts of Rechabites, the one inſtituted by Jethro, or Hobab, and the other by Jehonadab, (Serrar. l. 3. c. 9.) but all this is ſaid without foundation. We ſhall mention nothing of thoſe who pretend that they were, either of the tribe of Judah, or of that of Levi; or that they were Rechabites, or deſcendants of Jethro, by the father's ſide, and Levites by the mother's; and, that as ſuch, they were employed in much the ſame offices of the temple with the Nethinims. It is plain, the author of the book of Chronicles calls them Kenites, deſcended from Hemath, the father of the houſe of Rechab, 1 Chron. ii. 55. tho' it doth not appear that all the Kenites obſerved the inſtitution of Jehonadab, but only thoſe who were his immediate deſcendants.

For theſe reaſons, we rather chooſe the moſt received opinion, that Jehonadab, the friend of Jehu, was the founder of this order, he being the only one of that name mentioned in the Scripture, and nothing urged on any hand to give any of the contrary opinions, an air of probability. Jehu's behaviour to him, and his inviting him to be an eye-witneſs of his zeal for the ſervice of God, and of the havoc he was preparing to make among the worſhippers of Baal, argues him to have been an eminent perſon, not only for underſtanding and vertue, but alſo for his uncommon piety and zeal; and as ſuch he might have embraced this new manner of life, and enjoined the obſervation of it to his poſterity; perhaps through ſome diſguſt he took at court, or at the idolatries of the Iſraelites, which made it neceſſary to ſeparate from them, by living in the pure and untainted part of the country, to avoid the danger of being either corrupted by them, or hated for not being ſo. The Kenites not being of the ſeed of Iſrael, many broils and diſputes might have ariſen between them, about the poſſeſſion of lands; which conſideration might cauſe him to diſclaim the uſe and culture of them. The almoſt continual depredations to which the Iſraelites were expoſed from their enemies round about, to ſay nothing of famine and peſtilence, made the paſtoral life ſeem more eligible to him, becauſe when any of thoſe calamities prevailed, it would be eaſier to remove to better or ſafer abodes, in imitation of the ancient patriarchs. Wine was of too enſnaring a nature, and might in time have tempted his deſcendants into a looſer and more luxurious life; for which reaſons he thought it neceſſary to prohibit the uſe of it. Laſtly, whatever other private motives might determine him to that primitive kind of life, he ſeems chiefly to have endeared it to his deſcendants, by the proſpect of health, eaſe, and length of days, Jer. xxxv. 7. How far the horrid debauchery, both in religion and morals, which reigned as well in Judah, as in Iſrael, for a conſiderable time, to ſay nothing of the frequent conſpiracies and rebellions which happened in the latter of thoſe kingdoms, might contribute to determine, if not to force, a man of his character to this kind of retired life, we need not ſay.

The queſtion will only be, how he could bind his poſterity to the obſervance of it? But here we need not repeat what has been ſaid upon other occaſions concerning the power of parents, becauſe we do not find that Jehonadab laid his offſpring and poſterity under any curſe, in caſe of diſobedience; on the contrary, we find that the prophet Jeremiah was directed by God to bring them to an apartment in the temple; to ſet wine before them, and invite them to drink it, which would have been an unworthy action, if they had been under an indiſpenſible obligation to abſtain from it; and on the other hand, the Rechabites refuſed it, not becauſe their father had laid them under any curſe if they diſobeyed him, but becauſe he promiſed that they ſhould live many days in the land wherein they were ſtrangers, if they obeyed his voice: which promiſe being alſo made to thoſe who honoured their parents, might the more incline them to that ſtrict obedience, for which they are ſo highly commended by God, Jer. xxxv. We may add farther, that their retiring into Jeruſalem during the time of the ſiege, which was a breach breach of their founder's injunction, without being ſo much as blamed for it by Jeremiah, is a proof that they were not under an indiſpenſible obligation to live always in tents, and in the country. Tho' even here we think it had been much better for them, to have removed farther out of Nebuchadnezzar's way, inſtead of ſheltering themſelves in the city; where they not only ſuffered all the common calamities of a long ſiege, but were, in all likelihood, carried away captive with the tribe of Judah; for we find ſome of them, at their return from Babylon, who ſettled themſelves at Jabeſh, or Jabez, 1 Chron. ii. 55. And the Septuagint and Vulgate have the following words in the title of the Seventy, which is our ſeventy-firſt Pſalm, A pſalm of David to the ſons of Jonadab and the firſt captives; but as theſe words are not in the Hebrew, we ſhall lay no farther ſtreſs upon them.

What became of them afterward, whether they continued to obſerve their father's injunctions, and whether the Phariſees, Aſſidees, and Eſſenians, were their followers, is foreign to our preſent purpoſe, but perhaps may be enquired into, in our annotations on the Jewiſh hiſtory after the captivity. It is true, the Rechabites had a promiſe from God, as a reward of their obedience, in theſe words, Jehonadab, the ſon of Rechab, ſhall not want a man to ſtand before me for ever, Jer. xxxv. 19. but this phraſe is far from implying that they were either prieſts or Levites, and as ſuch ſhould continually miniſter at the altar, as ſome have fancied; or that they ſhould have a ſeat in the great Sanhedrin, which was not then in being. Sure it is, that if our Jehonadab was the founder of this inſtitution, his deſcendants obſerved it ſtrictly during the ſpace of three hundred years, whatever became of them afterward; for ſo long it was between the time of Jehu and that of the Babyloniſh captivity. A Jewiſh traveller of the twelfth century doth indeed tell us, that they are ſtill in being, and ſtrict obſervers of their old inſtitutions. He alſo gives us a fine deſcription of their country, princes, government, and other particulars, (Ben. de Tudel. Itinerar. p. 75, &c.) but that author is ſo well known to deal in fables, and the account it ſelf is ſo fully confuted by the learned Conſtantine L'empereur, that we ſhall leave it to his Jewiſh brethren to credit it, if they think proper.

Ver. 18. And Jehu gathered all the people together, and ſaid unto them, Ahab ſerved Baal a little, but Jehu ſhall ſerve him much.] As ſoon as Jehu came to Samaria, he cauſed a ſolemn feaſt to be proclaimed in honour of Baal, pretending a much greater zeal and veneration for that falſe deity, than any of his predeceſſors; and ordered all his prieſts, prophets, and votaries, to be preſent at the ſolemnity, under pain of death; and when their numbers had filled the temple, from the one end to the other, he commanded a body of men to go in, and put them alſo to the ſword amidſt the celebration of their worſhip. After this he took down all the idols and ornaments of that abominable deity, and burnt them out of the temple, and cauſed that building to be deſtroyed and turned into a common jakes. But this metropolis was not the only place which had reared temples and altars to Baal, for the infection had ſpread it ſelf throughout the kingdom; wherefore he did not ſtop his hand, till he had entirely cleared it of that kind of idolatry; and this he did with ſuch zeal and diligence, that God, highly pleaſed with his conduct in that particular, ſent him word by a prophet, that the kingdom of Iſrael ſhould remain in his poſterity till the fourth generation. Happy had it been for him, if this promiſe had encouraged him, to extirpate likewiſe the idolatrous worſhip of the golden calves of Dan and Bethel; but he unfortunately followed the politics of Jeroboam as long as he lived; for which reaſon, God began to cut Iſrael ſhort, even from the beginning of his reign; ſo that Hazael, the king of Syria, greatly prevailed againſt them, and took a conſiderable number of towns from the two tribes and a half on the other ſide Jordan, beſide ſome other frontier places on this ſide, and ravaged all the places to which he came, putting the inhabitants to the ſword in the moſt inhuman manner. It is not eaſy to gueſs, at what period of Jehu's reign this cruel war happened. Uſher makes no mention of it till the time of his ſon, but we chooſe to place it nearer the beginning of Jehu's, as being agreeable to the chronology of our Bibles; for tho' God had promiſed that the crown ſhould continue in his family during four generations, as a reward for his zeal againſt Baal, yet he did not promiſe him a quiet reign; and his continuing in the idolatry of Jeroboam made him unworthy of it. Jehu died in the 28th year of his reign; he was buried in Samaria, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Jehoahaz.

CHAP. XI.

1 Jehoaſh, being ſaved by Jehoſheba his aunt from Athaliah's maſſacre of the ſeed royal, is hid ſix years in the houſe of God. 4 Jehoiada giving order to the captains, in the ſeventh year anointeth him king. 13 Athaliah is ſlain. 17 Jehoiada reſtoreth the worſhip of God.

AND when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah ſaw that her ſon was dead, ſhe aroſe, and deſtroyed all the ſeed royal.

2 But Jehoſheba the daughter of king Joram, ſiſter of Ahaziah, took Joaſh the ſon of Ahaziah, and ſtole him from among the kings ſons which were ſlain; and they hid him, even him and his nurſe in the bedchamber from Athaliah, ſo that he was not ſlain.

3 And he was with her hid in the houſe of the LORD ſix years: and Athaliah did reign over the land.

4 ¶ And the ſeventh year Jehoiada ſent and fet the rulers over hundreds, with the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the houſe of the LORD, and made a covenant with them, and took an oath of them in the houſe of the LORD, and ſhewed them the kings ſon.

5 And he commanded them ſaying, This is the thing that ye ſhall do; A third part of you that enter in on the ſabbath, ſhall even be keepers of the watch of the kings houſe:

6 And a third part ſhall be at the gate of Sur: and a third part at the gate behind the guard: ſo ſhall ye keep the watch of the houſe, that it be not broken down.

7 And two parts of all you that go forth on the ſabbath, even they ſhall keep the watch of the houſe of the LORD about the king.

8 And ye ſhall compaſs the king round about, every man with his weapon in his hand: and he that cometh within the ranges, let him be ſlain; and be ye with the king as he goeth out, and as he cometh in.

9 And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the prieſt commanded: and they took every man his men that were to come in on the ſabbath, with them that ſhould go out on the ſabbath, and came to Jehoiada the prieſt.

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the prieſts give king Davids ſpears and ſhields that were in the temple of the LORD.

11 And the guard ſtood, every man with his weapons in his hand round about the king, from the right corner of the temple, to the left corner of the temple, along by the altar and the temple.

12 And he brought forth the kings ſon, and put the crown upon him, and gave him the teſtimony, and they made him king, and anointed him, and they clapt their hands, and ſaid, God ſave the king.

13 ¶ And when Athaliah heard the noiſe of the guard, and of the people, ſhe came to the people, into the temple of the LORD.

14 And when ſhe looked, behold, the king ſtood by a pillar, as the manner was, and the princes, and the trumpeters by the king, and all the people of the land rejoyced, and blew with trumpets: and Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, Treaſon, treaſon.

15 But Jehoiada the prieſt commanded the captains of the hundreds, the officers of the hoſt, and ſaid unto them, Have her forth without the ranges; and him that followeth her, kill with the ſword. For the prieſt hath ſaid, Let her not be ſlain in the houſe of the LORD.

16 And they laid hands on her, and ſhe went by the way by the which the horſes came into the kings houſe, and there was ſhe ſlain.

17 ¶ And Jehoiada made a covenant between the LORD and the king and the people, that they ſhould be the LORD's people; between the king alſo and the people.

18 And all the people of the land went into the houſe of Baal, and brake it down, his altars and his images brake they in pieces throughly, and ſlew Mattan the prieſt of Baal before the altars: and the prieſt appointed officers over the houſe of the LORD.

19 And he took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land, and they brought down the king from the houſe of the LORD, and came by the way of the gate of the guard to the kings houſe, and he ſat on the throne of the kings.

20 And all the people of the land rejoyced, and the city was in quiet; and they ſlew Athaliah with the ſword beſide the kings houſe.

21 Seven years old was Jehoaſh when he began to reign.

Ver. 1. And when Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah ſaw that her ſon was dead, ſhe aroſe and deſtroyed all the ſeed royal.] Whilſt Jehu was aboliſhing the worſhip of Baal in Iſrael, the impious Athaliah was uſing her utmoſt efforts to eradicate, not only that of the living God, but even the remembrance of it out of Judah. The death of her ſon Ahaziah, and of forty two princes of his houſe, followed by that of Jezebel, by the hand of a perſon newly raiſed to the throne of Iſrael by the Divine Command, filled her with ſuch an abhorrence both for the race, and the God of David, that ſhe reſolved not to ſheath the ſword till ſhe had totally extirpated the one, and thereby invalidated all the promiſes of the other. But while ſhe was giving her fury its full play againſt the ſad remains of the houſe of Judah, Providence conducted thither Jehoſheba, the daughter of the late king Joram, and who was then married to the high prieſt Jehoiada; and this pious princeſs found means to ſave young Joaſh, her late brother Ahaziah's ſon, who was then but a year old, from the murdering rage of Athaliah; and to convey him and his nurſe out of the palace unperceived by that bloody queen. This infant prince was carried to the temple, where he was brought up under the care of Jehoiada, and concealed with the utmoſt privacy till he was ſeven years of age. During ſix of thoſe years, Athaliah tyranniſed over Judah without controul, filling Jeruſalem with blood, and deſtroying the ſervants of the true God, that ſhe might the more effectually eſtabliſh the worſhip of Baal through the kingdom. By this time, her murders and impieties were grown to ſuch a height, that Jehoiada ſaw himſelf obliged to ſtop them, by producing the only remains of David's race, at once to convince the people, that God was ſtill mindful of his promiſe to that holy monarch; by preſerving this young deſcendant from him, as it were by a miracle, from the common ruin; and to inſpire his then deſponding ſubjects with a brave reſolution to ſhake off the bloody yoke of the reigning tyranneſs. To this end, he privately called ſome of the chiefs and elders of Judah, upon whoſe valour and fidelity he could depend, and having bound them under the ſtricteſt oaths of ſecrecy, he ſhewed them their young monarch, told them by what happy means he had been ſaved, and exhorted them to ſtand now, if ever, in the defence of their king, their religion, and liberty. The deſpairing chiefs, who imagined the cruel Athaliah had wholly extirpated the race of David, and had loſt all farther hopes in the promiſes made to his poſterity, received the news of their ſovereign's preſervation with a ſurpriſing joy; and, to give him an immediate earneſt of their future zeal and attachment, they paid their homage, and took an oath of fidelity to him, promiſing the high prieſt, at the ſame time, that they would immediately go and raiſe what forces they could, while he ſtrengthned himſelf in the temple, by retaining and arming all the prieſts, Levites, and Nethenims, who ſhould otherwiſe have gone out in their courſes, to make way for thoſe who came thither to vacate at the Divine Service. All this was accompliſhed with ſo much ſecrecy and expedition, that the temple was filled with armed men, unto whom Jehoiada appointed their ſeveral poſts; by which time the generals without had raiſed a ſufficient number of men, ready to ſecond them at the proper ſignal for action. When the day appointed was come, the young monarch was brought out, and conducted into the porch of the prieſt, with a numerous train of armed Levites, and there the high prieſt anointed and crowned him, and adminiſtred the uſual oath to him upon the Sacred Volumes. Immediately after which he was ſeated upon a throne, where he received the homage of all the people, who made that ſacred place reſound with the loyal acclamation, God ſave the king.

Among the numerous crowds, whom this noiſe brought to the temple, was the terrified queen, but whether alone, or attended with her guard, the Sacred Text has not declared. She ventured directly into the prieſts porch, from which her ſex and idolatry excluded her, and as ſoon as ſhe ſaw the young king ſeated on his throne, and attended with ſuch numbers of armed men, ſhe rent her robes, and in a deſperate rage ruſhed in among them, crying out treaſon: But Jehoiada, fearing leſt his zealous

Levites

Levites ſhould pollute that ſacred place with her blood, ordered her to be hurried out of it and put to death. The king was ſoon after conducted from the temple to the royal palace, and the tidings of this happy revolution were proclaimed through the kingdom. The high-prieſt, who by this time was in the greateſt eſteem, both with king and people, took hold of this favourable juncture of the public joy, to root out once more the worſhip of Baal; he began with exhorting them to renew their covenant with God; to renounce Baal and every other falſe deity, and to adhere ſtrictly to the true God. This was alſo performed with an uncommon readineſs and zeal; and as a mark of their ſincerity, they began with the temple of Baal, where having ſlain the infamous prieſt of that idol, at the foot of its altar, they pulled down the whole fabric to the ground; nor did they ſtop their hand, till they had likewiſe deſtroyed all the other temples, altars, and monuments of that idolatrous worſhip, which Athaliah and her predeceſſors had reared up both in Jeruſalem and Judah. On the other hand, Jehoiada, who by reaſon of the king's minority, was at the head of all affairs, both religious and civil, was making a new reformation at court, and in the temple, by naming thoſe who had ſhewed the greateſt bravery and zeal in the late revolution, to the higheſt poſts in the government, inſtead of thoſe who had been employed by the late uſurper, and by reſtoring that regularity in the divine ſervice, which had been interrupted during the reign of ſo many impious monarchs.

CHAP. XII.

1 Jehoaſh reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada. 4 He giveth order for the repair of the temple. 17 Hazel is diverted from Jeruſalem by a preſent of the hallowed treaſures. 19 Jehoaſh being ſlain by his ſervants, Amaziah ſucceedeth him.

IN the ſeventh year of Jehu, Jehoaſh began to reign; and forty years reigned he in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Zibiah of Beer-ſheba.

2 And Jehoaſh did that which was right in the ſight of the LORD all his days, wherein Jehoiada the prieſt inſtructed him.

3 But the high places were not taken away: the people ſtill ſacrificed, and burnt incenſe in the high places.

4 ¶ And Jehoaſh ſaid to the prieſts, All the money of the dedicated things that is brought into the houſe of the LORD, even the money of every one that paſſeth the account, the money that every man is ſet at, and all the money that cometh into any mans heart to bring into the houſe of the LORD.

5 Let the prieſts take it to them, every man of his acquaintance, and let them repair the breaches of the houſe, whereſoever any breach ſhall be found.

6 But it was ſo, that in the three and twentieth year of king Jehoaſh, the prieſts had not repaired the breaches of the houſe.

7 Then king Jehoaſh called for Jehoiada the prieſt, and the other prieſts, and ſaid unto them, Why repair ye not the breaches of the houſe? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the houſe.

8 And the prieſts conſented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the houſe.

9 But Jehoiada the prieſt took a cheſt and bored a hole in the lid of it, and ſet it beſide the altar, on the right ſide, as one cometh into the houſe of the LORD: and the prieſts that kept the door put therein all the money that was brought into the houſe of the LORD.

10 And it was ſo, when they ſaw that there was much money in the cheſt, that the kings ſcribe, and the high prieſt came up, and they put up in bags, and told the money that was found in the houſe of the LORD.

11 And they gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the overſight of the houſe of the LORD: and they laid it out to the carpenters and builders that wrought upon the houſe of the LORD.

12 And to maſons, and hewers of ſtone, and to buy timber, and hewed ſtone to repair the breaches of the houſe of the LORD, and for all that was laid out for the houſe to repair it.

13 Howbeit, there were not made for the houſe of the LORD, bowls of ſilver, ſnuffers, baſons, trumpets, any veſſels of gold, or veſſels of ſilver, of the money that was brought into the houſe of the LORD.

14 But they gave that to the workmen, and repaired therewith the houſe of the LORD.

15 Moreover, they reckoned not with the men into whoſe hand they delivered the money to be beſtowed on workmen: for they dealt faithfully.

16 The treſpaſs-money and ſin-money was not brought into the houſe of the LORD: it was the prieſts.

17 ¶ Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought againſt Gath, and took it: and Hazael ſet his face to go up to Jeruſalem.

18 And Jehoaſh king of Judah took all the hallowed things that Jehoſhaphat, and Jehoram, and Ahaziah his fathers, kings of Judah had dedicate, and his own hallowed things, and all the gold that was found in the treaſures of the houſe of the LORD, and in the kings houſe, and ſent it to to Hazael king of Syria, and he went away from Jeruſalem.

19 ¶ And the reſt of the acts of Joaſh and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And his ſervants aroſe, and made a conſpiracy, and ſlew Joaſh in the houſe of Millo, which goeth down to Silla.

21 For Jozachar the ſon of Shimeath, and Jehozabad the ſon of Shomer, his ſervants, ſmote him, and he died; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David, and Amaziah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. In the ſeventh year of Jehu, Jehoaſh began to reign, &c.] Thus did the Divine Providence preſerve the race of David from deſtruction; and Joaſh, who was proclaimed king in the ſeventh year of his age, and of Jehu's reign over Iſrael, continued to teſtify his grateful ſenſe of the mercies he had received, by his uncommon zeal for the worſhip of God, during the life of the pious and worthy high prieſt, ver. 2. which ſhews of what advantage it is to have good inſtructers and counſellors about a king. For Jehoiada, during his own life, preſerved Joaſh in a courſe of upright and religious conduct; but when this excellent man was dead, the king changed his manners, and was perſuaded by ſome of his flattering courtiers to embrace idolatry: and he had even the barbarous ingratitude to kill the ſon of this pious Jehoiada, to whom he had been indebted for his own preſervation and advancement to the throne.

One of the firſt cares of Joaſh after he came to age, and while his faithful counſellor the high prieſt was yet living, was to repair the dilapidations which had been made in the temple. To this end, he ordered the prieſts to take yearly circuits through all the cities of Judah, and to raiſe voluntary contributions among the people, 2 Chron. xxiv. 5. beſide the pole and redemption-money; to be employed in finiſhing thoſe repairs. The pole-money is ſuppoſed to have been the half ſhekel, which every individual was obliged to pay, firſt to the tabernacle, and afterward to the temple, and which continued to be paid till the deſtruction of the latter. As for the redemption-money, it was ſuch as was paid to the prieſts, either to be acquitted from certain oaths and vows, or for exchanging one beaſt for another, and ſuch like. This latter was certainly one part of the prieſts income, which the king had no power to alienate from them, unleſs it were by way of repriſal for the pole-money, which ought to have been employed in keeping the temple in repair, and which, it ſeems, the prieſts ſunk into their own pockets, leaving that ſacred ſtructure to go to ruin. They, however, looked upon the preſent appropriation of the redemption-money to the repairs of the temple, as an incroachment upon their revenues, and therefore were ſo ſhamefully remiſs in their execution of the king's orders, that he was obliged to ſend for them, and to reprove them for their negligence, and miſapplication of the ſacred money, and to diſcharge them at once from all ſuperintendence in the reparation of the temple, and from receiving any farther ſums toward that work: the care of which was then committed to the high prieſt and other officers of known integrity. The king likewiſe, in order to prevent all farther delays and miſapplications of the money, ordered the high prieſt to place a cheſt by the altar on the right ſide of the entrance into the houſe of the Lord, ver. 9. that is, on the inward ſide of the gate which opened into the court of the prieſts. But the poſition of this cheſt as it is repreſented in 2 Chron. xxiv. 8. where it is ſaid to have been ſet without, at the gate of the houſe of the Lord, inclined Dr. Lightfoot to think, that theſe two texts cannot relate to the ſame time. For at the firſt, the cheſt was placed in the court of the prieſts, near the Altar, as it is ſaid in the 9th ver. of this chapter. So that the money ſtill paſſed through the hand of the prieſts who took it of the people, in order to put it into the cheſt which was in their court, into which the people were not permitted to enter, and ſo could not ſee whether thoſe prieſts were faithful in the execution of their truſt, as, indeed, they ſeem not to have been. For the money not coming in ſo faſt this way, as might have been expected, the high prieſt, according to the above-mentioned Dr. Lightfoot, removed the cheſt, or cauſed another to be made, and placed it without the court, at the entrance into it, where every one might have acceſs to it; and then proclaimed through all the country, that they ſhould bring in their Money thither. When this wiſe regulation was made, the elders and other wealthy men of Judah, poured in their preſents with ſo much readineſs and munificence, that they ſoon contributed a ſum ſufficient to defray the expence of the reparations.

This money was immediately diſtributed among faithful workmen, who proceeded with ſuch integrity and expedition, that without being called to any account for the ſums they received from time to time, they compleated the work to the ſatisfaction of the king and people, and refunded the overplus into the king's hands. The Sacred Hiſtorian then informs us, that "there were not made for "the houſe of the Lord, bowls of ſilver, ſnuffers, baſons, "trumpets, any veſſels of gold, or veſſels of ſilver, of the "money that was brought into the houſe of the Lord," ver. 13. Theſe utenſils were indeed wanting, but the collected money being limited to the reparations of the temple, the king ordered that no veſſel of any ſort ſhould be bought, till the temple it ſelf was put into a good condition. So the LXX render it, there ſhall none be made for the houſe, &c. that is, the king would not have any veſſels or other utenſils made as long as the houſe of God needed any reparations. The maſons and carpenters therefore, and ſuch like workmen, had all the money given them, to lay it out according to their diſcretion upon the repairs of the temple alone: and when theſe were finiſhed, they gave an account of what money remained in their hands; and this was then laid out in the purchaſe of bowls of ſilver, and ſuch other veſſels as are mentioned ver. 13. And this account correſponds with that in 2 Chron. xxiv. 14.

If it ſhould be asked, how theſe veſſels and untenſils came to be wanting? the anſwer is, that it became neceſſary to place them in the temple, in the room of thoſe which Athaliah had conveyed from thence, into the temple of Baal, 2 Chron. xxiv. 7. where they had long been polluted in the ſervice of that idol, and conſequently were rendered unfit to be replaced in the houſe of God. The text farther informs us, "that the treſpaſs-money and the ſin-"money, was not brought in to the houſe of the Lord; "it was the prieſts." ver. 16. And therefore was not applied to any of the aforeſaid uſes, but was put into the hands of the prieſts, that ſacrifices for treſpaſſes and ſins might be offered for thoſe who gave it.

Ver. 17. Then Hazael king of Syria went up, and fought againſt Gath, and took it.] This was a celebrated city, and one of the five principalities of the Philiſtines; from whence king David took it, and annexed it to the dominions of Iſrael, 2 Sam. viii. 1. 1 Chron xviii. 1. but it was now wreſted from the latter by Hazael, the king of Syria, the murderer and ſucceſſor of Ben-hadad the ſecond.

——— And Hazael ſet his face to go up to Jeruſalem.] This prince having made himſelf maſter of Gath, plainly declared, by the diſpoſition of his affairs, that he intended to make an attempt upon Jeruſalem. This fell out after Joaſh had forſaken God, and apoſtatiſed to idolatry, as appears by the ſecond book of the Chronicles, chap. xxiv. where a much different relation is made of the expedition of the Syrians. Inſomuch that Abarbinel ſays there were two expeditions, and ſeveral Chriſtian writers have entertained the ſame opinion. In the firſt of them it is ſuppoſed, that Hazael came up in perſon againſt the Iſraelites, as is here related; but they then purchaſed peace of him. And then in the end of the year, after they had ſlain Zachariah the ſon of the high-prieſt Jehoiada, by the king's command, the war was renewed, tho' Hazael did not head his troops himſelf, but diſpatched a ſmall army which deſtroyed great numbers of the people, and ſent large ſpoils to Damaſcus, 2 Chron. xxiv. 23.

Joaſh

Joash was by this time ſo much deteſted for his impious aſſaſſination of Zachariah, that tho' he then laboured under ſome grievous diſeaſe, 2 Chron. xxiv. 25. ſome of his own ſervants conſpired againſt him, and murdered him in his bed, in the fortieth year of his reign, and crowned his ſon Amaziah in his ſtead; for they did not kill him with any intention to uſurp the kingdom, but only to revenge the blood of Zachariah, which proved not only the occaſion of his own death, but likewiſe cauſed him to be deprived of the royal ſepulchre; for tho' he was buried in the city of David, yet his body was not depoſited in the tomb of his anceſtors, but in ſome place apart, 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

CHAP. XIII.

1 Jehoahaz his wicked reign. 3 Jehoahaz oppreſſed by Hazael, is relieved by prayer. 8 Joaſh ſucceedeth him. 10 His wicked reign. 12 Jeroboam ſucceedeth him. 14 Eliſha dying, propheſieth to Joaſh three victories over the Syrians. 20 The Moabites invading the land, Eliſha's bones raiſe up a dead man. 22 Hazael dying, Joaſh getteth three victories over Benhadad.

IN the three and twentieth year of Joaſh the ſon of Ahaziah king of Judah, Jehoahaz the ſon of Jehu began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, and reigned ſeventeen years.

2 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, and followed the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, which made Iſrael to ſin, he departed not therefrom.

3 ¶ And the anger of the LORD was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Ben-hadad the ſon of Hazael, all their days.

4 And Jehoahaz beſought the LORD, and the LORD hearkned unto him: for he ſaw the oppreſſion of Iſrael, becauſe the king of Syria oppreſſed them.

5 (And the LORD gave Iſrael a ſaviour, ſo that they went out from under the hand of the Syrians: and the children of Iſrael dwelt in their tents, as beforetime.

6 Nevertheleſs, they departed not from the ſins of the houſe of Jeroboam, who made Iſrael ſin, but walked therein: and there remained the grove alſo in Samaria)

7 Neither did he leave of the people to Jehoahaz, but fifty horſemen, and ten chariots, and ten thouſand footmen; for the king of Syria had deſtroyed them, and had made them like the duſt by threſhing.

8 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

9 And Jehoahaz ſlept with his fathers, and they buried him in Samaria, and Joaſh his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

10 ¶ In the thirty and ſeventh year of Joaſh king of Judah, began Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, and reigned ſixteen years.

11 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD; he departed not from all the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael ſin: but he walked therein.

12 And the reſt of the acts of Joaſh, and all that he did, and his might wherewith he fought againſt Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

13 And Joaſh ſlept with his fathers, and Jeroboam ſat upon his throne: and Joaſh was buried in Samaria with the kings of Iſrael.

14 ¶ Now Eliſha was fallen ſick of his ſickneſs whereof he died, and Joaſh the king of Iſrael came down unto him, and wept over his face, and ſaid, O my father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof.

15 And Eliſha ſaid unto him, Take bow and arrows: and he took unto him bow and arrows.

16 And he ſaid to the king of Iſrael, Put thine hand upon the bow: and he put his hand upon it: and Eliſha put his hands upon the kings hands.

17 And he ſaid, Open the window eaſtward: and he opened it. Then Eliſha ſaid, Shoot: and he ſhot. And he ſaid, The arrow of the LORDS deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: for thou ſhalt ſmite the Syrians in Aphek, till thou have conſumed them.

18 And he ſaid, Take the arrows: and he took them. And he ſaid unto the king of Iſrael, Smite upon the ground: and he ſmote thrice, and ſtayed.

19 And the man of God was wroth with him, and ſaid, Thou ſhouldſt have ſmitten five or ſix times, then hadſt thou ſmitten Syria till thou hadſt conſumed it: whereas now thou ſhalt ſmite Syria but thrice.

20 ¶ And Eliſha died, and they buried him: and the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year.

21 And it came to paſs as they were burying a man, that behold, they ſpied a band of men, and they caſt the man into the ſepulchre of Eliſha: and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Eliſha, he revived, and ſtood up on his feet.

22 ¶ But Hazael king of Syria oppreſſed Iſrael all the days of Jehoahaz.

23 And the LORD, was gracious unto them, and had compaſſion on them, and had reſpect unto them, becauſe of his covenant with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, and would not deſtroy them, neither caſt he them from his preſence as yet.

24 So Hazael king of Syria died, and Ben-hadad his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

25 And Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the ſon of Hazael, the cities which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war: three times did Joaſh beat him, and recovered the cities of Iſrael.

Ver. 1. In the three and twentieth year of Joaſh the ſon of Ahaziah king of Judah, Jehoahaz the ſon of Jehu began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, and reigned ſeventeen years.] Some have raiſed a doubt with reſpect to this account, becauſe Joaſh began to reign in the ſeventh year of Jehu, chap. xii. 2. who reigned but 28 years, x. 36. from which if ſeven years be deducted, there will remain no more than twenty-one years, and not twenty-three, as is here ſaid. To which Kimchi and Abarbinel anſwer, there were two incomplete years; for when it is ſaid Joaſh reigned in the ſeventh year of Jehu, it muſt be underſtood of the beginning of his ſeventh year: and in like manner, when mention is here made of the three and twentieth year of Joaſh, it muſt be underſtood of the beginning of that year. And ſo they are called three and twenty, when, in reality, they were but one and twenty compleat years. Dr. Alix, however, thought it better to ſay, that there was an inter-regnum of a year between the death of Jehu, and the firſt of Jehoahaz.

Ver. 2. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, and followed the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat.] Inſtead of dreading that Divine Vengeance which had been inflicted on ſo many of his impious predeceſſors, he imitated the conduct of Jeroboam, who introduced the idolatry of the golden calves, and ſeduced the Iſraelites from the worſhip of the true God. But it appears by the event, that unrighteous monarchs are not privileged more than the meaneſt of men, to offend the King of kings with impunity.

Ver. 3. And the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Benhadad the ſon of Hazael, all their days.] Hazael was a ſcourge in the hand of God, to chaſtiſe the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah; and under him the Syrian monarchy roſe to its meridian. He ſeems, however, to have ſat very quietly on his throne, till he was provoked by Joram king of Iſrael, and Ahaziah king of Judah, who leagued againſt him, in order to wreſt Ramoth-gilead out of his hands, chap. viii. 28. in imitation of what their fathers had attempted in the reign of Benhadad, 1 Kings xxii. Hazael could not prevent them from poſſeſſing themſelves of that city, tho' Joram was dangerouſly wounded in the attempt, 2 Kings viii. 28, 29. But he made himſelf ample amends, by invading both the kingdoms of Judah and Iſrael, and purſuing them almoſt to deſtruction. He began with Jehu king of Iſrael, and ſubdued all in general that belonged to the kingdom of Iſrael on the other ſide Jordan; namely, the countries of Gilead and Baſhan, the two tribes, Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, chap. x. 32, 33.

In the proſecution of this conqueſt, he, no doubt, punctually fulfilled, by his cruel rage, all that the mournful prophet had predicted concerning him, in the remarkable converſation they had together, chap. viii. 12. Joſephus aſſures us he did, and that he neither ſpared man, woman, or child, where-ever he came, but put all to fire and ſword, (Antiq. l. 9. c. 8.

With the ſame fury and ſucceſs he waged war againſt Jehoahaz, the ſon of Jehu, till he had left him but fifty horſemen, ten chariots, and ten thouſand foot, ver. 7. for the reſt had periſhed in the battle againſt Hazael, who, as it is ſtrongly expreſſed, made them like the duſt by threſhing, ver. 7. and, indeed, he oppreſſed Iſrael all his days. Some likewiſe have imagined, that the expreſſion of the Sacred Hiſtorian, namely, that God delivered them into the hand of Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of Benhadad the ſon of Hazael, all their days, implies that Benhadad kept Iſrael in ſubjection as long as he lived. But the word their is not in the original, and it is evident from ver. 22. of this chapter, that the text means no ſuch thing, referring only to the days of Hazael. It is, however, likely, that Benhadad was taken in the government by his father, as his colleague, and that as long as they reigned together, they kept Iſrael under. St. Jerom writes, that all the ſubſequent kings of Syria were called Ben-hadad, from this ſon of Hazael, the third of the name, according to Scripture. But this is apparently a great miſtake. The ſon of Hazael borrowed the name of Ben-hadad, from the firſt race of the Damaſcene kings, to whom his father was no way related. The names Hadad and Ben-hadad, were affected, as it ſeems, by all the kings of Syria, from Hadadezer of Zobah downward. Ben-hadad ſignifies only the ſon of Hadad. The father of the firſt prince of this name is called Tabrimon; but it ſeems probable, that he was alſo ſtiled Hadad, ſince his ſon aſſumed the name of Ben-hadad.

Ver. 5. And the Lord gave Iſrael a ſaviour, ſo that they went out from under the hand of the Syrians.] Some underſtand by this ſaviour, an extraordinary captain, whom God raiſed up to fight their battles with great ſucceſs. But it being ſaid, that while Hazael lived, he oppreſſed them, ver. 22. it is more reaſonable to underſtand by this ſaviour, the ſon of Jehoahaz: who, when Hazael was dead, delivered them from their bondage, ver. 25. And perhaps he did this in the life-time of his father, who made him joint ſovereign with himſelf, three years before he died.

One would have thought that ſuch a deliverance as this would have reclaimed the Iſraelites from their idolatry; but neither their miſeries, nor God's mercies to them, wrought any alteration in them; and they continued in thoſe ſins, which had ruined the houſe of Jeroboam, and many of his ſucceſſors.

Jehoahaz, king of Iſrael, died after a reign of ſeventeen years, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Joaſh, who is alſo called Jehoaſh.

Ver. 10. In the thirty and ſeventh year of Joaſh king of Judah, began Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz to reign over Iſrael in Samaria.] A difficulty ſeems to ariſe, by comparing this verſe with the firſt: where it is ſaid, Jehoahaz, king of Iſrael, began to reign in the twenty-third year of of Joaſh king of Judah, and reigned ſeventeen years: From whence it follows, that Jehoaſh began to reign, not in the thirty-ſeventh, but in the thirty-ninth, or fortieth year of Joaſh king of Judah. But this only ſhews the truth of what has been obſerved on ver. 5. namely, that he reigned with his father three years; being the deliverer whom God was ſo gracious as to raiſe up in favour of Iſrael.

Ver. 13. And Joaſh ſlept with his fathers, and Jeroboam ſat upon his throne: and Joaſh was buried in Samaria with the kings of Iſrael.] The Sacred author of this book doth not here conclude the hiſtory of Joaſh; for he afterward relates ſeveral great actions which this prince performed: but being now to relate the particulars of Eliſha's death, upon which thoſe actions depended, he inſerts that account, before he proceeds to the acts of Joaſh.

Ver. 14. Now Eliſha was fallen ſick of his ſickneſs whereof he died.] This was in the tenth year of Joaſh, as the Jews affirm in Seder Olam Rabba, cap. 19. and from thence gather how long Eliſha continued a prophet in Iſrael; namely, from the nineteenth year of Jehoſhaphat, till this time, which was ſixty-five years.

——And Joaſh the king of Iſrael came down to him, and wept over his face, and ſaid, O my father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof.] Theſe are are the ſame words which Eliſha uttered concerning Elijah, when he was taken up to heaven, chap. ii. 12. ſignifying the great authority he had maintained among them, (which is included in the word father) and that by his counſel and prayers they had obtained glorious victories over their enemies.

Ver. 15. And Eliſha ſaid unto him, Take bow and arrows: and he took unto him bow and arrows.] The king having expreſſed his ſenſe for the approaching loſs of ſo great a protector as Eliſha, in the moſt pathetic terms, the prophet bid him take his bow and arrows in his hand, and put himſelf in a poſture of ſhooting out of his window eaſtward toward Syria; which being done, Eliſha placed his hand on that of the king, and bid him ſhoot: and, as the arrow flew, he cried out, The arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria, ver. 17. He then told the king, that he ſhould defeat the Syrians in Aphek till he had quite conſumed them. But when he afterward directed him to ſmite upon the ground with another arrow, and the king had done ſo three times, the prophet was diſpleaſed, and told him, that if he had ſtruck the ground five or ſix times, it would have been a certain ſign of his totally defeating his Syrian enemy; but ſince he had ſtayed his hand at the third ſtroke, he ſhould gain but three battles againſt him.

Ver. 20. And Eliſha died, and they buried him: and the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year.] This great prophet, ſoon after his conference with the king of Iſrael, died and was buried: and before the year was out, ſome Iſraelites going to inter a corpſe in the neighbourhood of Samaria, perceived a band of Moabites advancing toward them; upon which they caſt the body into Eliſha's tomb, and fled; but as ſoon as it had touched the bones of the dead prophet, the man revived, and ſtood upon his feet. The Jews ſay, that the perſon thus miraculouſly raiſed was called Sallum, and that he afterward became the father of ſeveral children.

The evangeliſt St. Luke, in his account of our bleſſed Saviour's burial, informs us, that Joſeph of Arimathea wrapped the Sacred Body in linnen, and laid it in a ſepulchre that was hewn in ſtone, wherein never man before was laid, St. Luke xxiii. 53. and we have the ſame account in St. John, chap. xix. 41. Perhaps thoſe Sacred Writers were ſenſible, that when the reſurrection of our bleſſed Lord could no longer be controverted by the Jews, theſe would ſay, that his dead body had been laid in a ſepulchre where ſome eminent prophet had formerly been buried, and was reſtored to life, in the ſame manner as the dead Iſraelite was raiſed by touching the bones of Eliſha. But, in order to invalidate all ſuch evaſions, both the inſpired writers expreſly declare, that the body of our Lord was depoſited in a ſepulchre wherein was never man yet laid.

The author of the book of Eccleſiaſticus has given us the panegyric of Eliſha in the following words: "Elias "it was who was covered with a whirlwind, and Eliſeus "was filled with his ſpirit: whilſt he lived, he was not "over-awed by any prince, neither could any bring him "into ſubjection. No word could overcome him, and "after his death his body propheſied. He did wonders "in his life, and at his death were his works marvellous," Eccluſ. xlviii. 12, 13, 14. Some authors, however, not content with the miracles this great prophet wrought during his life, and after his death, have accompanied his birth with a remarkable prodigy; for they gravely tell us, that one of Jeroboam's golden calves bellowed out the following words with ſo loud a voice, that they were heard from Gilgal to Jeruſalem: This is he who is to deſtroy the carved idols, and break the molten images in pieces, (Vid. Doroth. Epiphan. & Iſidor. de mort. prophet.)

Mohammed mentions Eliſha with great reſpect in the ſixth chapter of his Korân, and ranks him among thoſe holy men, who were favoured by God above the reſt of the world.

Ver. 24. So Hazael king of Syria died, and Ben-hadad his ſon reigned in his ſtead.] Hazael having tyrannized over the kingdoms of Iſrael and Judah, in the manner already mentioned, died, and was deified by his ſuperſtitious ſubjects: but conſidering the blindneſs of thoſe times, we need not be ſurprized at their rendring divine honours to ſo great and fortunate a prince as Hazael. He, as well as his predeceſſor Ben-hadad, adorned Damaſcus with temples, and the ſtatues of both theſe princes were carried about in proceſſion, in the days of Joſephus; and their antiquity was boaſted of by the Syrians.

Ver. 25. And Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the ſon of Hazael, the cities which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war.] Hazael took all the country on the other ſide of Jordan in the days of Jehu, chap. x. 33. and made farther conqueſts on this ſide Jordan, in the time of Jehoahaz: Whether Jehoaſh recovered all, is not certain; but it is here ſaid, that he regained what his father had loſt.

——— Three times did Joaſh beat him, and recovered the cities of Iſrael.] It is not eaſy to determine the time when Jehoaſh gained theſe three victories. Archbiſhop Uſher refers them to the ſixth and ſubſequent years of his reign, when having, as that prelate ſuppoſes, taken his ſon, the brave Jeroboam the ſecond, into conſortſhip with him on the throne; he left the kingdom under his care, whilſt he himſelf went out againſt the armies of Syria [Uſher Ann. ſub. A. M. 3168.]

CHAP. XIV.

1 Amaziah his good reign. 5 His juſtice on the murderers of his father. 7 His victory over Edom. 8 Amaziah provoking Jehoaſh, is overcome and ſpoiled. 16 Jeroboam ſucceedeth Jehoaſh. 17 Amaziah ſlain by a conſpiracy. 21 Azariah ſucceedeth him. 23 Jeroboam's wicked reign. 28 Zachariah ſucceedeth him.

IN the ſecond year of Joaſh ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, reigned Amaziah the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah.

2 He was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty and nine years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Jehoaddan of Jeruſalem.

3 And he did that which was right in the ſight of the LORD, yet not like David his father: he did according to all things as Joaſh his father did.

4 Howbeit, the high places were not taken away: as yet the people did ſacrifice, and burnt incenſe on the high places.

5 ¶ And it came to paſs aſſoon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, that he ſlew his ſervants which had ſlain the king his father.

6 But the children of the murderers he ſlew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moſes, wherein the LORD commanded, ſaying, The fathers ſhall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man ſhall be put to death for his own ſin.

7 He ſlew of Edom in the valley of ſalt, ten thouſand, and took Selah by war, and called the name of it Joktheel, unto this day.

8 ¶ Then Amaziah ſent meſſengers to Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz, ſon of Jehu king of Iſrael, ſaying, Come, let us look one another in the face.

9 And

9 And Jehoaſh the king of Iſrael ſent to Amaziah king of Judah, ſaying, The thiſtle that was in Lebanon, ſent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, ſaying, Give thy daughter to my ſon to wife: and there paſſed by a wild beaſt that was in Lebanon, and trod down the thiſtle.

10 Thou haſt indeed ſmitten Edom, and thine heart hath lifted thee up: glory of this, and tarry at home: for why ſhouldſt thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou ſhouldſt fall, even thou and Judah with thee?

11 But Amaziah would not hear: therefore Jehoaſh king of Iſrael went up, and he and Amaziah king of Judah looked one another in the face at Beth-ſhemeſh, which belongeth to Judah.

12 And Judah was put to the worſe before Iſrael, and they fled every man to their tents.

13 And Jehoaſh king of Iſrael took Amaziah king of Judah, the ſon of Jehoaſh the ſon of Ahaziah, at Beth-ſhemeſh, and came to Jeruſalem, and brake down the wall of Jeruſalem, from the gate of Ephraim, unto the corner-gate, four hundred cubits.

14 And he took all the gold and ſilver, and all the veſſels that were found in the houſe of the LORD, and in the treaſures of the kings houſe, and hoſtages, and returned to Samaria.

15 ¶ Now reſt of the acts of Jehoaſh, which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

16 And Jehoaſh ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria with the kings of Iſrael and Jeroboam his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

17 ¶ And Amaziah the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah, lived after the death of Jehoaſh ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, fifteen years.

18 And the reſt of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

19 Now they made a conſpiracy againſt him in Jeruſalem: and he fled to Lachiſh, but they ſent after him to Lachiſh, and ſlew him there.

20 And they brought him on horſes; and he was buried at Jeruſalem with his fathers in the city of David.

21 ¶ And all the people of Judah took Azariah (which was ſixteen years old) and made him king in ſtead of his father Amaziah.

22 He built Elath, and reſtored it to Judah, after that the king ſlept with his fathers.

23 ¶ In the fifteenth year of Amaziah, the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah, Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael began to reign in Samaria, and reigned forty and one years.

24 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD: he departed not from all the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin.

25 He reſtored the coaſt of Iſrael from the entring of Hamath, unto the ſea of the plain, according to the word of the LORD God of Iſrael, which he ſpake by the hand of his ſervant Jonah, the ſon of Amittai, the prophet, which was of Gath-heper.

26 For the LORD ſaw the affliction of Iſrael, that it was very bitter: for there was not any ſhut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Iſrael.

27 And the LORD ſaid not that he would blot out the name of Iſrael from under heaven: but he ſaved them by the hand of Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh.

28 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Jeroboam, and all that he did, and his might, how he warred, and how he recovered Damaſcus, and Hamath, which belonged to Judah, for Iſrael, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

29 And Jeroboam ſlept with his fathers, even with the kings of Iſrael; and Zachariah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. In the ſecond year of Joaſh ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, reigned Amaziah the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah.] This was, as Dr. Lightfoot obſerves, the thirty-eighth year of his father Joaſh king of Judah; three current years before his death. For his father had thrown himſelf into ſuch a miſerable condition, by his apoſtacy, and his murder of Zachariah, that he was become unfit to govern the kingdom, and was at laſt ſlain by his own ſervants, chap. xii. 20.

Ver. 5. And it came to paſs as ſoon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, that he ſlew his ſervants which had ſlain the king his father.] He durſt not venture upon this piece of juſtice till he was well ſettled in his authority; thoſe murderers being perſons of ſuch conſiderable power, that they ſeem to have continued ſtill at court; for they are called his ſervants. But tho' he cauſed theſe to be put to death, it is obſervable, that he ſpared their children, in obedience to the Moſaic law which ordained that children ſhould not ſuffer death for the crimes of their fathers, Deut. xxiv. 16. In this he acted like a good man, and we may reaſonably ſuppoſe, that all his predeceſſors predeceſſors had not been ſuch ſtrict obſervers of this law. The truth is, that Amaziah had ſeen ſuch ſevere judgments inflicted on his father Joaſh, and his apoſtate chiefs, as made him a long time afraid to imitate them; tho' he forgot them but too ſoon, and like Joaſh, begun his reign piouſly and ſucceſsfully, but made as impious and tragical an end of it, as will appear by the ſequel.

Ver. 7. He ſlew of Edom in the valley of ſalt, ten thouſand, and took Selah by war, and called the name of it Joktheel, unto this day.] The Edomites had revolted from Judah, in the days of Jehoram, chap. viii. 20. from which time they were governed by kings of their own. Amaziah was now deſirous to reduce them, and he gave them a ſignal overthrow in the valley of ſalt, the ſituation of which, the reader will find in our comment on 2 Sam. viii. 13. Ten thouſand Edomites were ſlain in battle there, and as many of them were taken priſonerss by the victorious troops of Amaziah. After which, their capital Selah, which we think was the famous Petra, (for Selah is the ſame in import with the word Petra, which ſignifies a rock) was taken from them by ſtorm. Selah was now by the conqueror called Joktheel; which ſignifies obedience of, or to, God: Becauſe Amaziah having taken it, ſettled, as ſome imagine, the laws and ſtatutes of Moſes in this place; or rather, he acknowledged, by giving it this name, that the poſſeſſion of it was a reward of his obedience to the man of God, who required him to diſmiſs all the forces he had hired of the Iſraelites, 2 Chron. xxv. 7. In which chapter, the particulars of this expedition againſt the Iſraelites, are related more at large.

Ver. 8. Then Amaziah ſent meſſengers to Jehoaſh the ſon of Jehoahaz, ſon of Jehu king of Iſrael, ſaying, Come, let us look one another in the face.] Amaziah had reaſon to reſent the ravages which the diſbanded Iſraelites had committed in his kingdom, during his expedition againſt Edom, 2 Chron. xxv. 13. and had he been leſs elated with his ſucceſs, he might have taken more proper meaſures for doing himſelf juſtice, and avenging the depredations his ſubjects had ſuſtained from thoſe troops. But he ſeems to have been above all conſiderations of this nature, and the inſolent challenge which he ſent to Joaſh king of Iſrael, and grandſon of Jehu, Come, let us look one another in the face, plainly ſhews, that he wanted only to try his valour or fortune with him. On the other hand, Joaſh had no leſs reaſon to truſt to his own after having given ſuch ſignal proofs of his courage and conduct, in the three victories he had gained over the Syrians, and by recovering all or moſt of the places which they had taken from his predeceſſors. He therefore could not forbear expreſſing the utmoſt indignation at the receipt of this arrogant defiance from the king of Judah; and the anſwer he returned, was couched in the moſt ſcornful and mortifying terms, under the allegory of a deſpicable thiſtle, which having aſpired to an alliance with the noble cedar, had, for his ambition, been cruſhed under the feet of a wild beaſt: He concluded with adviſing Amaziah to reſt contented with his late victory over the Edomites, and not ſuffer his ambition to drive him into a deſperate attempt, which, in all probability, would end in the total deſtruction of his kingdom, ver. 9, 10. The king of Judah, who was not to be humbled by words, was only the more exaſperated at this contemptuous anſwer, and was as expeditious as poſſible to march againſt the rival of his glory: The two armies met in the neighbourhood of Beth-ſhemeſh, a city belonging to the prieſts, in the tribe of Judah; and there the troops of Amaziah were totally routed. Joſephus adds, that they were ſeized with ſuch a pannic at the very firſt onſet, that they turned their backs without ſtriking one blow, and left their king at the mercy of the conqueror. [Antiq l. 9. c. 10.] Amaziah was actually taken priſoner, and Joaſh marched on with him, and his own army to Jeruſalem, where he obliged the captive king to purchaſe his liberty, at the expence of all the gold and ſilver which could be found, either in the temple, or in his own treaſury: After which, having demoliſhed about four or five hundred cubits length of the city wall, and taken ſome hoſtages with him, he returned triumphant to Samaria.

Joaſh did not out-live this victory above one year; and he was ſucceeded by his ſon Jeroboam, the ſecond of that name, after he had reigned ſixteen years. As for Amaziah, tho' he out-lived his diſgrace above fifteen years, yet we read no more of him till the latter end of his reign; when a conſpiracy was formed againſt him at Jeruſalem; for that city having been expoſed to reproach by the great breach made in the wall, and the loſs of its beſt ornaments; beſide the indignity ſeveral of the inhabitants had ſuſtained by the captivity of their children, who had been carried away as hoſtages for their good behaviour; Amaziah became odious to the great men of the city; all theſe diſhonours and calamities being brought upon them by his raſh pride, and apoſtacy from God; for which reaſon they determined to rid themſelves of a prince whoſe conduct had proved ſo fatal and inglorious to them. Amaziah having diſcovered this conſpiracy, was obliged to flee to Lachiſh, a fortified city on the borders of the Philiſtines, where, notwithſtanding his precaution, he was purſued and murdered by the conſpirators. After which, he was carried back on horſes to Jeruſalem, where he was buried with his anceſtors, and his ſon Azariah, who is likewiſe called Uzziah, was proclaimed in his ſtead. Both the names of this prince have much the ſame import; one ſignifying the help, the other, the ſtrength of God.

Ver. 22. He built Elath, and reſtored it to Judah.] It has been already obſerved, that on Jehoram's having revolted from God, the Edomites revolted from him, chap. viii. 20. and having expelled his viceroy, choſe them a king of their own, under whoſe conduct they recovered their ancient liberty, and were no more ſubject to the kings of Judah. From the time of this revolution, the Jewiſh traffic through the Red-ſea, had an interruption till the reign of Azariah, or Uzziah, the ſon of Amaziah; but he, in the very beginning of his reign, having recovered Elath again to Judah, fortified it a-new, and having driven out the Edomites, planted it again with his own people, and there renewed their old traffic, which was from thence carried on and continued till the reign of Ahaz. What revolution it then ſuſtained, ſhall be conſidered in its proper place.

Azariah performed ſeveral other great actions, the particulars of which are recorded in the ſecond book of Chronicles, chap. xxvi. where they ſhall be conſidered by us as they occur.

Ver. 23. In the fifteenth year of Amaziah, the ſon of Joaſh king of Judah, Jeroboam the ſon of Joaſh king of Iſrael, began to reign in Samaria, and he reigned forty and one years.] Whilſt Amaziah ſpent the remnant of his reign in a kind of inactive ſecurity in Jeruſalem, Jeroboam the ſecond, the brave great-grandſon of Jehu, ſeemed ordain'd by providence to reſtore the kingdom of Iſrael to its primitive ſplendor and greatneſs. His long reign gave him more than ſufficient time to perform that work, to which he was encouraged by the prophet Jonah the ſon of Amittai, who foretold that he ſhould compleat the deliverance of Iſrael, which his father had begun. This is the ſame Jonah or Jonas, as he is called, Matth. xii. 41. who was afterward ſent to preach repentance to the Ninevites. Archbp. Uſher juſtly obſerves, that he was a native of Gath-hepher, a town in the tribe of Zebulun in Galilee of the Gentiles, againſt that falſe affirmation of the Jews, That out of Galilee never aroſe a prophet, John vii. 52. [Vid. Uſher Ann. ſub. A. M. 3197.]

Jeroboam took the Syrian capital Damaſcus, and Hamath, with all their territories; both which had formerly belonged to Judah, (2 Sam. viii. 6. 2 Chron. viii. 3.) and all the country on the other ſide Jordan, from Hamath to the ſea of the plain, or the Dead-ſea. God ſhewed Judah this favour, not for any goodneſs in them, but in compaſſion to their miſery, which was greater than could be expreſſed; for men of all ranks were deſtroyed, or, as ſome interpret it, they had loſt all they had in their houſes, and all that was in the field; and there was none to relieve, much leſs to deliver them, ver. 26. But ſince the Lord had not yet decreed to root them out of their own land, he therefore condeſcended to ſave them, even by the hand of this idolatrous prince, for ſuch he was, ver. 24.

The full particulars of all the glorious actions which Jeroboam performed are unknown to us, having been written in the annals of the kings of Iſrael, long ſince loſt. He died in the 41ſt year of his reign; was buried with his anceſtors in Samaria, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Zachariah.

riah. Jeroboam was the third king of Iſrael of the race of Jehu, and ſo might be ſaid to ſleep with his fathers, even with the kings of Iſrael, ver. 29.

Jeroboam's reign was indeed a glorious one, with reſpect to his conqueſts, but it is branded for various idolatries, and likewiſe for the injuſtice, luxury, rapine, and other immoralities which reigned at that time; inſomuch, that the prophets Hoſea and Amos, who lived in his days, give us very dreadful accounts of the diſorders and debauchery which were committed both in Samaria and in Iſrael, and were ſent to foretell the ſad and total ruin which their ſins would ſhortly bring upon the whole kingdom. Amos, in particular, was ſent from Judah, where he was a common ſhepherd, to denounce the moſt ſevere judgments againſt Iſrael; which he did under the types of graſhoppers, that deſtroyed all the fruit of the land; as alſo of a devouring fire, and likewiſe of a plummet line, and a tottering wall, ready to bury the idols of Iſrael under its ruins, (Amos vii.) For theſe prophecies he was accuſed to the king, by Amaziah, one of the idolatrous prieſts of Bethel, and by him was commanded to return to Judah and prophecy there; which he was forced to do, tho' not before he had denounced this heavy judgment againſt the meſſenger Amaziah, that his wife ſhould become an open proſtitute in the city; that his ſons and daughters ſhould fall by the ſword, and himſelf die in a polluted land, namely, that of Aſſyria, (Amos vii. 17.) whither the ten tribes were ſoon after carried away captive, and he, in all probability, with them.

CHAP. XV.

1 Azariah his good reign. 5 He dying a leper, Jotham ſucceedeth. 8 Zachariah, the laſt of Jehu his generation, reigning ill, is ſlain by Shallum. 13 Shallum reigning a month, is ſlain by Menahem. 16 Menahem ſtrengtheneth himſelf by Pul. 21 Pekahiah ſucceedeth him. 23 Pekahiah is ſlain by Pekah. 27 Pekah is oppreſſed by Tiglath-Pileſer, and ſlain by Hoſhea. 32 Jotham's good reign. 36 Ahaz ſucceedeth him.

IN the twenty and ſeventh year of Jeroboam king of Iſrael, began Azariah ſon of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.

2 Sixteen years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned two and fifty years in Jeruſalem, and his mothers name was Jecholiah, of Jeruſalem.

3 And he did that which was right in the ſight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah had done;

4 Save that the high places were not removed: the people ſacrificed, and burnt incenſe ſtill on the high places.

5 ¶ And the LORD ſmote the king, ſo that he was a leper unto the day of his death, and dwelt in a ſeveral houſe: and Jotham the kings ſon was over the houſe, judging the people of the land.

6 And the reſt of the acts of Azariah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

7 So Azariah ſlept with his fathers, and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David; and Jotham his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

8 ¶ In the thirty and eighth year of Azariah king of Judah, did Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam reign over Iſrael in Samaria ſix months.

9 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, as his fathers had done: he departed not from the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin.

10 And Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh conſpired againſt him, and ſmote him before the people, and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead.

11 And the reſt of the acts of Zachariah, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.

12 This was the word of the LORD which he ſpake unto Jehu, ſaying, Thy ſons ſhall ſit on the throne of Iſrael, unto the fourth generation. And ſo it came to paſs.

13 ¶ Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh began to reign in the nine and thirtieth year of Uzziah king of Judah, and he reigned a full month in Samaria.

14 For Menahem the ſon of Gadi went up from Tirzah, and came to Samaria, and ſmote Shallum the ſon of Jabeſh in Samaria, and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead.

15 And the reſt of the acts of Shallum, and his conſpiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.

16 ¶ Then Menahem ſmote Tiphſah, and all that were therein, and the coaſts thereof from Tirzah: becauſe they opened not to him, therefore he ſmote it, and all the women therein that were with child, he ript up.

17 In the nine and thirtieth year of Azariah king of Judah, began Menahem the ſon of Gadi to reign over Iſrael, and reigned ten years in Samaria.

18 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD: he departed not all his days from the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin.

19 And Pul the king of Aſſyria came againſt the land: and Menahem gave Pul a thouſand talents of ſilver, that his hand might be with him, to confirm the kingdom in his hand.

20 And Menahem exacted the money of Iſrael, even of all the mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty ſhekels of ſilver, to give to the king of Aſſyria: ſo

the

the king of Aſſyria turned back, and ſtayed not there in the land.

21 ¶ And the reſt of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael?

22 And Menahem ſlept with his fathers, and Pekahiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

23 ¶ In the fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekahiah the ſon of Menahem began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, and reigned two years.

24 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, he departed not from the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin.

25 But Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, a captain of his, conſpired againſt him, and ſmote him in Samaria, in the palace of the kings houſe, with Argob and Arieh, and with him fifty men of the Gileadites: and he killed him, and reigned in his room.

26 And the reſt of the acts of Pekahiah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.

27 ¶ In the two and fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekah the ſon of Remaliah began to reign over Iſrael in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.

28 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, he departed not from the ſins of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin.

29 In the days of Pekah king of Iſrael, came Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, and took Ijon and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kedeſh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Aſſyria.

30 And Hoſhea the ſon of Elah made a conſpiracy againſt Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, and ſmote him, and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead, in the twentieth year of Jotham the ſon of Uzziah.

31 And the reſt of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Iſrael.

32 ¶ In the ſecond year of Pekah the ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael, began Jotham the ſon of Uzziah king of Judah to reign.

33 Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned ſixteen years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Jeruſha, the daughter of Zadok.

34 And he did that which was right in the ſight of the LORD: he did according to all that his father Uzziah had done.

35 ¶ Howbeit, the high places were not removed: the people ſacrificed and burnt incenſe ſtill in the high places: he built the higher gate of the houſe of the LORD.

36 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

37 (In thoſe days the LORD began to ſend againſt Judah, Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the ſon of Remaliah)

38 And Jotham ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father, and Ahaz his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. In the twenty and ſeventh year of Jeroboam king of Iſrael, began Azariah ſon of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.] This verſe has been thought to contain a great difficulty; in the ſolution of which, commentators have varied not a little from each other. Some have obſerved, that as Amaziah, the father of Azariah, lived but fifteen years after the beginning of Jeroboam's reign, chap. xiv. 17. Therefore Azariah began his reign, not in the twenty-ſeventh, but in the beginning of the ſeventeenth of Jeroboam. Others think the throne was vacant eleven, or rather twelve years, between the death of Amaziah and the inauguration of Azariah. Dr. Lightfoot declares himſelf of this opinion, and obſerves, that Azariah being but ſixteen years of age in the twenty-ſeventh of Jeroboam, he was but four years old at his father's death; and the throne being empty for eleven or twelve years, the government was managed by ſome of the grandees in his minority. Ralbag, on the other hand, will have theſe twenty-ſeven years of Jeroboam, not to be thoſe which were paſt, but thoſe which were to come; and the meaning, according to him, is, that Azariah was made king when Jeroboam had yet twenty-ſeven years to reign, before the family of Jehu came to an end. For, after this, Jeroboam reigned twenty-ſix years, and his ſon ſix months, which make twenty-ſeven imperfect years. This Abarbinel ſuppoſes is the literal ſenſe, but ſurely he did not conſider that it is no way agreeable to the conſtant account of the reigns of other kings; for which reaſon we think it ought to be rejected. And, indeed, all this ſeeming difficulty will immediately vaniſh, if we only agree with archbiſhop Uſher, and the margin of our Bibles, that this twenty-ſeventh year of Jeroboam, was the twenty-ſeventh from his being admitted copartner with his father Jehoaſh, and but the ſixteenth from the time of his reigning ſole monarch.

Azariah governed well in the former part of his reign, while he was wholly directed by Zechariah (2 Chron. xxvi. 5.) not the prophet of that name, who lived after the return from the captivity, but another, who is only known for the great wiſdom and piety of his counſels to this young monarch; ſo that during the life of this faithful counſellor, Azariah became equally conſpicuous for his zeal againſt idolatry, and his pious imitation of the beſt of his predeceſſors. The high places, indeed, were not removed; but this, as we have already obſerved, was a common error, which continued through the reigns of the beſt of their kings, till the time of Hezekiah. This prince was likewiſe rendered illuſtrious for his great ſucceſs againſt ſeveral of his neighbours, eſpecially the Philiſtines, and for a number of other actions that were equally great and beneficent to his kingdom, as will appear by the xxvith chapter of the ſecond book of the Chronicles, when we come to conſider it in the courſe of this work. So that whether we look upon him in peace or war, he ſeems to have arrived at the height of glory and wealth.

But all this he at laſt unhappily loſt by one raſh act; namely, his attempting to infringe upon the ſacerdotal office, and to burn incenſe upon the ſacred altar, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16. And tho' the high prieſt Azariah, at the head of fourſcore other zealous prieſts, repreſented to him, that it was a province which belonged only to the ſons of Aaron, the infatuated king would not deſiſt from it, till he felt himſelf ſmitten with a leproſy, in ſuch a ſudden and extraordinary manner, as made him ſenſible that it was ſent from God, as a puniſhment for his preſumption. The king was then ſtruck with ſuch terror and remorſe, that he made what haſte he could, not only out of that ſacred place, but even out of the city, and went to live in a ſeveral houſe, ver. 5. by which the Jews underſtand, a houſe in the country, where he continued, infected with that diſtemper; ſecluded from common ſociety, and deprived of the regal power, to the day of his death. And he was buried in a ſepulchre apart, adjoining to that of his anceſtors, 2 Chron. xxvi. 23. He died in the fifty-ſecond year of his reign, and the ſixty-eighth of his age, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Jotham, who had taken the government upon himſelf, four years before the death of his father. The author of the Chronicles adds, in the chapter laſt cited, ver. 22. that the hiſtory of Uzziah, or Azariah, was written by Iſaiah the ſon of Amos; but we find nothing now of him, except his name, in the writings of that great prophet.

Ver. 8. In the thirty and eighth year of Azariah king of Judah, did Zachariah the ſon of Jeroboam reign over Iſrael in Samaria ſix months.] Zachariah was the great-grandſon of Jehu; and ſo far was God's promiſe to this laſt fulfilled, that the kingdom ſhould continue in his family to the fourth generation; but his threatnings againſt that kingdom did not lag behind, and we may date the downfall of Iſrael from the reign of Zachariah. For from that time, we read of nothing but treaſons and rebellions; murders, anarchy, and univerſal deſolation. The great Uſher obſerves here, that there muſt have been an interregnum of eleven years and a half, before Zachariah aſcended the throne, without which ſuppoſition, it will be impoſſible to make his death, and the ſhort reign of Shallum coincide with the thirty-ninth year of Azariah king of Judah, ver. 8, 17. Zachariah trod in the iniquitous ſteps of Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, and therefore God ſuffered him to be cut off in a ſhort time, for he had ſcarce reigned ſix months, before he was publicly aſſaſſinated by Shallum, one of his own domeſtics, according to Joſephus, [Antiq. l. ix. c. 11.] who ſeized upon the kingdom, and was himſelf murdered by Menahem, Zachariah's general, in the metropolis of Samaria. Aſſoon as this laſt was ſeated upon the throne, he returned to Tirzah, a city in the tribe of Ephraim, and formerly the reſidence of Jeroboam the firſt, 1 Kings xiv. 17. the inhabitants of which place knowing, that he had no title to the kingdom, refuſed to open their gates to him; upon which he took it by force, and deſtroyed it, together with all the adjacent territory as far as Tiphſah, another city in the ſame tribe, where he put all the inhabitants to the ſword, and committed the moſt horrid cruelties on their pregnant women, that ever were acted by the vileſt barbarians. It was not long, however, before he ſaw himſelf invaded by Pul king of Aſſyria; and as he was not in a condition to oppoſe him, he found himſelf obliged to purchaſe his friendſhip, at the price of a thouſand talents of ſilver, which he levied upon the wealthieſt of his own ſubjects, whom he compelled to pay fifty ſhekels per head; upon which Pul returned home.

This famous Aſſyrian monarch is alſo called Phul, and miſtakenly by the LXX. Phua, an inaccuracy in the tranſcription, and owing to the very near reſemblance of the Greek Λ lambda, and Α, alpha; ſo that it is no wonder that this name ſhould, in the Greek character, have been written ΦΟΥΑ, Phua, inſtead of ΦΟΥΛ, Phul. He is the firſt king of Aſſyria mentioned in Scripture, from the time that the land was planted by Aſhur, and ought not to be confounded with the kings of the Medes, and the Babylonians, as has been cuſtomary. This Phul was by his name a pure Aſſyrian, and not a Chaldean or Babylonian, as he is miſtaken to have been by ſome, who make him the ſame with the Beleſis of Cteſias, who, in conjunction with Arbaces, overthrew the Aſſyrian power, than which no poſition can be more groſs. That he was the firſt king of Aſſyria, appears by his name, which is ſimple, and not compounded, as the reſt we read of are. The Aſſyrian names are for the moſt part compounded of the ſimple names of their gods; and the name of this king we find a primitive, as we may call it, compounded in the names of other princes in theſe parts, as in Tiglath-pul-aſſer, commonly wrote and pronounced Tiglath-pileſer; Nebo-pul-aſſur, and the like. From this circumſtance, and the affinity of the name itſelf, he is, with ſeeming certainty ſaid to have be been the Aſſyrian, Syrian, or Tyrian Belus. [See Sir Iſaac Newton's Chron. of ancient kingdoms amended, p. 279.] Pul is pronounced Pol, and Pal, whence without any ſtraining of the point, we may derive the Bal, Bel, or Belus of the Greeks and Latins. That he ſhould have been the Belus of Syria, Phœnicia, and other places, will not be wondered at by thoſe who conſider, that the Aſſyrians impoſed their own idolatry and religion on all the nations they conquered; as alſo that they conſecrated all their kings into deities. It was the cuſtom of the ancient Syrians, long before them, to deify their kings, and we have already ſeen that their Adad, king of gods, was no more than their dead king Ben-hadad the ſecond, or perhaps his fortunate ſucceſſor Hazael, who, as a king of Syria, was alſo called Adad, or Hadad. We could likewiſe prove, were it neceſſary, that Adad, and Cronus, and Aſtarte, are of late date, in compariſon of what many learned men have thought, and we now ſay the ſame of Belus, who was no other than the Pul before us, and conſequently later than the ancient gods of the proper Syria. Thus it is natural to conclude from all circumſtances, and we muſt ſubſcribe to it, unleſs we reject the plain evidence of Scripture, for the idle tales of profane authors, who confound rather than inform us. But it would be odd indeed, ſhould we rely on accounts which are acknowledged to be fables, in contempt of what can be ſo ſelf-evidently collected from the text of Scripture hiſtory. To dwell on the various opinions of chronologers and hiſtorians concerning this man, would draw us into a tedious length; we ſhall therefore paſs them over with this ſingle obſervation, that thoſe who have adhered to the fabulous hiſtory of Cteſias, and endeavoured to connect it with the hiſtory of Sacred Scripture, have run into inextricable mazes and endleſs errors. Our buſineſs then is to prove this man to have been the firſt founder of the Aſſyrian monarchy, in order to which we need only borrow the arguments alledged by the great Sir Iſaac Newton, for the eſtabliſhment of this point. Firſt, Jonah propheſied when Iſrael was in affliction under the king of Syria, about ſixty years before the reign of Pul. Secondly, Nineveh, tho' then a city of large extent, was full of paſtures for cattle, ſo that it contained but about 120000 perſons, Jonah iv. 11. Theſe are thought by ſome to have been children, becauſe it is ſaid in the paſſage laſt cited, that they could not diſcern between their right hand and their left: but why this ſhould not be as well underſtood of their blindneſs and ignorance in a religious ſenſe, we know not; ſo that it is very probable, that the grown perſons were alſo included in the number. Thirdly, Nineveh was not yet grown ſo potent as not to be terrified at the preaching of Jonah, and to fear being invaded by its neighbours, and ruined within forty days. Its king was not yet called king of Aſſyria, but king of Nineveh, Jonah iii. 6, 7. and his proclamation for a faſt was not publiſhed in ſeveral nations, nor in all Aſſyria, but only in Nineveh, and perhaps in the villages thereof. But when Nineveh was exalted over all Aſſyria, properly ſo called, and this kingdom began to make war upon the neighbouring nations, its kings were no longer called kings of Nineveh, but began to be ſtiled kings of Aſſyria. Our moſt learned author then obſerves, that Amos, who propheſied ſoon after Jeroboam the ſecond had ſubdued the kingdoms of Damaſcus and Hamath, and about ten or twenty years before the reign of Pul, never once names the Aſſyrians, whoſe monarchy growing up afterward, is upon all occaſions named in the propheſies of Iſaiah, Jeremiah, miah, Ezekiel, Hoſea, Micah, Nahum, Zephaniah, and Zechariah, which were penned after the prophecy of Amos.

Sir Iſaac Newton then concludes Pul to have been the firſt Aſſyrian who was a conqueror; that he was the firſt who advanced the kingdom on this ſide the Tigris; that he was a great warrior; that he might have founded or inlarged the city of Babylon, and built the old palace; that he may have left that city and the province of Chaldæa to a younger ſon, who may have been Nabonaſſar; and that the famed Semiramis may have been his daughter-in-law: but as we may have occaſion to reſume thoſe points in the courſe of this work, we ſhall therefore deſiſt from any farther notice of them at preſent.

Thoſe who follow the Verſion of the Seventy, believe that Pul was invited by Menahem to come to his aſſiſtance. One of the prophets upbraids, indeed, the king and people of Samaria, with ſending to Aſſyria for help, and threatens them with being ſent captives thither on that account; but the original expreſly affirms, that he came againſt, or invaded the land; and the book of Chronicles declares, that God ſtirred up the ſpirit of Pul againſt him, as he afterward did that of Tiglath-pileſer, who carried away the two tribes and half beyond Jordan into captivity, 1 Chron. v. 26. Joſephus reckons this invaſion of Pul to have happened toward the latter end of Menahem's reign, (Antiq. l. 9. c. 11.) but Uſher, whom we follow, places it in the beginning of it.

Menahem reigned quietly the remaining eleven years of his life, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Pekahiah, in the fiftieth year of Azariah, or Uzziah king of Judah. The reign of Pekahiah was ſhort, both becauſe he himſelf was wicked, and his father alſo was an uſurper; he therefore periſhed by ſuch a conſpiracy as his father made againſt Shallum; for he was ſlain in his own palace, after a reign of two years, by Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, one of his generals, who aſcended the throne about a year before Jotham ſucceeded his father in Judah. Pekah was likewiſe an impious prince, and followed the ſteps of his predeceſſors; ſo that his reign proved troubleſome and unſucceſsful, and ended in a violent death.

Ver. 29. In the days of Pekah king of Iſrael, came Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kedeſh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and carried them captive to Aſſyria.] Tiglath-pileſer ſucceeded Pul on the throne of Aſſyria, and is ſuppoſed to have been his ſon, but upon no certain authority. He is alſo called Tiglath-pilneſar, Theglath-phalaſar, Theglath-phellaſor, Thilgamas, as ſuppoſed, and alſo Ninus junior, according to Caſtor, (Apud Euſeb. Chron.) Dean Prideaux, by an unaccountable inadvertency, takes him for Arbaces the Mede (Connect. of the Old and New Teſt. book 1. part 1. at the beginning.) Some are willing to derive the firſt part of his name from Diglito, one way of pronouncing a name belonging to the river Tigris. Others are ſo far from thinking him to have been the ſon of Pul, that they even make him a ſtranger to his line. Rollin, miſled by that great and otherwiſe learned guide archbiſhop Uſher, makes Pul to have been the father of Sardanapalus, (Hiſt. of the Aſſyr. in the Engliſh tranſl. p. 25.) by an extraordinary inatttenion in the archbiſhop, who thought it muſt have been ſo, becauſe in the name Sardanapalus, or Sardan-Pul, he could perceive a relation between this laſt, and this firſt Aſſyrian king, forgetting that, for the very ſame reaſon, Tiglath-pul-aſſur might have more naturally appeared his ſon, eſpecially as he is the king of Aſſyria, who is expreſly ſaid to have ſucceeded him in Scripture. By what biaſſed him to make this miſtake, he might alſo, and very naturally, have concluded, that Tiglath-pul-aſſur, and Sardan-pul, were one and the ſame perſon, and ſo have put an end to the monarchy, e'er it well had a beginning. The firſt and ſecond monarchy, according to the ſcheme of archbiſhop Uſher, adopted by Prideaux and Rollin, ſo entirely repugnant to all good hiſtory, ſacred or profane, may ſerve to ſhew how irreconcileable the latter is with the former, in what concerns this empire. Le Clerc was ſo ſenſible of this, that he declares in his comment on this verſe, which firſt makes mention of Tiglath-pileſar, that if the common accounts of the Babylonians and Medes are true, of their having held the eaſt under ſubjection one after another, there can be no knowing the meaning of theſe words; adding, that the learned are now ſenſible there were ſeveral ſorts of independent kingdoms in thoſe days, to the eaſtward of Euphrates, and that ſometimes one of them was uppermoſt, and ſometimes another: that at this time it happened that the Aſſyrians were moſt powerful; who, now croſſing the Tigris, had carried their arms through Meſopotamia, and from thence over the Euphrates into Syria and Paleſtine. In a word, we cannot but reckon this king to have been the ſon of Pul; for from the time of Pul's appearance to the firſt of this monarch's appearance, is a ſpace, according to Uſher himſelf, of no more than about twenty-four years; ſo that the latter very naturally ſucceeds the former. It is therefore a little diſagreeable to ſee them ſo diſ-joined in Rollin, from whoſe judgment and converſance with the labours and improvements of the later writers we might have expected better things.

Tiglath-pileſer, upon what particular motive we know not, fell upon the kingdom of Iſrael; took the places mentioned in this 29th verſe, and carried the inhabitants captive into Aſſyria, thereby, as we may ſuppoſe, the better to ſecure theſe diſtant parts of his empire in their allegiance: For ſuch a captivation muſt naturally have weakened them, and was rightly calculated to deter the remaining people from incurring ſo hard a fate; and on the other hand, may have contributed to the increaſe of his power, by peopling ſome tract more immediately under his eye. This was certainly the moſt extraordinary method that could poſſibly be taken to ſecure the empire under due ſubjection, and was the conſtant practice of his ſucceſſors, as we may juſtly ſuppoſe, for the ſame reaſons. We may add to, that this practice is, in all its circumſtances, ſo affecting, and muſt have cauſed ſuch an utter oblivion of the original nations in thoſe parts, that if Cteſias had known any thing perfectly of the Aſſyrian affairs, he could never have omitted it, or forborn to have improved it after his manner, which we no where find that he did.

As for Pekah king of Iſrael, after he had the mortification to ſee one whole tribe torn from him by a foreign power, and his kingdom, during the laſt ten years of his reign, reduced to anarchy and rebellion; he was murdered, and ſucceeded by Hoſhea the ſon of Elah, in the twentieth year of his reign, and about three years after the death of Jotham king of Judah.

Ver. 32. In the ſecond year of Pekah the ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael, began Jotham the ſon of Uzziah king of Judah to reign.] Jotham was twenty-five years of age at the death of his father Azariah, in conjunction with whom he had then reigned four years; and he reigned ſixteen years alone. This ſolves a difficulty which ſeems to ariſe by comparing the 30th verſe of this chapter with the thirty-third: In the former of which it is ſaid, that Hoſhea ſlew Pekah in the twentieth year of Jotham the king of Judah; and in the latter, that Jotham reigned ſixteen years in Jeruſalem. Theſe ſixteen years being as we have already intimated the ſpace of time in which he reigned by himſelf; and the twenty years being the whole duration of his reign, including the four years wherein he governed jointly with his father.

Jotham was a wiſe and pious prince, and appears to have inherited all his father's vertues, without any intermixture of his vices, and he was bleſſed with extraordinary ſucceſs. At length, having repaired and beautified the temple, fortified the city, and done many other public acts, Jotham died in peace, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Ahaz.

Ver. 37. (In thoſe days the Lord began to ſend againſt Judah Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah the ſon of Remaliah)] Theſe two kings of Syria and Iſrael entered into a confederacy againſt Judah, and made preparations for war before the death of Jotham, but this good prince was ſo happy as to be laid in his grave in peace, before the intended hoſtilities began, and they were not executed till the reign of the next king, as we ſhall ſee in the following chapter.

CHAP. XVI.

1 Ahaz his wicked reign. 5 Ahaz aſſailed by Rezin and Pekah, kireth Tiglath-pileſer againſt them. 10 Ahaz ſending a pattern of an altar from Damaſcus to Urijah, diverteth the brazen altar to his own devotion. 17 He ſpoileth the temple. 19 Hezekiah ſucceedeth him.

IN the ſeventeenth year of Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, Ahaz the ſon of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned ſixteen years in Jeruſalem, and did not that which was right in the ſight of the LORD his God, like David his father.

3 But he walked in the way of the kings of Iſrael, yea, and made his ſon to paſs through the fire, according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD caſt out from before the children of Iſrael.

4 And he ſacrificed and burnt incenſe in the high places, and on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 ¶ Then Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael, came up to Jeruſalem to war: and they beſieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria, recovered Elath to Syria, and drave the Jews from Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

7 So Ahaz ſent meſſengers to Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, ſaying, I am thy ſervant and thy ſon: come up, and ſave me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Iſrael, which riſe up againſt me.

8 And Ahaz took the ſilver and gold that was found in the houſe of the LORD, and in the treaſures of the kings houſe, and ſent it for a preſent to the king of Aſſyria.

9 And the king of Aſſyria hearkned unto him: for the king of Aſſyria went up againſt Damaſcus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to Kir, and ſlew Rezin.

10 ¶ And king Ahaz went to Damaſcus to meet Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, and ſaw an altar that was at Damaſcus: and king Ahaz ſent to Urijah the prieſt the faſhion of the altar, and the pattern of it, according to all the workmanſhip thereof.

11 And Urijah the prieſt built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had ſent from Damaſcus: ſo Urijah the prieſt made it againſt king Ahaz came from Damaſcus.

12 And when the king was come from Damaſcus, the king ſaw the altar: and the king approached to the altar, and offered thereon.

13 And he burnt his burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and poured his drink-offering, and ſprinkled the blood of his peace-offerings upon the altar.

14 And he brought alſo the braſen altar which was before the LORD, from the forefront of the houſe, from between the altar and the houſe of the LORD, and put it on the north-ſide of the altar.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the prieſt, ſaying, Upon the great altar burn the morning burnt-offering, and the evening meat-offering, and the kings burnt-ſacrifice, and his meat-offering, with the burnt-offering of all the people of the land, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, and ſprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offering, and all the blood of the ſacrifice: and the braſen altar ſhall be for me to enquire by.

16 Thus did Urijah the prieſt, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

17 ¶ And king Ahaz cut off the borders of the baſes, and removed the laver from off them, and took down the ſea from off the braſen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of ſtones.

18 And the covert for the ſabbath that they had built in the houſe, and the kings entry without, turned he from the houſe of the LORD, for the king of Aſſyria.

19 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Ahaz, which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And Ahaz ſlept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David, and Hezekiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. In the ſeventeenth year of Pekah the ſon of Remaliah, Ahaz the ſon of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.] This prince was more impious than any of the preceding kings of Iſrael; for he imitated thoſe abominable idolaters whom God had rooted out of the land of Canaan; and who, it is moſt certain, ſometimes burnt their children in the fire, as ſacrifices to their falſe gods, Deut. xii. 31. and it is as certain, that the children of Iſrael imitated them, Ezek. xvi. 20. But whether Ahaz did that, or only made his ſon paſs through the fire by way of luſtration, as they called it, cannot be determined. It is no argument that he did not offer him a burnt-ſacrifice, becauſe Hezekiah out-lived him; for in all probability, he had more ſons than him. This prince likewiſe ſacrificed in high places, and on hills, and under every green tree; tree; by his example encouraging this practice, which other kings had only tolerated. So we read, that people ſacrificed in high places, even in the reigns of good kings, but as they then ſacrificed to God, ſo we never read till now, that any of thoſe kings ſacrificed there in perſon, as this king did; who not merely ſuffered this, but gave countenance to it by his own practice, and thereby ſtrengthened this licenſe of private ſacrificing, contrary to the law of God; and, which was worſt of all, ſacrificing to other gods; it being very probable, that he fancied ſome deity reſided under every well-ſpread and flouriſhing tree.

Ver. 5. Then Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah ſon of Remaliah king of Iſrael, came up to Jeruſalem to war: and they beſieged Ahaz, but could not overcome him.] We have already obſerv'd, that Ben-hadad the third, the ſon and ſucceſſor of the famous Hazael king of Syria, ſuffered a total reverſe of his father's fortune, e'er he had reigned long. Thrice was he defeated by Jehoaſh, the ſon of Jehoahaz king of Iſrael, whereby he loſt all that his father had wreſted from Iſrael. Nothing more is ſaid of this obſcure and unfortunate reign, but it is likely, that Ben-hadad was ſubjected to a tribute by Jeroboam the ſon of Jehoaſh, king of Iſrael, who kept Syria in the ſtricteſt ſervitude, during all his long reign.

The Syrians recovered themſelves again amidſt the diſorders which raged in the kingdom of Iſrael, after the death of Jeroboam the ſecond; but not ſo perfectly as to be quite a free people. For the kingdom of Damaſcus had been broken and enervated by ſervitude under Iſrael; and when Pul, king of Aſſyria, marched againſt Menahem, the third who bore the title of king in Iſrael after Jeroboam, it is natural to think, that he paſſed through Syria, and made himſelf maſter there in the firſt place. It is plain he was bent upon extending his dominion, and how he could think of reducing Iſrael before he had ſecured Syria; which lay between him and his projected conqueſt farther eaſtward, is difficult to conceive. It is likely that Syria invited him, ſubmitted to him and join'd him. But not to dwell on a point wherein we cannot pretend to certainty, Rezin was the laſt king of Syria; and toward the latter end of his reign, he entered into a league with Pekah king of Iſrael, againſt Ahaz king of Judah. Their intention was to dethrone this monarch, and make room for a ſtranger to David's line, called Tabeal, Iſa. vii. 1, 6. With this view they beſieged Ahaz in Jeruſalem, but without effect. Which ſeems contradictory to what is related in 2 Chron. xxviii. 5. where theſe two princes are repreſented as obtaining great victories over him. To which Abarbinel anſwers, that theſe things happened at different times. For the wars mentioned in the Chronicles were made ſeverally by theſe two kings, and they were proſperous, as being then the miniſters of Divine Providence. But when they now joined their forces together, and not only came againſt other cities, but againſt Jeruſalem, God was pleaſed to fruſtrate their deſigns.

Ver. 6. At that time Rezin king of Syria recovered Elath to Syria, and drave the Jews from Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.] Rezin, that he might not wholly be a ſufferer by his diſappointment in the expedition againſt Judah, marched his army into Edom, and made himſelf maſter of Elath, on the eaſtern ſhore of the Red-ſea, which he annexed once more to the dominion of Syria, and there he planted a colony of his own, which ſubſiſted many years, even after the ſubverſion of the kingdom of Syria. Our Verſion expreſly declares, that he recovered Elath to Syria, ſo ſays the Vulgate likewiſe; in tempore illo reſtituit Raſin rex Syriæ, Ailam Syriæ. Whence we may conclude, that it had formerly been conquered to Syria, by Hazael, when he ſent part of his army againſt Jeruſalem. Ben-hadad the ſecond, his predeceſſor, had no war that we read of with the kings of Judah; and after the death of Hazael, Syria was unable to make her own cauſe good, and therefore but ill qualified to extend her dominion. Azariah reſtored it to Judah, chap. xiv. 22. and drove out the Syrians, when they were ſubdued by Jeroboam king of Iſrael. Le Clerc will have it, that Rezin reſtored this noble emporium to the Edomites; but that commentator is a little too preſumptuous to change the reading of the Hebrew text from Laaram, to Leedom.

Rezin purpoſed, by this conqueſt of Elath, to draw to himſelf the whole profit of that traffic of the ſouthern ſeas, which the kings of Judah had hitherto acquired by the enjoyment of that port. But the next year after, Tiglath-pileſer having conquered Rezin, and ſubdued the kingdom of Damaſcus, he ſeized with it Elath, as then belonging to his new conqueſt, and without having any regard to his friend and ally, king Ahaz, or the juſt claim he had to that port, kept it ever after, and thereby put an end to all that great profit which the Jews till then had reaped from this traffic, and transferred it to the Syrians, which became a great diminution of the Jewiſh wealth. For although they did not always carry it on with the ſame full gales of proſperity, as in the time of king Solomon, yet it was conſtantly, as long as they had it, very advantageous to them. For it included all the trade of India, Perſia, Africa, and Arabia, which was carried on through the Red-ſea. But after Rezin had thus diſpoſeſſed them of it, they never had it any more reſtored to them, but were entirely excluded from it. From thenceforth all the merchandize which came that way, inſtead of being brought to Jeruſalem, was carried elſewhere. But at what place the Syrians fixed their principal mart for it, while it was in their hands, is no where ſaid. But at length, we find the whole of this trade engroſſed by the Tyrians, who managing it from the ſame port, made it by the way of Rhinocorura (a ſea port town, lying between the confines of Egypt and Paleſtine) center all at Tyre, and from thence they furniſhed all the weſtern parts of the world, with the wares of India, Perſia, Africa, and Arabia, which, thus by the way of the Red-ſea, they traded to, and hereby they exceedingly enriched themſelves during the Perſian empire, under the favour and protection of whoſe kings they had the full poſſeſſion of this trade. But when the Ptolemys prevailed in Egypt, they did, by building Berenice, Myos-Hormos, and other ports, on the Egyptian or weſtern ſide of the Red-ſea (for Elath and Ezion-geber lay on the eaſtern) and by ſending forth fleets from thence to all thoſe countries, to which the Tyrians traded from Elath, ſoon drew all this trade into that kingdom, and there fixed the chief mart of it at Alexandria, which was thereby rendered the greateſt emporium in the world, and there it continued for many ages after; and all the maritim traffic, which the weſtern parts of the world from that time had with Perſia, India, Arabia, and the eaſtern coaſts of Africa, was wholly carried on through the Red-ſea, and the mouth of the Nile; till a way was found in the year of our Lord 1497, of ſailing to thoſe parts by the Cape of Good Hope. After this, the Portugueſe for ſome time managed this trade, but now it is in a manner wholly got into the hands of the Engliſh and Dutch.

Ver. 7. So Ahaz ſent meſſengers to Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, ſaying, I am thy ſervant and thy ſon: come up, and ſave me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Iſrael, which riſe up againſt me.] While the affairs of Ahaz were in this diſmal plight, ſeveral other parts of his dominions were invaded by the Edomites and the Philiſtines; the former of whom carried away a great number of captives, and the latter recovered ſeveral conſiderable frontier towns from him, 2 Chron. xxviii. 17, 18. In this extremity, he had recourſe to his old friend and Ally the king of Aſſyria, and made no ſcruple to ſtrip both temple and city of all the gold and ſilver, in order to purchaſe the aſſiſtance of that monarch. Tiglath-pileſer received his preſents, but, inſtead of coming to aſſiſt him againſt the confederate kings, he turned his whole ſtrength againſt Syria, under pretence of cauſing a diverſion. He accordingly marched againſt Damaſcus; took that city, tranſplanted the people of it to Kir, ſlew Rezin, and ſo put an end to that ancient kingdom. The race, therefore, of the ancient Syrians, became, as it were, extinct in this country, and we may juſtly ſay, that Adad now gave way to Belus and other Aſſyrian Gods, unknown on this ſide of the Euphrates till now.

The place to which the people of Damaſcus were tranſplanted, is in ſome copies of the Septuagint called Κυρήνη, or Cyrene, in Africa; but we can never ſuppoſe that the king of Aſſyria would have ſent them into thoſe parts when he was not yet maſter of Egypt. Joſephus, with more probability, makes it a place in the upper Media.

Ver.

Ver. 10. And king Ahaz went to Damaſcus, to meet Tiglath pileſer king of Aſſyria, and ſaw an altar that was at Damaſcus, &c.] Ahaz found it neceſſary to over-look all former injuries, to avoid provoking greater, and therefore carrying on the compliment to Tiglath-pileſer, as if he had really been that friend and protector, which he pretended to be, as ſoon as he heard that he was returned to Damaſcus, he went thither to pay him that homage and reſpect, which, after having owned him as his protector and ſovereign, was now due from him as his client and tributary.

While Ahaz was at Damaſcus on this occaſion, he there ſaw an idolatrous altar, the form of which pleaſed him ſo much, that he cauſed a model of it to be ſent to Urijah the high-prieſt at Jeruſalem, to have another made there in the ſame faſhion. Urijah durſt not diſobey this command, and therefore cauſed the altar to be made, and placed in the room of the old one, which had been ſet up by Solomon, and was now put on the north-ſide of the other. Ahaz, after his return to Jeruſalem entirely abandoned himſelf to idolatry, and worſhipped the gods of the Syrians, and the gods of the other nations around him; ſaying, That they helped their people, and therefore he would worſhip them, that he likewiſe might be favoured with their aid, 2 Chron. xxviii. 23. And, accordingly, having filled Jeruſalem and all Judæa with their idols and altars, he would ſuffer no god but them to be worſhipped in the land.

Ver. 17. And king Ahaz cut off the borders of the baſes, and removed the laver from off them, and took down the ſea from off the braſen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of ſtones.] This was done out of contempt, that the ſea might not appear ſo great and ſtately, nor be ſo uſeful to the prieſts as it was before. For Ahaz intended to aboliſh the ſervice of God in the temple; and we accordingly read in 2 Chron. xxviii. 24. that he ſhut up the doors of the houſe of God, that none ſhould worſhip there. And this he did with an air and profeſſion of anger and defiance, becauſe God had not delivered him in his diſtreſs, when the Syrians and Iſraelites came againſt him; as if it were in his power to revenge himſelf on the Almighty, and execute his wrath upon him that made him. To ſuch an extravagant height of folly and madneſs had his impiety carried him beyond all who had reigned before him in Jeruſalem.

Ver. 18. And the covert for the ſabbath that they had built in the houſe.] There is a vaſt variety of opinions concerning this Muſſac, (which is rendered covert by our tranſlations) and why it is called, the covert for the ſabbath. But the moſt probable is, that it was a covered place, where the king ſat in the porch of the temple, or at the entrance of it, upon the ſabbath, or other great ſolemnities which were called by that name. This Ahaz took away, intending not to trouble himſelf to come to the temple, but to ſacrifice in every corner of Jeruſalem, and in the ſeveral cities of Judah, which he would have thought as holy as Jeruſalem, 2 Chron. xxviii. 24, 25. Ahaz might likewiſe do this, to expreſs his contempt of the ſabbath; for the worſhip of idols and violation of the ſabbath, are frequently joined together in ſcripture, eſpecially in Ezekiel xx. 16. xxii. 8, 9. and in a very remarkable place in the firſt book of the Maccabees, chap. i. 44, &c.

——— And the kings entry without, turned he from the houſe of the Lord.] The paſſage through which the king came from his own palace to the temple, he turned another way.

——— For the king of Aſſyria.] That he might ingratiate himſelf with that potent monarch, by contemning the religion of his own country, and approaching nearer to the Aſſyrian idolatry. Procopius imagines Ahaz did this for fear of the king of Aſſyria, which moved him to make a ſhorter paſſage into the houſe of God, that he might retire thither inſtantly for ſafety, in any dangerous conjuncture; which is altogether improbable, becauſe Ahaz profaned the temple, and ſhut up the doors of it.

This unhappy prince having thus abandoned himſelf to the moſt abominable idolatries, finiſhed his impious reign in the 36th year of his age, and the 16th of his reign, and was buried in Jeruſalem, not in the ſepulchre of David, of which he was eſteemed unworthy, but in ſome other place by it ſelf, 2 Chron. xxviii. 27. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Hezekiah.

CHAP. XVII.

1 Hoſhea his wicked reign. 3 Being ſeduced by Shalmaneſer, he conſpireth againſt him with So king of Egypt. 5 Samaria for their ſins is captivated. 24 The ſtrange nations, which were tranſplanted in Samaria, being plagued with lions, make a mixture of religions.

IN the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah, began Hoſhea the ſon of Elah to reign in Samaria, over Iſrael nine years.

2 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, but not as the kings of Iſrael that were before him.

3 ¶ Againſt him came up Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria, and Hoſhea became his ſervant, and gave him preſents.

4 And the king of Aſſyria found conſpiracy in Hoſhea: for he had ſent meſſengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no preſent to the king of Aſſyria, as he had done year by year: therefore the king of Aſſyria ſhut him up, and bound him in priſon.

5 ¶ Then the king of Aſſyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and beſieged it three years.

6 ¶ In the ninth year of Hoſhea, the king of Aſſyria took Samaria, and carried Iſrael away into Aſſyria, and placed them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes.

7 For ſo it was, that the children of Iſrael had ſinned againſt the LORD their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, and had feared other gods.

8 And walked in the ſtatutes of the heathen (whom the LORD caſt out from before the children of Iſrael) and of the kings of Iſrael, which they had made.

9 And the children of Iſrael did ſecretly thoſe things that were not right againſt the LORD their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

10 And they ſet them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree:

11 And there they burnt incenſe in all the high places, as did the heathen whom the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things to provoke the LORD to anger.

12 For

12 For they ſerved idols, whereof the LORD had ſaid unto them, Ye ſhall not do this thing.

13 Yet the LORD teſtifyed againſt Iſrael, and againſt Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the ſeers, ſaying, Turn ye from your evil ways, and keep my commandments, and my ſtatutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I ſent to you by my ſervants the prophets.

14 Notwithſtanding, they would not hear, but hardned their necks, like to the neck of their fathers, that did not believe in the LORD their God.

15 And they rejected his ſtatutes and his covenants that he made with their fathers, and his teſtimonies which he teſtifyed againſt them, and they followed vanity, and became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them, concerning whom the LORD had charged them, that they ſhould not do like them.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove, and worſhipped all the hoſt of heaven, and ſerved Baal.

17 And they cauſed their ſons and their daughters to paſs through the fire, and uſed divination and inchantments, and ſold themſelves to do evil in the ſight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Iſrael, and removed them out of his ſight: there was none left but the tribe of Judah only.

19 Alſo Judah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but walked in the ſtatutes of Iſrael which they made.

20 And the LORD rejected all the ſeed of Iſrael, and afflicted them, and delivered them into the hand of ſpoilers, until he had caſt them out of his ſight.

21 For he rent Iſrael from the houſe of David, and they made Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat king, and Jeroboam drave Iſrael from following the LORD, and made them ſin a great ſin.

22 For the children of Iſrael walked in all the ſins of Jeroboam which he did, they departed not from them:

23 Until the LORD removed Iſrael out of his ſight, as he had ſaid by all his ſervants the prophets. So was Iſrael carried away out of their own land to Aſſyria, unto this day.

24 ¶ And the king of Aſſyria brought men from Babylon, and from Cuthah, and from Ava, and from Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria, inſtead of the children of Iſrael; and they poſſeſſed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof.

25 And ſo it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that they feared not the LORD; therefore the LORD ſent lions among them, which ſlew ſome of them.

26 Wherefore they ſpake to the king of Aſſyria, ſaying, The nations which thou haſt removed, and placed in the cities of Samaria, know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath ſent lions among them, and behold, they ſlay them, becauſe they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Aſſyria commanded, ſaying, Carry thither one of the prieſts whom ye brought from thence, and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the prieſts whom they had carried away from Samaria, came and dwelt in Beth-el, and taught them how they ſhould fear the LORD.

29 Howbeit, every nation made gods of their own, and put them in the houſes of the high places, which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

30 And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth, and the men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath made Aſhima,

31 And the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, and the Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech the gods of Sepharvaim.

32 So they feared the LORD, and made unto themſelves of the loweſt of them prieſts of the high places, which ſacrificed for them in the houſes of the high places.

33 They feared the LORD, and ſerved their own gods, after the manner of the nations whom they carried away from thence.

34 Unto this Day they do after the former manners: they fear not the LORD, neither do they after their ſtatutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Iſrael;

35 With whom the LORD had made a covenant, and charged them, ſaying, Ye ſhall not fear other gods, nor bow your ſelves to them, nor ſerve them, nor ſacrifice to them.

36 But the LORD, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and a ſtretched out arm, him ſhall ye fear, and him ſhall ye worſhip, and to him ſhall ye do ſacrifice.

37 And the ſtatutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment which he wrote for you, ye ſhall obſerve to do for evermore, and ye ſhall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you, ye ſhall not forget, neither ſhall ye fear other gods.

39 But the LORD your God ye ſhall fear, and he ſhall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit, they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.

41 So theſe nations feared the LORD, and ſerved their graven images, both their children, and their childrens children: as did their fathers, ſo do they unto this day.

Ver. 1. In the twelfth year of Ahaz king of Judah, began Hoſhea the ſon of Elah to reign in Samaria.] This doth not agree with chap. xv. 30. where it is ſaid, He began to reign in the twentieth year of Jotham, which was the fourth of Ahaz. To this Ralbag thinks it ſufficient to ſay, that till the twelfth year of Ahaz he was but a ſervant to the king of Aſſyria, nor was reputed a king but only a governor under him, and this is likewiſe the opinion of Abarbinel. It is no improbable conjecture of Dr. Lightfoot, that Ahaz gave him a great deal of trouble after the death of Pekah, in revenge of the ſlaughters he had made in Judah; ſo that he kept Hoſhea out of the throne for a very conſiderable time, and upon this account is called the king of Iſrael, 2 Chron. xxviii. 19. as well as becauſe he walked in the ways of thoſe kings. Our learned chronologer Mr. Whiſton thinks there was an inter-regnum for the full ſpace of twelve years, from the death of Jeroboam the ſecond, which he takes to be moſt probable, and almoſt certain, from the following words of Hoſea, who propheſied in that kings time. "Now (or e'er long) they ſhall ſay, we have no "king, becauſe we feared not the Lord; what then "ſhould a king do to us?" Hoſ. x. 3. See his ſhort view of the chronology of the Old Teſtament. p. 48.

———Over Iſrael nine years.] That is, he reigned nine years after his peaceable poſſeſſion of the throne. For from the time that he pretended to it, upon the ſlaughter of Pekah, he reigned ſeventeen or eighteen years; namely, twelve in the time of Ahaz, who reigned ſixteen years; and ſix in the time of Hezekiah, xviii. 10.

Ver. 2. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, but not as the kings of Iſrael that were before him.] He did not hinder his people from going to worſhip at Jeruſalem. For whereas the kings of Iſrael had hitherto, as the Hebrew doctors ſay, maintained guards upon the frontiers, to prevent all under their own ſubjection from reſorting to Jeruſalem to worſhip there, Hoſhea took away thoſe guards, and gave free liberty to all to worſhip the Lord their God, according to his laws in that place which he had choſen. God, however, exterminated Iſrael in the days of this prince: to ſhew, ſaith Seder Olam Rabba, chap. xxii. that the Iſraelites were not carried into captivity meerly on account of their kings, on whom they caſt all the blame of their depravation. See ver. 17, 18, 19.

Ver. 3. Againſt him came up Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria, and Hoſhea became his ſervant, and gave him preſents.] Shalmaneſer ſucceeded Tiglath-pileſer on the throne of Aſſyria; his name is variouſly written, as Salmaneſar, Shalmanaſſar; and he is called Enemeſſar by Tobit, i. 13. he is likewiſe ſuppoſed to be the Salman or Shalman mentioned in the prophecy of Hoſea, chap. x. 14. This prince ſeems to have made war upon Hoſhea, king of Judah, in conſequence of the engagements enter'd into by his predeceſſor Tiglath-pileſer, with Ahaz king of Judah. Tiglath-pileſer had but half fulfilled his promiſe to Ahaz, by whom he had been ſollicited to avenge him on the king of Damaſcus, and the king of Iſrael equally; whereas he ſeemingly concerned himſelf with the king of Damaſcus only. It is likely then, that Shalmaneſer made this a pretence to attack the kingdom of Iſrael in the reign of Hoſhea. But, whatever his pretence may have been, or on whatſoever it may have been founded, he reduced Samaria, and made Hoſhea his tributary, as his predeceſſors from Menahem had likewiſe been to the Aſſyrian power. In this expedition, among other prey which Shalmaneſer took and carried away with him, was one of the golden calves which Jeroboam had ſet up in Bethel, and had been worſhipped there ever ſince his time, by the ten tribes of Iſrael, who revolted with him from the houſe of David. The other golden calf, which was at the ſame time ſet up by him in Dan, had been taken thence about ten years before, by Tiglath-pileſer, in the invaſion which he then made upon Galilee, in which province that city ſtood.

There is in the xvth and xvith chapters of Iſaiah a very terrible prophecy againſt Moab, bearing date in the firſt year of Hezekiah king of Judah; wherein it was foretold, that within three years, Arne, and Kir-Haraſheth, the two principal cities of that country, ſhould be deſtroyed, and all the reſt of it brought into contempt and deſolation; which muſt have been executed the ſame year that Samaria was firſt beſieged. It ſeems moſt likely that Shalmaneſer, in order to ſecure himſelf from any diſturbance on that ſide, firſt invaded Moab, and, having deſtroyed thoſe two cities, brought all the reſt of that country under his ſubjection, and placed garriſons therein, ſufficient to repel all incurſions of the Arabs, which might that way be made upon him, before he would begin the ſiege of Samaria; for otherwiſe he could not have been able to carry it on with ſucceſs.

Ver. 4. And the king of Aſſyria found conſpiracy in Hoſhea: for he had ſent meſſengers to So king of Egypt, and brought no preſent to the king of Aſſyria, as he had done year by year: therefore the king of Aſſyria ſhut him up, and bound him in priſon.] About the beginning of the reign of Hezekiah king of Judah, Sabacon the Ethiopian having invaded Egypt, and taken Boccharis the king of that country priſoner, cauſed him with great cruelty to be burnt alive, and then ſeizing his kingdom, reigned there in his ſtead. This is the prince who is called So, in the verſe before us; and he having thus ſettled himſelf in Egypt, and after ſome time grown very potent there, Hoſhea, king of Iſrael, entered into a confederacy with him, hoping, by his aſſiſtance, to ſhake off the Aſſyrian yoke; and, in confidence hereof, he diſcontinued his ſubjection to Shalmaneſer, refuſing to pay him any more tribute, or to bring any preſents to him, as he had formerly uſed every year to do. Whereupon Shalmaneſer, in the beginning of the fourth year of Hezekiah, marched with an army againſt Hoſhea, and having ſubdued all the circumjacent country, pent him up in Samaria, and there beſieged him for the ſpace of three years. The Sacred Hiſtorian gives us no farther particulars either of this ſiege or war, except, that after the taking of that metropolis, the reſt of the kingdom was compelled to ſubmit to the conqueror, and that both the king and all his ſubjects were carried away into captivity, and diſpoſed of into the ſame provinces of that empire, whither their brethren had been ſent in the reign of Tiglath-pileſer. But we have a dreadful account of it in ſome of the prophets, who deſcribe the diſtreſs of the people in the ſtrongeſt terms. The Aſſyrians committed mitted the moſt horrid cruelties againſt their captives, ripping up their pregnant women, and daſhing their children againſt the ground, Hoſea x. 8, 14. and having reduced Samaria into a heap of rubbiſh, Micah i. 6. and laid waſte all the land, returned home laden with the ſpoil of Iſrael. Shalmaneſer tranſplanted the greateſt part of this unhappy people into Aſſyria, placing them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes, ver. 6. Halah is ſuppoſed by Bochart to have been the ſame with the city Calach, ſituate about the ſprings of the river Lycus, and mentioned by Strabo as the capital of a province called Calachene, above Adiabene, and toward mount Niphates.

With reſpect to Habor, Ptolemy mentions a town of that name in Meſopotamia, (Aſiæ Tabul. 4ta.) and a river Chaboras, or Haboras; together with a region in the ſame country, called Gauzonitis, or Gozan, between two rivers, one of which may have been the river of Gozan.

In this captivity Tobit being taken out of his city of Thisbe, in the tribe of Naphtali, was, with Anna his wife, and Tobias his ſon, carried into Aſſyria, where he became purveyor to king Shalmaneſer. But the reſt of his brethren were carried into Media, and planted there; as particularly were Gabael in Rages, and Raguel in Ecbatana, (Tobit. chap. i.) which proves Media to have been under the king of Aſſyria at that time.

This was the ſad and fatal end of the kingdom of Iſrael, after it had been divided from that of Judah for the ſpace of 254 years. It happened in the 6th year of Hezekiah king of Judah, and in the 9th of Hoſhea king of Iſrael.

Ver. 7. For ſo it was, that the children of Iſrael had ſinned againſt the Lord their God, &c.] This they had done a long time; even from the diſjunction of the ten tribes from the houſe of David.

Ver. 8. And walked in the ſtatutes of the heathen, (whom the Lord caſt out from before the children of Iſrael)] They devoted themſelves to the idolatries of the Amorites, and other impious people, whom God expelled from the land of Canaan, to make room for them.

——And of the kings of Iſrael which they had made.] They adored the golden calves, whoſe worſhip the kings of Iſrael had ordained, in order to prevent them from going up to Jeruſalem to pay their homage to the true God.

Ver. 9. And the children of Iſrael did ſecretly thoſe things that were not right, againſt the Lord their God] Beſide the public impiety which was authorized by their impious kings, they privately exerciſed idolatry, according to their own fancy.

——And they built them high places in all their cities.] They were not content to worſhip upon hills and mountains, but raiſed high places in all cities for the oblation of ſacrifices.

——From the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.] In all places, both thoſe that were deſert, and thoſe that were inhabited; or both in the country, and in the city. For the tower of the watchmen is thought to mean thoſe little houſes built by the country people, wherein they watched their flocks and fruits, in order to preſerve them from wild beaſts and robbers.

Ver. 10. And they ſet them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree.] The Hebrew word aſherim, which we tranſlate groves, ſhould be render'd idols of that name, as Selden hath obſerved, Syntag. de Diis Syris, cap. 2. where he plainly demonſtrates, that this word doth not ſignify the grove, but the deity placed therein. For how ſhould groves be ſet under every green tree? as it is here ſaid, the Aſherim were. Kimchi likewiſe declares, in his obſervation on the radical word aſhur, that every wooden thing which was worſhipped, was called aſherah. And Procopius Gazæus obſerves, that this word, which the LXX here tranſlate ἄλση, groves, is every where rendered by others Ἀσαρώθ; which word, ſays he, Δηλοῖ τὴν Ἀσάρτην, Ἀφροδίτην, denotes Aſtarte, that is, Venus.

Ver. 13. Yet the Lord teſtified againſt Iſrael, and againſt Judah, by all the prophets, and by all the ſeers.] Abarbinel, in his commentary on theſe books, hath taken notice of one or more prophets, in every king's reign, both in Iſrael and Judah, from the time of Saul to Zedekiah, in whoſe days Jeruſalem was laid deſolate. Theſe holy men admoniſhed them of their duty and endeavoured to preſerve them in God's true religion, or to recover them when they apoſtatized from it; particularly in the days of this very king, when Iſrael was carried captive, they had the prophets, Hoſea, Amos, Iſaiah, and Micah. And in the time of the laſt king, when Judah was led into captivity, they had Jeremiah and Ezekiel.

Ver. 14. Notwithſtanding, they would not hear, but hardened their necks, like to the neck of their fathers.] Hardening their necks is a metaphor taken from refractory oxen, that will not bow down their necks to the yoke. The Iſraelites, in the ſame manner, refuſed to ſubmit to the yoke of God's laws.

——That did not believe in the Lord their God.] This was the fatal original of all the ſins they committed: They did not believe the prophets of God, but hearkened to deceivers.

Ver. 16. And they left all the commandments of the Lord their God, and made them molten images, even two calves, and made a grove.] The making a grove was a greater impiety than is commonly imagined. For in their groves they worſhipped Baalim, as appears from Judg. iii. 7. that is, heroes, to whom thoſe groves were conſecrated; and there many impure rites were practiſed, in honour of Venus, Bacchus, and ſuch like deities.

——And worſhipped all the hoſt of Heaven, and ſerved Baal.] They did not content themſelves with the worſhip of the two golden calves, but adored the luminaries of Heaven; ſuch as Saturn, Jupiter, Venus, and the moon, but eſpecially Baal, which by many is ſuppoſed to have been the ſun.

Ver. 17. And they cauſed their ſons and their daughters to paſs through the fire, and uſed divination and enchantments.] Which were the moſt abominable ſins of the Heathens.

——And ſold themſelves to do evil in the ſight of the Lord, and to provoke him to anger.] They were ſo induſtrious in the practice of their iniquities, that they ſeemed to have ſold themſelves to the performance of that vile drudgery.

Ver. 18. Therefore the Lord was very angry with Iſrael, and removed them out of his ſight.] From the Holy Land, where his temple was, in which he had condeſcended to dwell among them.

——There was none left but the tribe of Judah only.] Unto whom adhered part of the tribe of Benjamin, and the Levites; who, as it follows in the next verſe, imitated the wickedneſs of Iſrael: But yet had ſome mixture of good kings among them. Whereas all the kings of Iſrael perſiſted in the ſins of Jeroboam the firſt: And therefore, before their removal out of their land, they ſuffered great calamities; no leſs than nine of their kings being killed, as Abarbinel obſerves, before their laſt king was carried into captivity.

Ver. 19. Alſo Judah kept not the commandments of the Lord their God, but walked in the ſtatutes of Iſrael which they had made.] Followed the idolatrous devices of the ten tribes; as they did moſt notoriouſly in the reign of Ahaz; whoſe ſon Hezekiah, indeed, made a noble reformation; but it laſted no longer than his reign, ſo extremely was this nation corrupted.

Ver. 20. And the Lord rejected all the ſeed of Iſrael.] With loathing and abhorrence, as the word imports.

Ver. 21. For he rent Iſrael from the houſe of David.] This was the foundation of their ruin.

——And they made Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat king, and Jeroboam drave Iſrael from following the Lord, and made them ſin a great ſin.] Of which, he, indeed, was the author, but they were too forward to comply with him.

Ver. 22. For the children of Iſrael walked in all the ſins of Jeroboam, which he did, they departed not from them.] They were ſo inclined to idolatry, that a long ſucceſſion of God's judgments upon them, could not reclaim this infatuated people.

Ver. 23. Until the Lord removed Iſrael out of his ſight, as he had ſaid by all his ſervants the prophets.] Unto whoſe threatnings and admonitions they paid no regard, but obſtinately perſiſted in their iniquitous conduct; as if they had been fired with a malignant emulation to provoke the God of all their mercies to deſtroy them.

——So Iſrael was carried away out of their own land to Aſſyria, unto this day.] As they ſold themſelves to do evil, ver. 17. So God delivered them up to be ſlaves to thoſe whoſe idols they had worſhipped.

Ver. 24. And the king of Aſſyria brought men from Babylon] Thoſe who follow the common current are at a loſs to conceive, how Shalmaneſer could be ſo free with the Babylonians; ſuppoſing them to have been not only a collateral, but alſo an independant kingdom, than which nothing is more unlikely. Can it with reaſon be imagined, that Shalmaneſer and his two predeceſſors, would have roamed ſo far from home after conqueſts, when ſuch a prey as Babylon was ſo near at hand? Is it not natural to think, that the Aſſyrians began with thoſe who were next to them? Or is it poſſible to imagine, the kings of Aſſyria, would ſtraggle ſo far from their own territories, if they had ſuch a dangerous rival as Babylon on their skirts? Surely nothing can be more inconſiſtent with ſound politics. The monarchy of Aſſyria was now in the vigour of its youth, and the paſſage before us, plainly intimates, that Babylon was now ſubject to Aſſyria; and ſo were the Medes, as appears by the tranſplantation of the weſtern nations into the cities of that country by the three firſt kings of Aſſyria: And the ſame is ſtill more evident by the next reign, when the Medes, taking advantage of Shalmaneſer's ſucceſſor, revolted from him, and from thence-forward began to make the great figure in which they appear in ancient hiſtory.

——And from Cuthah.] This was a province in Aſſyria, beyond the Euphrates; and father Calmet is of opinion, that the Cuthites, by whom that province was inhabited, came from the land of Cuſh, or Cutha, upon the Araxes, and that their firſt ſettlement was in thoſe cities of the Medes which had been ſubdued by Shalmaneſer, and the kings of Aſſyria his predeceſſors; and that the Iſraelites were removed to thoſe places whence the Cuthites came.

——And from Ava.] The Avims, or Avites, were a very ancient people deſcended from Hevæus the ſon of Canaan; and they dwelt at firſt in the country which was afterward poſſeſſed by the Caphtorim, or Philiſtines; but being expelled out of Canaan by theſe Caphtorim, Deut. ii. 23. they went over Euphrates, and ſettled there, till the king of Aſſyria brought ſome of them back again, to plant the country of Samaria, after the captivity of its inhabitants.

——And from Hamath.] This was a city of Syria, on the borders of Canaan, and it was now ſubject to the king of Aſſyria, by a late conqueſt of it, xvi. 9.

——And from Sepharvaim.] Some pretend, that theſe people inhabited the city of Siphera, or the city of the Siphareniens upon the Euphrates. But Calmet takes their dwelling to have been on the mountains of Sephar, of which mention is made Gen. x. 30. and that the Saſpires, who, according to Herodotus, (lib. 1. c. 103) were the only people that inhabited between the Colchians and the Medes, are the ſame as the Sepharvaim of the Scriptures.

——And placed them in the cities of Samaria, inſtead of the children of Iſrael; and they poſſeſſed Samaria, and dwelt in the cities thereof.] The Samaritans are the people of the city of Samaria, and the inhabitans of the province of which Samaria was the capital city. In this ſenſe it ſhould ſeem, that we might give the name of Samaritans to the Iſraelites of the ten tribes, who lived in the city and territory of Samaria. But the Sacred Authors commonly give the name of Samaritans only to thoſe ſtrange people whom the king of Aſſyria ſent from beyond the Euphrates, to inhabit the kingdom of Samaria, after the ten tribes were carried into captivity. Thus we may fix the æra of the Samaritans at the taking of Samaria by Shalmaneſer, ſeven hundred and twenty one years before the birth of our bleſſed Saviour.

The king of Aſſyria, ſoon after the tranſplantation of theſe foreigners into the kingdom of Samaria, was informed, that they were infeſted by lions that devoured them. This calamity was immediately imputed to the ignorance of that people in the manner of worſhipping the God of the country. The king of Aſſyria hereupon ſent a prieſt of the God of Iſrael, to teach them the religion of the Hebrews. But they thought they might blend this religion with that which was profeſſed before; and therefore continued to worſhip their idols as formerly, in conjunction with the God of Iſrael, not perceiving how abſurd and incompatible theſe two religions were. Theſe idols are particularly enumerated by the Sacred Hiſtorian, and it will be proper for us to give ſome account of them, before we relate any other particulars concerning the Samaritans.

Ver. 30. And the men of Babylon made Succoth-benoth.] Succoth-benoth ſignifies the tabernacles of the daughters; tho there are thoſe who render them, tabernacles of wings, and ſuppoſe the idol itſelf to have been repreſented as a hen brooding over her chickens, and that ſhe was deſigned in honour of the conſtellation vulgarly called the hen and chickens, but more learnedly the Pleiades; but this is meer fancy, and it is much more probable, that theſe tabernacles of the daughters were for Venus, whom the Babylonians called Mylitta; [Herod. l. c. 131.] ſignifying Genetrix, or mother; or Urania, as the Greeks will have it; and to this Goddeſs, the daughters of the country were, once in their life-time, obliged to make a ſacrifice of their modeſty and vertue. Hence it is that our learned Selden derives the name of Venus from Benoth, by changing the B for a V, and the Greek Theta for the Sigma, whence you will have Venos. This is partly confirmed by an author who ſeems to call her Binos [Suidas ad vocem] but particularly by what we are told of a city in Africa, called Sicca Venerea, [Valer. Maxim. l. 2. c. 6.] a name which ſeems to have been tranſported from Phœnice, and evidently formed from this Siccoth, or Succoth-benoth; in which city was a temple, wherein women were obliged to acquire their marriage-money by the proſtitution of their perſons. Her temples ſeem to have been fixed at this place, and at Aphac, and at Babylon; but for the convenience of ſuch as had not a building of this nature dedicated among them, the prieſts ſeem to have taken them into their conſideration, and to have carried ſmall tabernacles, or models of the ſeveral temples upon their ſhoulders, for the impious accommodation of thoſe who were inclinable to commit the impurities above-mentioned; and for their own gain for their labour. Tabernacles of this nature were now erected in Samaria, by thoſe of the tranſplanted people who came from Babylon.

The celeſtial Venus of the Aſſyrians, the Aſtarte of the Phœnicians, and the Derceto, or Atargatis of the latter Philiſtines, were all derived from Semiramis, or whatever elſe her true name was, the firſt Babylonian foundreſs; who ſeems to have been tranſlated, by the ſuperſtition of thoſe times, into the bright and various Queen of Heaven, the Moon, as Belus, or Pul, the firſt Aſſyrian Monarch, was into the Sun. And whatever the Mythologiſts and Allegoricians may pretend, by explaining all this worſhip into an adoration of the univerſe, or nature, or the earth, or any other element; yet nothing is more certain, than that all the Jupiters and Juno's, and the whole ſuperſtructure of the Greek polytheiſm and idolatray, was raiſed on this Aſſyrian or Babylonian foundation. For the Greeks had their religion partly from the Phœnicians, and partly from the Egyptians, both which nations had theirs originally from the banks of the Euphrates and Tigris, as may be gathered from the apparent religious ſtate of the countries on this and that ſide of the Euphrates, in the days of Abraham. The Egyptians ſeem in time, indeed, to have erected a ſyſtem of their own, tho' not very widely different from the Babylonian. The Phœnicians, who had an equal intercourſe with theſe two nations, ſeem to have intermixed the variations in each. Nor is any thing plainer, than that there was, in the main, a perfect uniformity between all the nations on both ſides of the Euphrates, as to the fundamentals of their religion; and conſequently, if we fix the place whence they were branched, which we think we have done, we have, at the ſame time, a clue at hand to guide us through the immenſe labyrinth of the ancient heatheniſm and idolatry. But for want of this certain ſtand to take the ſurvey from; and eſpecially by not accommodating in the proper manner, the accounts of prophane authors to the tenor of ſcripture, which points out to us the firſt great Aſſyrians or Babylonians who were deified; our Mythologiſts have rambled backward to Nimrod and Noah, and the whole tribe of the poſtdiluvian patriarchs, to diſcover in them, what is deſigned more particularly for men who lived many ages after them; whereby they have moſt ſtrangely perplexed this part of learning, and have caſt an impenetrable miſt upon the firſt days of prophane phane hiſtory, which is generally fabulous, till about the firſt riſe of the Babylonian empire, in the reign of Joſiah king of Judah. For not only the art of compiling a regular hiſtory, ſeems not to have been practiced, till the days of Herodotus, who lived about the middle time of the Perſian monarchy, but the gods of all theſe nations being ſuppoſed to have been once meer men, and no more, the prieſts and others, had no way to derive a depth of veneration for them; but by making them ancient, and removing them as far as poſſible from the then rate of mankind.

And the men of Cuth made Nergal.] The Rabbins and ſeveral Interpreters, repreſent Nergal as a goddeſs that was worſhipped under the form of a wooden hen. But we prefer the conjecture of thoſe who think Nergal ſignifies Fire. For the men of Cuth are thoſe who were afterward called Perſians; and it is certain that theſe anciently worſhipped Fire. The famous Bochart, ingenuouſly confeſſes, he did not know what Nergal was; but adds, that there is a ſort of palm-tree called Nergil, by the Arabians, Perſians and Indians, of which they report ſtrange things. From whence, perhaps, the Perſians gave the name of Nergal to this idol, as one of the falſe deities of Syria is ſuppoſed to have been called Rimmon, from the pomegranate.

And the men of Hamath made Aſhima.] Some of the Rabbins deſcribe this idol to us, under the ſhape of a goat without hair. [Baal-azuch, Kimchi. R. Salv. Druſ. in Geh. i. 1.] Others, as a Satyr, or as the poets repreſent the god Pan. [Elias Levita. Talmud Jeroſol.] But all this ſeems very uncertain; and our great Selden modeſtly acknowledges, he doth not know what god it was. A late author takes Aſhima to be the ſame with Mars: becauſe among the ancients, AS ſignified the ſame with Ares among the Greeks, and Shemah is as much as hearing, or obedient, [Genſius de Victimis humanis p. 1. p. 92.] And this AS he imagines is the deity whom the Romans called Heſus, mentioned by Lucan in his Pharſalia. l. 1. v. 443.

——Horretque feris altaribus Heſus.

But after all, we think the moſt probable Conjecture is made by the learned Dr. Alix, who thinks, that Aſhima is the name of God, whom the Hebrews call Haſhem, the name, from whence Aſhima, we doubt not, is derived. Accordingly Aben Ezra declares, in his preface to the book of Eſther, that he ſaw in a Samaritan Pentateuch, Barah Aſhima, inſtead of Bara Elohim. This Bochart cenſures as a falſity; becauſe no ſuch word is now to be found in the whole Samaritan Pentateuch; but it might be then in ſome paraphraſe upon it.

Ver. 31. And the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak.] Nibhaz was repreſented under the form of a dog, according to the Jews: but the only proof they offer for this opinion, is, thatin Hebrew, Nabuch ſignifies to bark. We know indeed, that Annubis, one of the Egyptian deities, had the head of a dog.

Omnigenumq; Deûm monſtra, & latrator Annubis.

Tartak had the head of an aſs, as the Jews affirm. It is no Hebrew word, but may poſſibly be the ſame as ſar-ſak, ſar, in the Hebrew, ſignifies a prince. Sak was a prince, or a Babyloniſh god, that was very famous; and the feaſts called Sacæa are mentioned by profane authors, (Athen. l. 14. c. 10. Dio Chryſoſt. Orat. 4 de Regno) Thus Tartak, according to the Chaldean pronunciation, may ſignify the god Sak.

——And the Sepharvites burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech, and Anammelech the gods of Sepharvaim] Theſe are ſuppoſed to have been the ſame gods with Moloch, unto whom the ſame ſacrifices were offered. The Jews, without any good authority, make one of them to have been in the form of a peacock, and the other in that of a pheaſant. But, in all probability, they were but different names of Moloch, which was the ſun, as is evident from chap. xxiii. 10, 11. And the addition of addir, which ſignifies magnificent or potent, gives Adrammelech the ſignification of the mighty Moloch; and the additional word ana, which ſignifies to anſwer, makes Anammelech equivalent to Oracular Moloch. For Molock, melech, and milcom, are words of the ſame import in the language of different people, ſignifying a king. It is well known that the Gentiles burnt their children in ſacrifice to Moloch: and that the people mentioned in this verſe did ſo, ſeems evident, by the expreſſion uſed by the Sacred Hiſtorian. This was likewiſe the practice of the Phœnicians, Syrians, Tyrians, Carthaginians, Arabians, and many other nations.

It is not known how long the Samaritans continued in this idolatrous ſtate; but, at the return from the captivity of Babylon, it appears they had entirely quitted the worſhip of their idols; for the Scripture, from that time, does not any where reproach them with idolatrous worſhip; tho' it does not diſſemble either their jealouſy againſt the Jews, nor the ill offices they had done them at the court of Perſia, by their ſlanders and miſrepreſentations, or the ſtratagems they contrived to hinder the reparation of the walls of Jeruſalem.

It does not appear that there was any temple in Samaria, common to all theſe people who came thither from beyond the Euphrates, before the coming of Alexander the Great into Judæa. In the times preceding this, every one was left to his own diſcretion, and worſhipped the Lord where he thought fit. But they comprehended from the books of Moſes which they had in their hands, and from the example of their neighbours the Jews, that God was to be worſhipped in that place only which he had choſen. So that ſince they could not go to the temple of Jeruſalem, the Jews not allowing them that liberty, they bethought themſelves of building a temple of their own upon mount Gerizim, near the city of Shechem, which was then their capital. Therefore Sanballat, the governor of the Samaritans, applied himſelf to Alexander, and told him, he had a ſon-in-law, called Manaſſes, ſon to Jaddus the high prieſt of the Jews; and who had retired to Samaria with a great number of other perſons of his own nation; that he deſired to build a temple in his province, where he might exerciſe the high prieſthood; that this undertaking would be to the advantage of Alexander's affairs, becauſe in building a temple in Samaria the nation of the Jews, who were a turbulent and ſeditious people, would be divided, and rendered leſs capable of undertaking new enterprizes, (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 11. c. 8. p. 384.)

Alexander readily conſented to what Sanballat deſired, and the Samaritans preſently began to build the temple of Gerizim, which from that time they have always frequented, as the place where the Lord intended to receive the adoration of his people.

The Samaritans did not long continue obedient to Alexander, but revolted from him the very next year; upon which that prince drove them out of Samaria, put Macedonians in their room, and gave the province of Samaria to the Jews. This preference which Alexander gave to the Iſraelites, contributed not a little to increaſe the hatred and animoſity which had already ſubſiſted between theſe two nations. When any Iſraelite had deſerved puniſhment, for the violation of ſome important point of the law, he preſently took refuge in Samaria, or Shechem, and embraced the Samaritan-worſhip according to the temple of Gerizim. On the other hand, when the Jews were in a proſperous condition, the Samaritans did not fail to call themſelves Hebrews, and pretended to be of the race of Abraham. But whenever the Jews happened to fall into diſcredit or perſecution, the Samaritans immediately diſowned them; would have nothing in common with them; acknowledged themſelves of Phœnician original, or that they were deſcended from Joſeph and Manaſſeh his ſon. This was their practice in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes.

The Samaritans having received the Pentateuch, or five books of Moſes, from the prieſt who was ſent to them by the king of Aſſyria, have preſerved it to this day, in the ſame language and character, in which it was then written; that is, in the old Hebrew, or Phœnician character, which we now call the Samaritan, to diſtinguiſh it from the modern Hebrew character, which we now find in the books of the Jews; who after their captivity changed their old characters, for thoſe of the Chaldees, to which they had been accuſtomed at Babylon, and which they ſtill uſe. The critics have taken notice of ſome variations between the Pentateuch of the Jews, and that of the Samaritans; but theſe, together with the Samaritan chronology, which we prefer to that of the Hebrew, ſhall, with ſeveral other important particulars, be treated of at large, large, in the diſſertation we intend to prefix to theſe our annotations, when they are compleated.

Theſe people were pagans, when they were firſt tranſplanted into Samaria; and every one adored the deity they had been uſed to in their own country; but they afterward worſhipped the God of Iſrael, in conjunction with their idols, ver. 33. in the ſame manner as the ten tribes had before worſhipped the Lord, and the golden calves, and ſometimes Baal, and other gods. The Samaritans gave a proof of their little regard to the worſhip of the true God, when under Antiochus Epiphanes they conſecrated their temple at Gerizim to Jupiter Argivus. In the time of Alexander the Great, they celebrated the ſabbatical year, and conſequently the year of Jubilee alſo. We are not certain whether they did it exactly at the ſame time with the Jews, or whether they obſerved any other epoch. Under the kings of Syria they followed the Æra of the Greeks, or that of the Seleucidæ. When Herod had re-eſtabliſhed Samaria, and given it the name of Sebaſte, the inhabitants of this city, in their medals, and all publick acts, took the date of this new eſtabliſhment. But theſe inhabitants of Samaria, being for the moſt part Pagans or Jews, were no rule to the other Samaritans, who probably reckoned their years according to the reigns of the emperors they were ſubject to, till they became ſubject to the juriſdiction of the Mohammedans, under which they live at this day, and reckon their year by the Hegira, or, as they ſpeak, according to the reign of Iſhmael.

As to the preſent Samaritans, we may ſee by their letters written to their pretended brethren of England, and to Scaliger, that they believe in God, in his ſervant Moſes, the holy law, the mountain Gerizim, the houſe of God, the day of vengeance and of peace; and that they value themſelves upon obſerving the law of Moſes more rigidly than the Jews themſelves. They keep the ſabbath with the utmoſt ſtrictneſs required by the law, without ſtirring from the place they are in, but only to the ſynagogue, and likewiſe abſtain from marriage on that day. They never delay circumciſion beyond the eighth day. They ſtill ſacrifice on mount Gerizim, and give to the prieſt what is enjoined by the law. They do not marry their own neices as the Jews do, nor do they allow themſelves a plurality of wives.

Ver. 34. Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after their ſtatutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob, whom he named Iſrael.] Theſe, and the following words, give an account of the children of Iſrael, who were not at all amended by their captivity; but ſtill neglected all the laws God had given them, and did not worſhip him alone.

Ver. 35. With whom the Lord had made a covenant, &c.] Their ſins are aggravated, and God's ſevere proceedings againſt them juſtified, by this repreſentation of them as a ſelect people, who were in a ſtrict and gracious covenant with the Almighty, by which God obliged them not to ſhew the leaſt reſpect to any other god.

Ver. 36. But the Lord, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt, with great power, and a ſtretched out arm, him ſhall ye fear, &c.] Their deliverance from the Egyptian ſervitude, was ſo ſignal a mercy, that one would imagine the lateſt deſcendants of that people, could not but conſider it with the utmoſt gratitude, and as the higheſt obligation upon them to obey the precepts of their Divine Benefactor.

Ver. 40. Howbeit they did not hearken, but they did after their former manner.] They ſoon revolted from their duty, after they had ſolemnly promiſed to repent; and relapſed into all the iniquities they had vowed to renounce; as if they had been deſirous to try how far the patience of God could be extended to ſuch impious and untractable wretches as themſelves.

Ver. 41. So theſe nations feared the Lord, and ſerved their graven images, &c.] This account relates to the Samaritans, or thoſe nations who were tranſplanted into Samaria after the captivity of the ten tribes; and it is ſufficiently explained by what we have already obſerved concerning that people.

CHAP. XVIII.

1 Hezekiah's good reign. 4 He deſtroyeth idolatry, and proſpereth. 9 Samaria is carried captive for their ſins. 13 Sennacherib invading Judah, is pacified by a tribute. 17 Rab-ſhakeh ſent by Sennacherib again, revileth Hezekiah, and by blaſphemous perſwaſions, ſolliciteth the people to revolt.

NOW it came to paſs in the third year of Hoſhea ſon of Elah king of Iſrael, that Hezekiah the ſon of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jeruſalem: his mothers name alſo was Abi, the daughter of Zachariah.

3 And he did that which was right in the ſight of the LORD, according to all that David his father did.

4 ¶ He removed the high places, and brake the images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces the braſen ſerpent that Moſes had made: for unto thoſe days the children of Iſrael did burn incenſe to it: and he called it Nehuſhtan.

5 He truſted in the LORD God of Iſrael, ſo that after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him.

6 For he clave to the LORD, and departed not from following him, but kept his commandments, which the LORD commanded Moſes.

7 And the LORD was with him, and he proſpered whitherſoever he went forth: and he rebelled againſt the king of Aſſyria, and ſerved him not.

8 He ſmote the Philiſtines, even unto Gaza, and the borders thereof, from the tower of the watchmen, to the fenced city.

9 ¶ And it came to paſs in the fourth year of king Hezekiah (which was the ſeventh year of Hoſhea ſon of Elah king of Iſrael) that Shalmaneſer king of Aſſyria came up againſt Samaria, and beſieged it.

10 And at the end of three years, they took it, even in the ſixth year of Hezekiah (that is the ninth year of Hoſhea king of Iſrael) Samaria was taken.

11 And the king of Aſſyria did carry away Iſrael unto Aſſyria, and put them in Halah, and in Harbor, by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes:

12 Becauſe they obeyed not the voice of the LORD their God, but tranſgreſſed his covenant, and all that Moſes the ſervant of of the LORD commanded, and would not hear them, nor do them.

13 ¶ Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, did Sennacherib king of Aſſyria come up againſt all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

14 And Hezekiah king of Judah ſent to the king of Aſſyria to Lachiſh, ſaying, I have offended, return from me: that which thou putteſt on me, I will bear. And the king of Aſſyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah, three hundred talents of ſilver, and thirty talents of gold.

15 And Hezekiah gave him all the ſilver that was found in the houſe of the LORD, and in the treaſures of the kings houſe.

16 At that time did Hezekiah cut off the gold from the doors of the temple of the LORD, and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave it to the king of Aſſyria.

17 ¶ And the king of Aſſyria ſent Tartan, and Rabſaris, and Rab-ſhakeh from Lachiſh, to king Hezekiah with a great hoſt againſt Jeruſalem: and they went up and came to Jeruſalem: and when they were come up, they came and ſtood by the conduit of the upper pool, which is in the high-way of the fullers field.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them Eliakim the ſon of Hilkiah, which was over the houſhold, and Shebna the ſcribe, and Joah the ſon of Aſaph the recorder.

19 And Rab-ſhakeh ſaid unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, Thus ſaith the great king, the king of Aſſyria, What confidence is this wherein thou truſteſt?

20 Thou ſayſt (but they are but vain words) I have counſel and ſtrength for the war: now on whom doſt thou truſt, that thou rebelleſt againſt me?

21 Now behold, thou truſteſt upon the ſtaff of this bruiſed reed, even upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: ſo is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that truſt on him.

22 But if ye ſay unto me, We truſt in the LORD our God: is not that he whoſe high places, and whoſe altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath ſaid to Judah and Jeruſalem, Ye ſhall worſhip before this altar in Jeruſalem?

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, give pledges to my lord the king of Aſſyria, and I will deliver thee two thouſand horſes, if thou be able on thy part to ſet riders upon them.

24 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the leaſt of my maſters ſervants, and put thy truſt on Egypt for chariots and for horſemen?

25 Am I now come up without the LORD againſt this place to deſtroy it? The LORD ſaid to me, Go up againſt this land, and deſtroy it.

26 Then ſaid Eliakim the ſon of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rab-ſhakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy ſervants in the Syrian language (for we underſtand it) and talk not with us in the Jews language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rab-ſhakeh ſaid unto them, Hath my maſter ſent me to thy maſter, and to thee, to ſpeak theſe words? hath he not ſent me to the men which ſit on the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own piſs with you?

28 Then Rab-ſhakeh ſtood and cried with a loud voice, in the Jews language, and ſpake, ſaying, Hear the word of the great king, the king of Aſſyria.

29 Thus ſaith the king, Let not Hezekiah deceive you, for he ſhall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:

30 Neither let Hezekiah make you truſt in the LORD, ſaying, The LORD, will ſurely deliver us, and this city ſhall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Aſſyria.

31 Hearken not unto Hezekiah: for thus ſaith the king of Aſſyria: Make an agreement with me by a preſent, and come out to me, and then eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his ciſtern:

32 Until I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyard, a land of oyl-olive, and of hony, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he perſwadeth you, ſaying, The LORD will deliver us.

33 Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered at all his land out of the hand of the king of Aſſyria?

34 Where are the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, vaim, Hena, and Iva? have they delivered Samaria out of mine hand?

35 Who are they among all the gods of the countreys, that have delivered their country out of mine hand, that the LORD ſhould deliver Jeruſalem out of mine hand?

36 But the people held their peace, and anſwered him not a word: for the kings commandment was, ſaying, Anſwer him not.

37 Then came Eliakim the ſon of Hilkiah, which was over the houſhold, and Shebna the ſcribe, and Joah the ſon of Aſaph the recorder, to Hezekiah with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabſhakeh.

Ver. 1. Now it came to paſs in the third year of Hoſhea ſon of Elah king of Iſrael, that Hezekiah the ſon of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.] That is in the third year of thoſe nine which are mentioned before, chap. xvii. 1. See there.

Ver. 2. Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign, &c.] Unto this it is objected, that Ahaz, the father of this prince, lived but thirty ſix years, chap. xvi. 2. and therefore, according to this account, was but eleven years old when he begat Hezekiah, which ſeems incredible. To which Capellus anſwers, that he reigned two or three years with his father; which is not likely, for the text declares, that he was twenty and five years old, when he began to reign, after his father's death, which was mentioned before, chap. xvi. 20. There is likewiſe as little ſolidity in the ſolution of the Jews, who ſay that Hezekiah did not begin to reign preſently after his father's death; but that there was an interegnum for ſome years, in conſequence of a ſedition in Jeruſalem. But as there is no proof of this, ſo it is altogether improbable, that Hezekiah, who had attained to years of maturity, and was beloved by the people, ſhould not immediately ſucceed his father. The account given by Calviſius is ſtill worſe, for he will have Hezekiah to have been only the adopted ſon of Ahaz, which ſpoils the deſcent of our bleſſed Saviour from David, as is obſerved by Bochart, who therefore expreſsly admits, that Ahaz begat Hezekiah at the age of eleven or twelve years. For it is not inconſiſtent with the text, to ſuppoſe that Hezekiah was but juſt entered upon the twenty fifth year of his age, when he began his reign, and conſequently had then lived but twenty four compleat years. His father therefore begat him about the twelth year of his age, according to this explication. For if from the thirty-ſix years, which compoſed the life of Ahaz, we deduct twenty-four, the ſuppoſed age of Hezekiah when he came to the crown, twelve years will then remain. And we farther ſuppoſe, as we very well may, that Ahaz was near one and twenty years of age, when he began to reign, and near ſeventeen years older before he died, (for the Scriptures do not take notice whether the year be compleat or imperfect) then he might be near fourteen years old when he begat Hezekiah. But take it according to the firſt account, that he was but eleven or twelve years of age, Bochart has produced many inſtances of Perſons who have procreated children at that age. See his epiſtle to Carbonellus, in his additions to the laſt edition of his Phaleg. p. 920.

Ver. 3. And he did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, according to all that David his father did.] It was not difficult for him to diſcover the ſource of all Judah's misfortunes, and the moſt effectual means to retrieve them; and this is what he ſet about with the utmoſt diligence and application. He removed the high places, which was a reformation that none of his predeceſſors had the courage to attempt. But we ſuppoſe the captivity of the ten tribes had awakened him and all the people for the preſent, to a ſtrict obſervance of the Divine Laws. He likewiſe deſtroyed the images and cut down the groves, which had been multiplied throughout the kingdom of his father Ahaz: and as the brazen ſerpent, which Moſes had ſet up in the wilderneſs, had been made the object of idolatrous worſhip, in the preceding times of iniquity, Hezekiah cauſed this alſo to be deſtroyed, and in contempt called it Nehuſhtan, which ſignifies a piece of braſs; intimating thereby that it was a meer ſenſeleſs maſs, entirely deſtitute of all ability to help mankind, and therefore not to be worſhipped with Divine Honour. Had not the Jews idolized the brazen Serpent in this manner, it might, as well as the pot of Manna, and Aaron's rod, have ſerved as a monument of the miraculous mercy of God to his people, on their coming out of Egypt, and for this reaſon it ſeems to have been ſo long preſerved.

But though the Sacred Hiſtorian has thus poſitively declared, that the brazen Serpent was deſtroyed by Hezekiah, yet the impudence of the Romaniſts is ſuch, that in the church of St. Ambroſe at Milan, they now keep, and ſhew, a brazen Serpent, which they aſſure the ſenſeleſs bigots to their communion, is the very ſame that Moſes ſet up in the wilderneſs; and upon this abſurd belief an idolatrous devotion is there paid to it, more groſs and ridiculous if poſſible than that of the Jews; for which Hezekiah cauſed it to be deſtroyed. But it muſt be acknowledged, that among their learned men, there are thoſe who acknowledge the inſolent cheat, and utterly diſclaim it.

Hezekiah all this while, was bleſſed with ſucceſs equal to his piety, and as ſoon as he thought he was in a condition to free himſelf from the tribute which the Aſſyrians had extorted from his father, he diſcontinued the payment of it, and turned his forces againſt the Philiſtines, over whom he gained ſuch conſiderable advantages, that he not only recovered all the cities of Judah, which they had ſeized during the time that Pekah and Rezin diſtreſſed the land, but likewiſe diſpoſſeſſed them of the greateſt part of their own country. This event fully verified the prophecy of Iſaiah, where he bids the Philiſtines not to rejoice, becauſe the rod that ſmote them was broken, (that is, Uzziah was dead, who had ſeverely afflicted them, 2 Chron. xxvi. 6, 7.) for out of his root ſhould come another, namely, Hezekiah, who would gall them in a more grievous manner, Iſaiah xiv. 29.

Ver. 13. Now in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did Sennacherib king of Aſſyria come up againſt all the fenced cities of Judah and took them.] As ſoon as the ſiege of Samaria was over, Shalmaneſer ſent to Hezekiah to demand the tribute, which Ahaz had agreed to pay for the kingdom of Judæa, in the time of Tiglath-pileſer; but Hezekiah truſting in the Lord his God, refuſed to pay any tribute to that prince. This provocation would immediately have brought Shalmaneſer upon him with all his power, had he not been diverted by another war.

For Eulæus, king of Tyre, ſeeing the Philiſtines brought low, by the war which Hezekiah had lately made upon them, laid hold of this opportunity of reducing Gath again under his obedience, which had ſome time before revolted from him. The inhabitants of this city hereupon applied themſelves to Shalmaneſer, and engaged him in their cauſe, ſo that he marched with his whole army againſt the Tyrians: in conſequence of which, Sidon, together with Ace, (which was afterward called Ptolemais, and is now known by the name of Acon) as alſo the other maritime towns of Phœnicia, which till then had been ſubject to the Tyrians, revolted from them, and ſubmitted to Shalmaneſer. But the Tyrians having in a ſea-fight, with twelve ſhips only, beat the Aſſyrian and Phœnician fleets both joined together, and which conſiſted of ſixty veſſels; this gave them ſuch a reputation in naval affairs, and rendered their name ſo terrible in this ſort of war, that Shalmaneſer would not venture to cope any more with them at ſea, but turning the war into a ſiege, left an army to block up the city, and then returned into Aſſyria. The forces he left there much diſtreſſed the place, by ſtopping the aquæducts, and cutting off all the conveyances of water to them. To relieve themſelves in this extremity, they digged wells, and, by the help of them, held out five years; at the end of which Shalmaneſer dying, this delivered them for that time, (Menandri annales apud Joſephum, Antiq. l. 9. c. 14. & contra Apion. l. 1.)

Sennacherib

Sennacherib ſucceeded Shalmaneſer, and reſolved to reduce the kingdom of Judah to the homage and tribute it had profeſſed and paid to the Aſſyrian throne, in the perſon of king Ahaz, the father of Hezekiah. He then appeared at the head of a formidable army, and bore down all before him. At length he laid ſiege to Lachiſh, a city on the frontiers of the Philiſtines; intending in the next place to inveſt Jeruſalem itſelf. But having received a moſt ſubmiſſive meſſage from Hezekiah, who implored his pardon, and offered to pay what tribute he ſhould think fit to impoſe upon him, Sennacherib ſeemed ſatisfied, and ordered Hezekiah immediately to ſend him three hundred talents of ſilver, and thirty of gold, as if that would pacify him at preſent. This ſum was raiſed with great difficulty, and ſent to him; but inſtead of granting the king of Judah the truce and reſt he expected, he behaved toward him as if nothing of that nature had been negotiated; and broke his word with Hezekiah, ſeemingly without any manner of cauſe. Inſtead, therefore, of withdrawing his troops, he ſent three of his officers, Tartan, Rabſaris, and Rab-ſhakeh, at the head of a great army to inveſt Jeruſalem, inſult Hezekiah, intimidate his people, and, in a word, to blaſpheme the moſt high God. Rab-ſhakeh was the ſpokeſman on this occaſion, and vented himſelf to the officers Hezekiah had ſent out to treat with him, and to know what was farther to be expected from him He boaſted of his maſter's mighty power, ſtiling him the great king, the king of Aſſyria, deſpiſed Hezekiah, and ſpoke contemptuouſly of the king of Egypt, in whom he ſuppoſed Hezekiah had placed a confidence, as if he could ſave him from the Aſſyrian arm; and to crown all, pretended, ſpeaking in his maſter's name, that God had ſent him to deſtroy the city and land. This he uttered with great violence in the Hebrew tongue, that all might hear and underſtand him; and being by the Jewiſh commiſſioners entreated to be more moderate, and to deliver himſelf in the Syriac tongue, which they well underſtood; that he might not diſhearten their people on the walls of the city: he was far from complying with that requeſt, ſo that he raiſed his voice higher than before, and in the Jewiſh tongue particularly addreſſed himſelf to the inhabitants of the city, who were beholding the interview; told them their king Hezekiah would obſtinately deceive them to their deſtruction, and that it was altogether in vain for him to truſt in the Lord. He then exhorted them to ſubmit, promiſing them the free and full enjoyment of their preſent poſſeſſions, until there ſhould be a convenient opportunity to tranſplant them to a country every way equal, if not ſuperior to their own. He then again admoniſhed them, not to let their king deceive them with falſe hopes of deliverance by the hand of the Lord; obſerving, that as the gods of the nations the Aſſyrians had already conquered, namely, the gods of Hamath, and of Arpad, the gods of Sepharvaim, Henah, and Ivah, had not been able to oppoſe the Syrian power, ſo neither ſhould the god of Judah prove more potent.

The people returned no anſwer to this arrogant bravado, for Hezekiah had before ordered them not to make any reply. This was a very prudent precaution in that prince; and it was no leſs pious. For Hezekiah believed God would anſwer for himſelf, not in words, but in ſuch deeds as would demonſtrate that he was infinitely ſuperior to all other gods.

Ver. 37. Then came Eliakim the ſon of Hilkiah, which was over the houſhold, and Shebna the ſcribe, and Joah the ſon of Aſaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah, with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-ſhakeh.] It was cuſtomary for the Jews to rend their clothes, when they heard the name of God blaſphemed; and even when the witneſſes of a blaſphemy did but repeat the words before the judges. Accordingly Hezekiah did ſo, when his commiſſioners gave him an account of Rab-ſhakeh's expreſſions, chap. xix. 1. But it muſt be obſerved, that the Jews declare they were not obliged to rend their clothes, unleſs the perſon who blaſphemed was an Iſraelite. They therefore affirm, that Rab-ſhakeh was an apoſtate Iſraelite; which is not improbable, becauſe he could expreſs himſelf very fluently in the Hebrew tongue.

CHAP. XIX.

1 Hezekiah mourning, ſendeth to Iſaiah to pray for them. 6 Iſaiah comforteth them. 8 Sennacherib going to encounter Tirhakah, ſendeth a blaſphemous letter to Hezekiah. 14 Hezekiah his prayer. 20 Iſaiah his prophecy of the pride and deſtruction of Sennacherib, and the good of Zion. 35 An angel ſlayeth the Aſſyrians. 36 Sennacherib is ſlain at Nineveh by his own ſons.

AND it came to paſs when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himſelf with ſackcloth, and went into the houſe of the LORD.

2 And he ſent Eliakim, which was over the houſhold, and Shebna the ſcribe, and the elders of the prieſts, covered with ſackcloth, to Iſaiah the prophet, the ſon of Amoz.

3 And they ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith Hezekiah, This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and blaſphemy: for the children are come to the birth, and there is not ſtrength to bring forth.

4 It may be the LORD thy God will hear all the words of Rab-ſhakeh, whom the king of Aſſyria his maſter hath ſent to reproach the living God; and will reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that are left.

5 So the ſervants of king Hezekiah came to Iſaiah.

6 ¶ And Iſaiah ſaid unto them, Thus ſhall ye ſay to your maſter, Thus ſaith the LORD, Be not afraid of the words which thou haſt heard, with which the ſervants of the king of Aſſyria have blaſphemed me.

7 Behold, I will ſend a blaſt upon him, and he ſhall hear a rumour, and ſhall return to his own land, and I will cauſe him to fall by the ſword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rab-ſhakeh returned, and found the king of Aſſyria warring againſt Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachiſh.

9 And when he heard ſay of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight againſt thee: he ſent meſſengers again unto Hezekiah, ſaying,

10 Thus ſhall ye ſpeak to Hezekiah king of Judah, ſaying, Let not thy God in whom thou truſteſt deceive thee, ſaying, Jeruſalem ſhall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Aſſyria.

11 Behold, thou haſt heard what the kings of Aſſyria have done to all lands, by deſtroying them utterly: and ſhalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have deſtroyed; as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden, which were in Thelaſar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the meſſengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up into the houſe of the LORD, and ſpread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah prayed before the LORD, and ſaid, O LORD God of Iſrael, which dwelleſt between the cherubims, thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth, thou haſt made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, bow down thine ear, and hear: open, LORD, thine eyes, and ſee: and hear the words of Sennacherib, which hath ſent him to reproach the living God.

17 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Aſſyria have deſtroyed the nations, and their lands,

18 And have caſt their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of mens hands, wood and ſtone: therefore they have deſtroyed them.

19 Now therefore, O LORD our God, I beſeech thee, ſave thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD God, even thou only.

20 ¶ Then Iſaiah the ſon of Amoz ſent to Hezekiah, ſaying, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, That which thou haſt prayed to me againſt Sennacherib king of Aſſyria, I have heard.

21 This is the word that the LORD hath ſpoken concerning him, The virgin, the daughter of Zion hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorn, the daughter of Jeruſalem hath ſhaken her head at thee.

22 Whom haſt thou reproached and blaſphemed? and againſt whom haſt thou exalted thy voice, and lift up thine eyes on high? even againſt the holy One of Iſrael.

23 By thy meſſengers thou haſt reproached the LORD, and haſt ſaid, With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the ſides of Lebanon, and will cut down the tall cedar-trees thereof, and the choice fir-trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the foreſt of his Carmel.

24 I have digged and drunk ſtrange waters, and with the ſole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of beſieged places.

25 Haſt thou not heard long ago, how I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to paſs, that thou ſhouldſt be to lay waſte fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

26 Therefore their inhabitants were of ſmall power, they were diſmayed and confounded, they were as the graſs of the field, and as the green herb, as the graſs on the houſe-tops, as corn blaſted before it be grown up.

27 But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage againſt me.

28 Becauſe thy rage againſt me, and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put my hook in thy noſe, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou cameſt.

29 And this ſhall be a ſign unto thee, Ye ſhall eat this year ſuch things as grow of themſelves, and in the ſecond year that which ſpringeth of the ſame, and in the third year, ſow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

30 And the remnant that is eſcaped of the houſe of Judah, ſhall yet again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

31 For out of Jeruſalem ſhall go forth a remnant, and they that eſcape out of mount Zion: the zeal of the LORD of hoſts ſhall do this.

32 Therefore thus ſaith the LORD concerning the king of Aſſyria, He ſhall not come into this city, nor ſhoot an arrow there, nor come before it with ſhield, nor caſt a bank againſt it.

33 By the way that he came, by the ſame ſhall he return, and ſhall not come into this city, ſaith the LORD.

34 For I will defend this city to ſave it, for mine own ſake, and for my ſervant Davids ſake.

35 ¶ And it came to paſs that night, that the angel of the LORD went out, and ſmote in the camp of the Aſſyrians, an hundred fourſcore and five thouſand: and when they aroſe early in the morning, morning, behold, they were all dead corpſes.

36 So Sennacherib king of Aſſyria departed, and went, and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

37 And it came to paſs as he was worſhipping in the houſe of Niſroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his ſons ſmote him with the ſword: and they eſcaped into the land of Armenia; and Eſarhaddon his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himſelf with ſackcloth, and went into the houſe of the Lord.] He faſted and mourned, and went into the temple to pray. The Jews ſometimes wore ſackcloth next to their skins; but here it ſeems to ſignify only, that he was cloathed in this vile habit, in token of his great trouble and ſorrow. When the diſtreſſed monarch had finiſhed his devotion to God, he ſent two of his chief officers, together with the principal perſons among the prieſts, in the ſame mournful habit, to Iſaiah the prophet, to beg his fervent prayers to God for them, ver. 2.

Ver. 3. And they ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith Hezekiah, This is a day of trouble and rebuke, and blaſphemy.] They repreſent to the prophet the great ſtraits in which they were, together with the reproaches that had been caſt upon them; and (which was worſt of all) the blaſphemy they had heard againſt God.

——For the children are come to the birth, and there is not ſtrength to bring forth.] They here acquaint him with their preſent danger, which was ſuch, that they muſt inevitably periſh, unleſs they obtained ſome ſpeedy relief. They compare their condition to that of a woman in the pangs of labour; and who, after the child has fallen down to the place of birth, finds herſelf ſo extremely weakned by her agonizing throws, that ſhe has no ſtrength left to bring it forth.

Ver. 4. It may be the Lord thy God will hear all the words of Rab-ſhakeh.] So as to take notice of them, and puniſh him for his preſumption in daring to utter them.

——Whom the king of Aſſyria his maſter hath ſent to reproach the living God; and will reprove the words which the Lord thy God hath heard.] Reprove him (as the Targum expounds it) for the words which he had ſpoken againſt God. But Lud. de Dieu, following R. Solomon Jarchi, thinks that the word we tranſlate reprove, ſignifies to demonſtrate or prove by arguments; and ſo refers it to Rab-ſhakeh in this manner. "It may be the Lord will "hear all the words of Rab-ſhakeh, whom the king of "Aſſyria hath ſent to reproach the living God; and that "openly with a bold face, fearing nothing, becauſe all "things ſucceed according to their deſire."

—Wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that are left.] This is mentioned as an argument to induce Iſaiah to pray to God, and implore his compaſſion toward them: For they were now but a ſmall remnant either of God's people in general, of whom ten tribes had already been carried into captivity; or of the kingdom of Judah, which had been greatly waſted and depopulated in the days of Ahaz; and lately by this Aſſyrian.

The ſervants of Hezekiah having thus delivered their meſſage to the prophet, were ſent back with the following anſwer.

Ver. 7. Behold I will ſend a blaſt upon him.] A peſtilential blaſt, which deſtroyed his army in the ſhort ſpace of one night, ver. 35. Others tranſlate it a ſpirit; the import of which is much the ſame. For God ſent an angel who ſmote them with that ſudden peſtilence.

——And he ſhall hear a rumour, and ſhall return to his own land.] The report, perhaps, was renewed after that deſtructive ſtroke, that the king of Ethiopia (of whom Sennacherib had heard before, ver. 9.) was coming againſt him; which made him haſte away with the ſmall remains of his army, to his own country.

——And I will cauſe him to fall by the ſword in his own land.] The accompliſhment of this prediction is related in ver. 37.

Ver. 8. So Rab-ſhakeh returned.] Not with the forces he brought with him, chap. xviii. 17. but he himſelf returned to give his maſter an account of what he had done, and left Rabſaris to carry on the ſiege, and ſtraiten the city, till he could come with the whole army againſt it.

——And found the king of Aſſyria warring againſt Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachiſh.] Sennacherib meeting with a braver reſiſtance than he expected from Lachiſh, raiſed the ſiege of that place, and marched his troops to Libnah, where he hoped to be more ſucceſsful. Libnah was a city in the ſouthern part of the tribe of Judah. A ceſſion had been formerly made of it to the prieſts for their habitation, and it was declared a city of refuge, 1 Chron vi. 57. Euſebius and Jerom inform us, that it was in the Canton of Eleutheropolis.

Ver. 9. And when he heard ſay of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight againſt thee.] The authors who are now compiling an univerſal hiſtory in Engliſh, make the following Remark in the twelfth number of that work, page 893, note 5. "According to the "courſe of the Egyptian hiſtory, this Tirhakah" (meaning the king of Ethiopia mentioned in the verſe before us) "can have been no other than the Sabbaco of Herodotus, "who was an Ethiopian, a great warrior, and had ſome "time before conquered Egypt, and held it fifty years: "He retired from Egypt at the expiration of that term, "and returned into Ethiopia, and by that means Sethon, "the prieſt of Vulcan, as he is called, came to be king of "Egypt. Sethon being more ſtrictly a prieſt than a king, "and Tirhakah, or Sabbaco, the great Ethiopian, being conſcious Sethon could not pretend to make head againſt ſo "formidable a conqueror as Sennacherib, and perceiving "Egypt to be in imminent danger, of ſubjection, puts "himſelf at the head of his army to protect Egypt, and "at the ſame time ſecure his own country Ethiopia. "Sabbaco, tho' an Ethiopian, muſt have had a great con"cern on him for the liberties of Egypt, not only as it "was his barrier and next neighbour, but alſo as he had "reſided ſo long in it as lord or king. He may have "been ſtill alive, tho' he muſt have been a man in years, "for he did not die in the throne of Egypt, but left it of "his own accord. We do not pretend to give this for "certainty, but it has ſuch an air of probability, or at "leaſt correſponds ſo nicely with what we read of Egypt "in Scripture, that we fancy the reader may be tempted "to think this tranſaction may have been as we have here "ſuggeſted, if he would give himſelf the trouble of com"paring what we ſay therewith."

We have given our ſelves that trouble, and in conſequence of it, cannot by any means come into the opinion of thoſe learned gentlemen with relation to this king of Ethiopia; for reaſons we ſhall alledge, after we have firſt rectified a late inadvertency of our own, in our Annotations on the fourth verſe of the 17th chapter of this book: where we aſſerted, that "about the beginning of the reign "of Hezekiah king of Judah, Sabacon the Ethiopian ha"ving invaded Egypt, and taken Boccharis the king of "that country priſoner, cauſed him with great cruelty to "be burnt alive, and then ſeizing his kingdom, reigned "there in his ſtead." We were ſoon ſenſible of our miſtake in placing the invaſion and conqueſt of Egypt by this Ethiopian monarch, ſo low as about the beginning of the reign of Hezekiah; but the ſheet wherein that fact is related being worked off at the preſs, before we had an opportunity to rectify that error, we hope our readers will be ſo candid as to accept of our endeavours to ſet it right in this place.

And here it will be proper to obſerve, that we were not altogether ſingular in fixing the expedition of Sabacon into Egypt, to about the beginning of the reign of Hezekiah, for Dean Prideaux has done the ſame, in the firſt part of his Connection of the Hiſtory of the Old and New Teſtament, p. 24. and he afterward informs us, that Sabacon died in the ninth year of Hezekiah, page 27. which is a very groſs miſtake; and we are ſurprized ſo learned a man as the dean could poſſibly be guilty of it: for, according to his account, this Ethiopian king reigned about nine years in Egypt, and no more; which is directly contrary to what Herodotus has recorded of that monarch. The ſubſtance of what that celebrated Greek hiſtorian relates of Sabacon, is as follows. He was incited to the invaſion of Egypt by a dream or viſion, which aſſured him, he ſhould hold that kingdom fifty years; and when that term was expired, he voluntarily retired into Ethiopia again, reſigning his conquered kingdom. But whilſt he was in Egypt, he gave the higheſt proofs of his wiſdom and piety, and yielded to none of his Egyptian predeceſſors in the art of governing. He never would conſent to the death of any criminal, tho' capitally condemned; commuting the puniſhment into hard labour, which conſiſted in raiſing mounts, and digging canals; ſo that the cities of Egypt were raiſed higher, and rendered more commodious than by Seſoſtris. At length Sabacon had a viſion as he ſlept, wherein the tutelar gods of Thebes admoniſhed him, that he could not hold the kingdom of Egypt with ſafety and happineſs, unleſs he maſſacred the prieſts as he paſſed through them with his guards. This viſion was frequently repeated to him, but his heart abhorring ſo dreadful an undertaking, he ſent for the prieſts, and declared to them, what the gods would have prompted him to commit, and that hereby he began to apprehend it was their pleaſure he ſhould remain no longer in Egypt; and therefore he would return with pure hands and a clear conſcience into his native kingdom, rather than lie under the neceſſity of polluting his life by ſo general a ſlaughter, meerly to preſerve himſelf on the throne of Egypt. And upon the whole, conſidering that the predicted fifty years were expired, he accordingly returned into his own country, Herodot. l. 2. p. 142, 143. Edit. Francofurt.

We ſee then, that Herodotus poſitively declares, that Sabacon reigned fifty years in Egypt, and then returned into Ethiopia. If therefore he died in the ninth year of Hezekiah, as the dean declares, it is evident to a demonſtration, that his reign in Egypt commenced above forty-one years earlier than the beginning of Hezekiah's reign: For he died in Ethiopia, ſometime after the expiration of his reign of fifty years in Egypt.

Having thus rectified the error we had committed, we now proceed to conſider, whether the king of Ethiopia, whom the Sacred Hiſtorian calls Tirhakah, was the ſame prince with Sabacon who conquered Egypt; and it ſeems evident to us that he was not. Firſt, becauſe Sabacon muſt have been far advanced in years, when he abdicated the throne of Egypt; and if he were really living when Sennacherib formed the ſiege of Libnah, we think it altogether improbable that a man of his age would put himſelf at the head of an army, and undertake a march of above eight hundred miles, againſt a prince of whom he had no cauſe to be apprehenſive in his own dominions, which lay ſo vaſtly remote from Paleſtine. And as no ſuch expedition is recorded either by Herodotus, or any other ancient hiſtorian, we can ſee no reaſon to believe that Tirhakah and Sabacon were one and the ſame perſon. This will be rendered ſtill more evident when we obſerve, Secondly, that the Ethiopia mentioned in this ninth verſe is not the Ethiopia that lies to the ſouth of Egypt; but a country in Arabia, ſince called Khuzeſtân. In the Hebrew, Tirhakah is called king of Cuſh; and by Cuſh in Scripture is always to be underſtood Arabia. 'Tis true, indeed, that the word Cuſh is here, and in ſome other places, rendered Ethiopia by our tranſlators, but then this can be truly underſtood only of the Aſiatic Ethiopia, or Arabia; not of the African.

That by Cuſh is denoted in Scripture Arabia, is evident from the following paſſages. We read in Gen. ii. 13. that the river Gihon (one of the paradiſiacal ſtreams) is the ſame that compaſſeth the whole land of Ethiopia. The Hebrew word there is Cuſh, and as we have proved in our comment on that chapter, that the river Gihon is the eaſtern channel of the two, into which the Euphrates, after its conjunction with the Tigris, is again divided; the land of Cuſh therefore muſt be the Suſiana of the ancients, now called Khuzeſtân by the Perſians; and which extends as far as the coaſt of the Perſian gulph, at the eaſtern outlet of Euphrates, which Moſes calls Gihon.

We likewiſe read in Numbers xii. 1. that Miriam and Aaron ſpake againſt Moſes becauſe of the Ethiopian (or, as it is in the Hebrew, the Cuſhite) woman, whom he had married. But it is certain, from Exod. ii. 15—21. that the wife of Moſes was a Midianitiſh woman; and 'tis confeſſed that Midian, or Madian, was a city and country in Arabia. So that from hence it appears, that the wife of Moſes was an Arabian, and conſequently that the Hebrew word Cuſhite, is not rightly rendered Ethiopian, unleſs it be underſtood of the Arabian Ethiopia, and not of that in Africa. Pertinent hereunto is the following paſſage in the prophet Habakkuk; "I ſaw the tents of Cu-"ſhan in affliction, and the curtains of the land of Midi-"an tremble." Habak. iii. 7. where Cuſhan and Midian are uſed as equivalent terms; Midian being in ſtrictneſs only one part of the land of Cuſh. It is likewiſe ſaid in 2 Chron xxi. 16. that the Arabians whom God ſtirred up againſt Jehoram, were near the Ethiopians, which cannot poſſibly be underſtood of the Ethiopians in Africa, who were at a vaſt diſtance: and muſt therefore be underſtood of the Cuſhites in Arabia.

Laſtly, that by Cuſh in Scripture is not underſtood Ethiopia in Africa may be inferred from this paſſage in Ezek. xxix. 10. "I will make the land of Egypt utterly "deſolate, from the tower of Syene, even unto the border "of Ethiopia" (or Cuſh.) Where 'tis manifeſt, that by the tower of Syene, and the border of Cuſh, are denoted the two extremities of Egypt. Now all who have any skill in geography know, that Syene was the ſouthern boundary of Egypt, toward Ethiopia in Afric; therefore Cuſh, as being the oppoſite boundary of Egypt, can't poſſibly be the African Ethiopia; but it may well be underſtood of Arabia, as bounding that part of Egypt, which is moſt remote from Ethiopia properly ſo called.

From what has been now advanced, we think it evident, that Tirhakah was neither the Sabacon of Herodotus, nor any other king of the African Ethiopia; we therefore venture to affirm, that he was the king of that part of Arabia which was called Cuſh, and whoſe ſituation and extent has been already deſcribed. The dominions of this prince were at no great diſtance from the city which Sennacherib was then beſieging; and it was very natural for him to oppoſe an enemy who began to render himſelf formidable in thoſe parts. The Arabian king was likewiſe able to raiſe a powerful army, as appears by the vaſt forces which Zarah, who reigned ſometime afterward in the ſame country of Cuſh, brought againſt Aſa, 2 Chron. xiv. 9.

Sennacherib was ſo alarmed at the approach of Tirhakah, that he raiſed the ſiege of Libnah, and prepared to meet this new enemy. But before his departure from Libnah, he ſent a moſt arrogant and menacing letter to Hezekiah, to aſſure him, that if he ſtill perſiſted in his refuſal to yield himſelf his captive, he would ſhortly come again with double fury againſt him, and make him ſeverely feel the effects of his own folly and vain confidence in God, whom he ſhould find as weak and impotent againſt his irreſiſtable power, as thoſe of many other nations, whom he particularly enumerates, had proved. In a word, this letter was couched in almoſt the ſame words, as Rab-ſhakeh had before uſed in his vain and boaſting ſpeech to the Jewiſh commiſſioners.

As ſoon as Hezekiah had read the letter, he repaired to the temple, accompanied with his chief miniſters, and ſpread it before the Lord; and then implored him, in the humbleſt terms, to vindicate his own honour againſt this inſolent and blaſphemous enemy, who had dared to level the God of heaven to the ſenſeleſs idols of the heathens; over whom Hezekiah acknowledges that Sennacherib had prevailed; but it was becauſe they were no gods, but mere wood and ſtone, and the work of mens hands. He therefore beſeeched God to diſtinguiſh himſelf from thoſe idols, by affording his diſtreſſed people ſuch a deliverance, as might demonſtrate to all the world, that his Sacred Majeſty alone was the living God, and infinitely ſuperior to all others who were not able to protect their worſhippers.

Ver. 20. Then Iſaiah the ſon of Amoz ſent to Hezekiah, ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, That which thou haſt prayed to me againſt Sennacherib king of Aſſyria, I have heard.] Some time after the pious king ended his prayer, he received a gracious meſſage from Iſaiah, who knew by the ſpirit of prophecy that Hezekiah had repreſented his caſe to God, who now commiſſioned Iſaiah to aſſure him his petition was granted.

Ver. 21. This is the word that the Lord hath ſpoken concerning him, The virgin, the daughter of Zion hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorn, the daughter of Jeruſalem hath ſhaken her head at thee.] Theſe words comprehended the whole city. For the daughter of Zion, ſignifies the people who inhabited the upper part of the city, where the king's palace ſtood. And by the daughter of Jeruſalem, the people of the lower part of the city are meant; and all that was not comprehended under the name of Zion. If it be asked why Zion is called a virgin? the anſwer is, becauſe that fortreſs had remained inviolable ever ſince David had conquered it, and had never been taken by any enemy.

Ver. 22. Whom haſt thou reproached and blaſphemed? and againſt whom haſt thou exalted thy voice?] Senſeleſs wretch as thou art; haſt thou conſidered the awful and omnipotent power of that great Being whom thou haſt dared to villify, and againſt whom thou haſt authorized thy inſolent ſervant Rab-ſhakeh to vent his blaſphemous inſults? Againſt whom doſt thou lift up thine eyes on high, as thoſe do who have haughty thoughts of themſelves, and overlook others with ſcorn?

—— Even againſt the moſt holy one of Iſrael.] This preſumption of thine has been launched againſt a God of tranſcendent holineſs, in whoſe ſight even the heavens themſelves are impure. God is called the Holy One, with reſpect to his matchleſs perfections; and the Holy One of Iſrael, as having a peculiar regard to them above all people, and therefore he determined they ſhould be defended by his Almighty Power.

Ver. 23. By thy meſſengers haſt thou reproached the Lord, and haſt ſaid, With the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the ſides of Lebanon, and will cut down the tall cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into the foreſt of his Carmel.] This is an admirable deſcription of the arrogant boaſtings of a king elated with great ſucceſs; and is as much as if he had ſaid, What place is there into which I cannot force my way? When I have aſcended, even with a numerous array of chariots, to the top of Lebanon itſelf, through the moſt difficult paſſages, which I have opened and plained for them, who ſhall hinder me from cutting down its talleſt and moſt ſtately cedars, and fir-trees? (perhaps he means their princes and great men.) And when I have accompliſhed this, who ſhall prevent me from marching to the utmoſt borders of the land, and climbing to the ſummit of Carmel, or entring into all the fertile places of the country, by making an entire conqueſt of it? For Carmel frequently ſignifies, not a mountain, but a fruitful field, in the langunge of the prophets, Iſaiah x. 18. xvi. 10.

Ver. 24. I have digged, and drunk ſtrange waters.] He vaunts that he had marched with his vaſt army through ſtrange countries, and in the drieſt places, where it was thought his forces would die with thirſt; but he digged till he found water.

—— And with the ſole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of beſieged places.] This is commonly thought to ſignify, that he had paſſed dry-ſhod with his whole army over great rivers; whoſe ſtreams he had turned another way, and ſo had taken the ſtrongeſt fortreſſes, ſurrounded with deep waters and mighty ramparts. But Bochart hath made a plainer paraphraſe upon theſe words, which he thus tranſlates, "I have dried up the rivers of "Egypt," as much as to ſay, "I will enter as eaſily "into Egypt, in which you confide, as if, when I come "thither, all the rivers wherewith it is ſurrounded, "ſhould be dried up." [Hierozoic p. 2. l. 5. c. 15.] For the Hebrew word Maſor, which we every where tranſlate beſieged places, or defences, or fortreſſes, ſhould rather be taken for the ſingular number of Meſoraim, which by contraction is called Mitzraim, that is, Egypt. And if this be allowed, the ſenſe will be, as we obſerved before, I have dried up all the rivers of Egypt: Which was the higheſt vaunt he could make of his power, and numerous forces. Thus Iſaiah xix. 6. "The brooks of defence "ſhall be dried up," is interpreted by Kimchi, "The "rivers of Egypt ſhall be emptied, and dried up." And more plainly, Micah vii. 12. where from the fortreſs to the river is ſo obſcure, that it is not to be underſtood, but from Egypt to Euprates is ſo clear a ſenſe, that one cannot but think it ſhould be ſo tranſlated, for thoſe were the bounds of the land of Canaan.

Ver. 25. Haſt thou not heard long ago, how I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it?] Theſe are the words of God, in anſwer to thoſe empty boaſts. But what is this to what I have done? Haſt thou not heard how I brought my people dry-ſhod through the Red-ſea? How in ancient times, I ſay, long before thou or thy anceſtors were born, I did this by my ſtrength alone, without the aid of Nature or art? For ſo the word Jatzar, which we tranſlate formed, is uſed Gen. ii. 8. and in other places.

—— Now have I brought it to paſs that thou ſhouldſt be to lay waſte fenced cities into ruinous heaps.] And it is I who have now brought thee to do all theſe things of which thou boaſteſt. Thou couldſt not have accompliſhed the leaſt of them without my leave, and I therefore permitted it, that I might by thy hand puniſh thoſe cities which I had devoted to deſtruction.

Ver. 26. Therefore their inhabitants were of ſmall power, they were diſmayed and confounded, &c.] This was the reaſon, why the people of thoſe cities whereof thou ſpeakeſt, were ſo very feeble, and unable to oppoſe thee; becauſe I delivered them into thy hand.

Ver. 27. But I knew thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage againſt me.] None of thy motions are hidden from me. For before thou cameſt from thy own country, I knew with what deſign thou wert preparing to march out; and what thou haſt done ſince, whereſoever thou haſt entred, and I underſtand with what rage and fury thou art now come up to deſtroy the place where I condeſcend to reſide.

Ver. 28. Becauſe thy rage againſt me, and thy tumult is come up into mine ears.] I have heard the noiſe thou makeſt with thy furious threatnings, and with thy numerous army that hath entred Judæa.

—— Therefore will I put my hook in thy noſe, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way which thou cameſt.] God compares his abſolute power over this arrogant prince, to that of a fiſherman, who, let a fiſh tumble ever ſo much in the water, hath it faſt by a hook he hath fixed in his noſe; or to a man upon a horſe or a mule, whom he can turn which way he pleaſes, when he hath a curb in their mouth. Even ſo, ſaith God, I will do with thee; I will draw thee back into thine own country, without any ſucceſs, notwithſtanding all thy efforts to compaſs thy deſigns.

Ver. 29. And this ſhall be a ſign unto thee.] This is ſpoken to Hezekiah.

—— Ye ſhall eat this year ſuch things as grow of themſelves, and in the ſecond year that which ſpringeth of the ſame, and in the third year, ſow ye and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.] This was not a ſign to evince the truth of his prophecy, becauſe it was to come after that was fulfilled; but a token of God's extraordinary favour and love to his people, when Sennacherib was gone, and they were in fear of another enemy, namely, a grievous famine. For tho' his army had trodden down, or eaten up all the corn, yet they ſhould find a ſufficient quantity to maintain them this year, which was the fourteenth of Hezekiah. And tho' the next was the ſabbatical year, in which they were to let the land reſt, and neither ſow nor reap; yet God promiſes them that enough ſhould grow up of itſelf to ſuſtain them, without any culture, out of the corn that was ſcattered in the former year. And then in the ſixteenth year, God aſſures them of liberty to till their land as they were wont, and that they ſhould ſow and reap, as in a time of peace, when no enemy appeared. But till the corn ſprung up, and was ripe that year, they lived upon what grew ſpontaneouſly in the ſabbatical year, which demonſtrates the wonderful providence of God over this people, in taking care they ſhould want nothing in thoſe years, if they believed in his word.

Ver. 30. And the remnant that is eſcaped of the houſe of Judah, ſhall yet take root downward, and bear fruit upward.] He purſues the metaphor from corn that is ſown in the ground; ſignifying, that they ſhould have firm poſſeſſion of their own country; and therein increaſe, and multiply, and flouriſh exceedingly.

Ver. 31. For out of Jeruſalem ſhall go forth a remnant, and they that eſcape, out of mount Zion.] For they who were then ſhut up in Jeruſalem, ſhould be at liberty; and they who eſcaped the enemy's fury in the country, and had fled to Jeruſalem for refuge, ſhould go out of mount Zion to their own poſſeſſions.

———The zeal of the Lord of hoſts ſhall do this.] His regard to his own honour, and his tender love to his people ſhall accompliſh all theſe wonders; in order to vindicate his glory from that contempt which was caſt upon it by Sennacherib.

Ver. 32. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord concerning the king of Aſſyria, He ſhall not come into this city, nor ſhoot an arrow there, nor come before it with ſhield, nor caſt a bank againſt it.] God here aſſures his people, that the king of Aſſyria ſhould be ſo far from making himſelf maſter of the city at this time, that he ſhould not aſſault it, by ſhooting ſo much as an arrow into it; no, nor appear with his army againſt it, or raiſe bulwarks to beſiege it.

Ver. 35. And it came to paſs that night, that the angel of the Lord went out, and ſmote in the camp of the Aſſyrians, an hundred fourſcore and five thouſand.] Commentators are divided in their opinions, with reſpect to the time when this dreadful ſtroke of the Divine Vengeance was inflicted upon the Aſſyrians, and alſo with regard to the place where they then were incamped. But, inſtead of citing their various conjectures, we ſhall offer that which appears to us moſt conſiſtent with the particulars recorded by the Sacred Hiſtorian.

It is evident from chap. xviii. 17. that Sennacherib had ſent three of his generals with a numerous hoſt, to form the ſiege of Jeruſalem; and he himſelf was beſieging Libnah with another body of troops, when he received intelligence that Tirhakah the Arabian king was marching againſt him. As common prudence would incline Sennacherib to draw all his forces together to oppoſe ſo formidable an enemy, we may naturally ſuppoſe, that he ſent orders to his generals who were forming the ſiege of Jeruſalem, to join him with their troops. But leſt Hezekiah ſhould exult over him, when he found him obliged to raiſe the ſiege of that capital, he ſent him the arrogant and blaſphemous letter recorded in this chapter; but while his generals were preparing to draw off the army from before Jeruſalem; and, in all probability, the very night after their maſter's letter had been ſent to the king of Judah, the Divine Vengeance depopulated their camp by the miniſtration of an angel, who with one peſtilential ſtroke covered the earth with the dead bodies of an hundred fourſcore and five thouſand Aſſyrians: ſo that when the generals roſe in the morning, to give orders for the decampment of their troops, they were ſtruck with the utmoſt terror and aſtoniſhment, to behold the forces that were thought ſo formidable the preceding day, lying breathleſs and ghaſtly on the ground. They had reaſon to be apprehenſive of being involved in the ſame vengeance; and therefore haſted from that fatal place, to inform Sennacherib in what manner his troops had been laid low by the tremenduous wrath of the God of Iſrael.

The proud Aſſyrian was now made ſenſible of the vanity of his late boaſts, and became fully convinced, that inſtead of being a match for the Almighty, he was nothing more than a vain and deſpicable creature. When he had gathered up the remains of his ſhatter'd army, he ſlunk like a trembling fugitive from the land of Judæa, into which he had lately entered with ſuch an air of triumph and ſelf-ſufficiency; and he now made a moſt inglorious retreat to Nineveh, the capital of his empire. He there flatter'd himſelf, that his gods would be able to protect him, and therefore gave a looſe to his vengeance againſt an innocent people who had no way contributed to the calamity which had humbled his pride, and blaſted all his glory. The unfortunate Iſraelites, whom Shalmaneſer had tranſplanted into the Aſſyrian dominions, became the victims of his barbarous rage: multitudes of theſe wretched captives were ſlaughter'd by his command; and he even puniſhed thoſe, who, like good old Tobit, had courage and humanity enough to bury the dead bodies of their murdered brethren. See the firſt chapter of the book of Tobit.

This cruel fury of Sennacherib ſoon met with its due retribution; for while the tyrant was paying his idolatrous adorations to his god Niſroch, he was ſlain in the very temple by Adrammelech and Sharezer, two of his own ſons, when he leaſt expected to periſh in ſo tragical a manner. Such was the fatal fall of this impious prince, who was now ſummoned to the tribunal of that God of terrible Majeſty, whoſe power he had contemned with ſo much arrogance.

It is difficult to give any authentic account of the idol Niſroch, in whoſe temple Sennacherib was ſlain. Selden frankly declares, that he had never met with any ſatisfactory particulars with relation to this Pagan deity, and that he was even unacquainted with the ſignification of his name. Father Kircher, on the other hand, believes that Niſroch was repreſented by a ſmall ſhip, which he imagines was formed in imitation of the ark of Noah; but this is meer fancy. Monſieur Jurieu thinks the word Niſroch, or rather Niſrach, ſignifies a young eagle; and it is certain, that this bird is repreſented in Scripture as the ſymbol of thoſe Chaldean kings who reigned after Pul or Belus. To this effect we read in the prophet Ezekiel, "Thus ſaith the Lord God, A great eagle with great "wings, long winged, full of feathers, which had divers "colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the higheſt "branch of the cedar," &c. Ezek. xviii. 1, &c. The Greeks and Romans likewiſe aſſigned the eagle to Jupiter, becauſe they had borrowed their theology from the orientals, as we have formerly obſerved. This bird, therefore, might be one of the ſymbols under which Belus or Pul, the firſt Aſſyrian monarch, was adored after his deceaſe.

CHAP. XX.

1 Hezekiah having received a meſſage of death, by prayer hath his life lengthened. 8 The ſun goeth ten degrees backward, for a ſign of that promiſe. 12 Berodach Baladan ſending to viſit Hezekiah, becauſe of the wonder, hath notice of his treaſures. 14 Iſaiah underſtanding thereof, fortelleth the Babylonian captivity. 20 Manaſſeh ſucceedeth Hezekiah.

IN thoſe days was Hezekiah ſick unto death: and the prophet Iſaiah the ſon of Amoz came to him, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the LORD, Set thine houſe in order, for thou ſhalt die, and not live.

2 Then he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the LORD, ſaying,

3 I beſeech thee, O LORD, remember now how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight: and Hezekiah wept ſore.

4 And it came to paſs afore Iſaiah was gone out into the middle court, that the word of the LORD came to him, ſaying,

5 Turn again, and tell Hezekiah the captain of my people, Thus ſaith the LORD, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have ſeen thy tears: behold, I will heal thee; on the third day thou ſhalt go up unto the houſe of the LORD.

6 And I will add unto thy days fifteen years, and I will deliver thee, and this city, out of the hand of the king of Aſſyria, and I will defend this city for mine own ſake, and for my ſervant Davids ſake.

7 And Iſaiah ſaid, take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boyl, and he recovered.

8 ¶ And

8 ¶ And Hezekiah ſaid unto Iſaiah, What ſhall be the ſign that the LORD will heal me, and that I ſhall go up into the houſe of the LORD the third day?

9 And Iſaiah ſaid, This ſign ſhalt thou have of the LORD, that the LORD will do the thing that he hath ſpoken: ſhall the ſhadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

10 And Hezekiah anſwered, It is a light thing for the ſhadow to go down ten degrees: nay, but let the ſhadow return backward ten degrees.

11 And Iſaiah the prophet cried unto the LORD, and he brought the ſhadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz.

12 ¶ At that time Berodach-baladan the ſon of Baladan, king of Babylon, ſent letters and a preſent unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been ſick.

13 And Hezekiah hearkned unto them, and ſhewed them all the houſe of his precious things, the ſilver and the gold, and the ſpices, and the precious ointment, and all the houſe of his armour, and all that was found in his treaſures: there was nothing in his houſe, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah ſhewed them not.

14 ¶ Then came Iſaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and ſaid unto him, What ſaid theſe men? and from whence came they unto thee? and Hezekiah ſaid, They are come from a far country, even from Babylon.

15 And he ſaid, What have they ſeen in thine houſe? And Hezekiah anſwered, All the things that are in mine houſe have they ſeen: there is nothing among my treaſures, that I have not ſhewed them.

16 And Iſaiah ſaid unto Hezekiah, Hear the word of the LORD.

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine houſe, and that which thy fathers have laid up in ſtore unto this day, ſhall be carried into Babylon: nothing ſhall be left, ſaith the LORD.

18 And of thy ſons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt beget, ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

19 Then ſaid Hezekiah unto Iſaiah, Good is the word of the LORD, which thou haſt ſpoken. And he ſaid, Is it not good, if peace and truth be in my days?

20 ¶ And the reſt of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, and how he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

21 And Hezekiah ſlept with his fathers: and Manaſſeh his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. In thoſe days was Hezekiah ſick unto death: and the prophet Iſaiah the ſon of Amoz came to him, and ſaid unto him, Thus ſaith the Lord, Set thine houſe in order, for thou ſhalt die, and not live.] This ſickneſs of Hezekiah is ſet down after the death of Sennacherib, with this general note only of the time when it happened; namely, in thoſe days; which expreſſion, as Uſher, and other learned men have obſerved, relates to the time when Sennacherib invaded the land, as is evident from ver. 6. of this chapter, where God promiſes to add fifteen years to the life of Hezekiah, and alſo to deliver him from the king of Aſſyria. This deliverance, therefore, was after his ſickneſs, which happened in the latter end of the fourteenth year of his reign, to which, if we add fifteen years, they make up the whole twenty nine years of his reign.

The diſeaſe under which Hezekiah laboured, if we may gueſs at it by the remedy which the prophet preſcribed for it, ver. 7. and by the ſpeedineſs of the cure, ſeems to have been a kind of quincy or impoſthume in his throat, which was happily broke by the lump of dried figs.

In order to bring Hezekiah to a ſerious conſideration of his preſent ſtate, and that he might regulate the affairs of his kingdom in ſuch a manner that no diſorders might be created after his death, in the choice of a ſucceſſor to his throne, for Hezekiah had not then any ſon, the prophet Iſaiah was commiſſioned by God to deliver to him the melancholy meſſage recorded in this verſe. The good king, who about a year or two before had received a ſevere reproof from that prophet, and probably alſo about the ſame time from Micah the Moraſhite, for truſting too much in Egypt, and ſeeking help from thence, (compare 2 Kings xviii. 21. 2 Chron. xxxii. 24, &c. Iſaiah xxx. &c. Jerem. xxvi. 18) received the dreadful ſummons with inexpreſſible grief, believing, in all likelihood, that he had provoked God to ſhorten his days, he being then but in the thirty-eighth year of his age. Aſſoon, therefore, as the prophet was gone, Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, that is, toward the wall of the ſanctuary, as the Targum expounds it, and addreſſed himſelf to God in the moſt humble and pathetic terms, accompanied with a flood of tears, which were much more honourable to him than that air of Stoiciſm and intrepidity, which ſome have affected, when they found themſelves ſeized with death; for ſurely nothing can be more ridiculous than to pretend to act the hero with God. Hezekiah was ſenſible, that it was not beyond the power of God to reſtore him, for the ſentence of death which the prophet had paſſed upon him was not couched in peremptory terms: He was likewiſe conſcious to himſelf, that he had not omitted any thing which was to be done for the reſtoration of the true worſhip of God; but had been ſo exact as to take away the high places, which had continued ever ſince the time of David. And therefore he preſumed to beg that he might live, to ſettle and eſtabliſh what he had begun. Hezekiah did not enumerate his good works in his prayer to God, with any ſtrain of oſtentation, but merely to obtain the mercy of a moſt gracious father, who delights in the humble diſpoſition of his children, and beholds with complacency their zealous endeavours to pleaſe him.

The tears and affliction of this good prince proved ſuch powerful advocates with the Divine Mercy, that the prophet, who was ſcarce got out of the palace, was commanded by God to return, and carry the dying monarch the joyful news of his recovery, which would prove ſo ſpeedy, that he ſhould be able, within three days to go to the temple, and render his grateful acknowledgments to God for it. And as a farther proof of the efficacy of his prayer, Iſaiah was ordered to aſſure him, that his life ſhould be prolonged fifteen years, and himſelf and his kingdom be delivered from the Aſſyrian power.

Theſe glorious promiſes did not, however, gain credit with the deſponding king, who could not eaſily reconcile two ſuch different meſſages from the ſame prophet, and therefore he thought he might ask for ſome more ſignal proof to aſſure him of the laſt. The prophet accordingly obtained by his prayers ſuch an authentic demonſtration, as ſhould at once convince both him and his whole kingdom, that it was corroborated with the Divine Sanction. It was a retrogradation of ten degrees of the ſun's ſhadow on the dial of the palace. The text runs literally thus in the original; "And the Lord brought back the ſhadow "of the ſteps, or degrees, which was gone down by the "dial, or degrees, of Ahaz ten degrees, or ſteps," ver. 11. which we purpoſely take notice of here, to ſhew that the Sacred Hiſtorian has expreſſed himſelf in ſuch terms, as were comprehenſible by the vulgar, and yet very compatible with the ſolar ſyſtem which is now generally received.

It is true that Iſaiah, who relates the ſtory in almoſt the ſame words, and mentions only the ſhadow, when he puts it to the king's option, whether it ſhould go backward or forward; adds, that the ſun went back ten of the degrees over which he had already paſt. But it is plain, that he intends no more by it than the rays of the ſun. Thus the Pſalmiſt ſays, "The ſun ſhall not hurt "thee by day, nor the moon by night. Pſalm cxxi. 6. And it is ſaid in the book of Jonah, that "the ſun beat "upon his head," Jonah iv. 8. by which can be only meant his beams. Nothing is more common than that expreſſion in all languages, the ſun comes in at ſuch a window, or ſuch a part of the houſe, and the like. The words therefore of the prophet may be naturally rendered thus, And the beams of the ſun (being miraculouſly inflected) cauſed the ſhadow to go back over ten of the degrees, or ſteps, which it had paſt, upon Ahaz's dial, or flight of ſteps. A miracle of this nature was ſufficient to convince the doubtful king, without magnifying, or rather multiplying it, as many of the fathers, and others after them have done.

For to ſuppoſe, as they do, that the whole fabric of the univerſe went back, or even that the earth alone did ſo, was not only needleſs, becauſe the intention was not to lengthen the day, as it was in the time of Joſhua, but only to bring the ſhadow back ſo many degrees: but it ſeems to carry a farther abſurdity; for either this extraordinary retrogreſſion muſt have been cauſed all at once, which conſidering the velocity of the earths motion, much more that of the univerſe round it, according to the Ptolemaic ſyſtem, is ſcarcely conceivable; or if it was accompliſhed in a gradual manner, it would hardly have been perceived, in caſe Hezekiah had choſen to have the ſhadow go forward inſtead of backward. By the tenor, however of the whole hiſtory, it ſeems as if the phænomenon was perform'd in an inſtant, and not gradually. What need is there then to ſuppoſe, that God interpoſed his miraculous power to cauſe ſuch a retrogradation, even in the earth, when the end might be as well anſwered by the inflection of the ſolar rays? To ſay that either of them was equally eaſy to an omnipotent power, is too unphiloſophical to deſerve an anſwer, becauſe it is abſurd to ſuppoſe that God acts with leſs œconomy in his ſupernatural, than he doth in his natural works.

This hypotheſis, of the inflection of the rays, which is now the moſt received, becauſe attended with feweſt difficulties, will ſave us a great many needleſs enquiries; ſuch as theſe that follow. What portion of time is implied by thoſe ten degrees, and how much was the day lengthned by it? Was this miraculous irregularity afterward recovered, and the courſe of nature re-inſtated by the ſame power in its former harmony, either by ſubſtracting as much from the night as had been added to the day, or by any other method? Was the miracle perceived all the world over, or only in Judæa? And many more queſtions of the like nature.

The Jews indeed, who are ready to help us in this emergency, give us to underſtand, that God, who had already ſhorten'd one day by ten hours, when wicked Ahaz died, that no mourning might be made for him, did only reſtore the univerſe to its former ſtate on this occaſion. But ſuch an e peditious way of anſwering all enquiries, will ſcarcely be allowed of by any but Jews. However, archbiſhop Uſher, who believed that the whole frame of heaven went back at this time, doth yet obſerve, that the Divine providence ſo ordered it, that the conſtant and uniform motion of the celeſtial bodies, did not receive any hindrance from it: this he undertakes to prove by three previous eclipſes of the moon, out of Ptolemy, whoſe calculations, being traced back, coincide as exactly with the Chaldæan account, as if no ſuch retrogreſſion had happened in nature [Sub. A. M. 3291. p. 71.] But is not this multiplying the miracle without any neceſſity?

But what farther confirms our opinion, that the whole miracle conſiſted in the bare reverſion of the ſun-beams, is, that if the ſun or the earth be ſuppoſed to have gone back ſo many degrees, it muſt have been perceived all over the world. But the contrary ſeems plain to us, from the embaſſy which Berodach-baladan ſent to Hezekiah, to inform himſelf about this miraculous phænomenon, 2 Chron. xxxii. 31. For if it had been ſeen at Babylon, there would have been no neceſſity for ſending into Judæa to know the truth of it; and it is hardly to be ſuppoſed, that he ſent thither to be informed about the cauſe of it. The Babylonians were much better aſtronomers than the Jews, or rather theſe laſt were known to be entirely ignorant of that ſcience. It ſeems then much more probable, that this retrogreſſion was viſible only about Judæa; and if ſo, cannot be better accounted for than by ſuppoſing an inflection of the ſun's rays.

We need not add, that if it had been perceived all the world over, or even beyond Judæa, we ſhould have found ſome traces of it in prophane hiſtory; it being hardly to be ſuppoſed, that ſo remarkable a change could go unobſerved, or unrecorded, at a time when ſo many good aſtronomers and hiſtorians flouriſhed; or that the memory of it ſhould be ſince entirely loſt, when we can find ſo many imitations of the ſun's ſtanding ſtill in the time of Joſhua, which was upward of ſeven hundred years before the phænomenon on the dial of Ahaz. We ſhall now only add ſome few remarks concerning the moſt probable figure of that dial.

And here let it be conſidered, 1. That the Hebrew word Meghaloth, which is rendered dial by our tranſlators, ſignifies no more than ſteps or ſtairs. 2. That the Septuagint verſion, and the Chaldee paraphraſts render it, the former αναβαθμους, aſcents, and the latter by a ſtone of time. 3. That the Jews did not reckon by, nor had even a name for hours before the captivity. 4. That the invention of gnomon dials is reckoned of much later date, it being attributed to Anaximander, who did not live till almoſt two hundred year after Hezekiah. And laſtly, That there is not one word of a ſun-dial in all the writings of Homer. All theſe particulars will at leaſt amount to a ſtrong preſumption, that what is called the dial of Ahaz, muſt have been an aſcent of ſteps, leading up to the gate of the palace, and mark'd at proper diſtances with figures, ſhewing the diviſion of the day; rather than a regular piece of dial-work.

We have indeed, a much finer deſcription of it in Grotius, out of Rabbi Eliah Chomer, who pretends, that it was a regular globe placed in the center of a hollow hemiſphere, on which were drawn, at proper diſtances, the ſeveral lines which divided the day into twenty-eight parts. But who can believe, after what has been obſerved before, that ſuch a curious and compound piece of art could be the product of thoſe early times? For our part, we cannot think that even this flight of ſteps was originally deſigned by the architect to ſerve both for an aſcent and a ſun-dial: On the contrary, it ſeems to us more probable upon the whole, that the latter uſe was owing to obſervation. Some ornaments, ſuch as pyramids, obelisks, flower-vaſes, and the like, might have been placed upon the rails or baluſtrade of the aſcent, whoſe ſhadow being in time obſerved to paſs over thoſe ſteps, at proper periods of the day, might naturally induce ſome curious obſerver to mark down the ſeveral portions of the day; firſt into four parts, according to the Jewiſh cuſtom of dividing it, and then into as many ſub-diviſions as was thought proper. All therefore that we think is meant in the text, is, that the ſhadow of the obelisk, or whatever other ornament ſerved inſtead of agnomon, went back again over ten of thoſe ſteps, which it had already paſt. But in what portion of time the ſhadow uſually paſt over thoſe ſteps, is impoſſible to determine.

Hezekiah's

Hezekiah being reſtored to his health by a cataplaſm of dried figs, applied according to the prophet's direction, compoſed that noble Pſalm of thankſgiving recorded by the prophet Iſaiah, chap. xxxviii. 9, &c. wherein he expreſſes the exquiſiteneſs of his anguiſh and grief, acknowledges the infinite mercy of his Divine Deliverer, and promiſes to be perpetually thankful for it. The next part of the prophet's promiſe, namely, the deliverance of Judah from the Aſſyrian power, did not long remain unfulfilled; for the army of Sennacherib was ſoon after deſtroyed, and he himſelf obliged to make an ignominious retreat into his own dominions, as we have already ſeen in the courſe of this hiſtory.

Ver. 12. At that time Berodach-baladan the ſon of Baladan, king of Babylon, ſent letters and a preſent unto Hezekiah: for he had heard that Hezekiah had been ſick.] As we ſhall find the affairs of the Babylonian empire frequently intermixed with the Jewiſh hiſtory, we think it will be proper for us to give ſome account of the origin and progreſs of that famous empire, to the reign of the monarch mentioned in this verſe; that ſo our readers may have a clear idea of the connection of profane hiſtory with the Sacred Records. And we the rather enter upon this undertaking, becauſe the common accounts, both ancient and modern, of the Aſſyrian and Babylonian empires, are extremely confuſed and erroneous.

We are here to conſider the Babylonians in two very different views; firſt, as compoſing a ſmall kingdom, ſoon after the Deluge; and, ſecondly, as conſtituting a potent and wide-ſpreading empire, founded by, and at laſt riſing upon the ruins of the Aſſyrians, their brethren. So that in effect we are here only to look back to the early times of the Aſſyrian monarchy, of which this was a collateral branch, and was poſſeſſed, as it ſhould ſeem, by princes of the ſame blood with thoſe who filled the throne of Nineveh. We may refer the reader back to what has been already obſerved of the Aſſyrians, to ſatisfy him concerning the chronology of the Babylonians; for they properly took riſe in one and the ſame perſon; namely, Pul king of Aſſyria, and nearly at one and the ſame time time.

With reſpect to the firſt view in which the Babylonians are to be conſidered, we ſhall obſerve, that Babel is the firſt kingdom we find erected in Scripture; Nimrod was the founder of it; but for many ages it enlarged not its bounds; and it evidently appears to have remained a petty royalty, till the Aſſyrians paved the way to the empire it afterward acquired. Or, on the other hand, if it be granted, that even under Nimrod himſelf it attained a height of power, nothing ſeems more natural than to conclude, that it ſuddenly fell down to a level with its neighbours, and even below ſome of them. So that tho' we confeſs this to have been the moſt ancient kingdom in the world, we deny it to have reached the imperial dignity till what we call very lately, in compariſon of what has been vainly boaſted, and unwarily believed. The Scripture takes no notice of any king of Babylon from the time of Amraphel king of Shinar, or Sennaar, the ancient Babylon, (who joined the army of Chedorlaomer king of Elam, or Perſia, in the days of Abraham, Gen. xiv.) till the time of Berodach, or Merodach-baladan, who was contemporary with Hezekiah.

The Babylonians, or Chaldæans, however, laid claim to a moſt enormous antiquity; unwilling to be behind-hand with the Egyptians, or any nation elſe; and pretending to have regiſter'd the tranſactions of 150,000 years, according to ſome, or 473,000 years, according to others; reckoning down to Alexander the great, from the time they firſt began to obſerve the ſtars. A moſt monſtrous fable, which needs no refutation.

Few arguments can be wanting, and indeed none can be neceſſary, to prove the firſt riſe and duration of the Babylonian empire, after they have been ſo happily aſcertained to our hands by Ptolemy, whoſe canon is ſo exactly agreeable to the Sacred Records, that if theſe laſt could poſſibly need confirmation, as to the hiſtorical parts of them, ſo far as relates to the great empires of the Aſſyrians and Babylonians, nothing could be ſo effectual toward it as this canon, which has given birth to one of the moſt famous æras; namely, that of Nabonaſſar, the firſt king of this Babylonian empire. Nothing is more ſurpriſing, than that this moſt noble monument, ſhould have been ſo little examined by the light naturally reflected on it by the Sacred writers, as not to have extricated the hiſtorians and chronologers out of the labyrinth in which moſt of them have bewildered themſelves; miſled by the extravagancies of one fabulous Greek writer, (we mean Cteſias) who has been blindly followed by the ancients, and very unnaturally by the modern Chriſtians. This canon takes date about the twenty-third year of Pul's firſt appearance on this ſide the Euphrates, about the year 2252 after the flood, according to the Samaritan computation which we follow; and 747 years before Chriſt; which ſhews the kingdom of Babylon to have been immediately of Aſſyrian origin, according to the prophet: "Behold, the land of "the Chaldæans; this people was not till the Aſſyrian "founded it for them that dwelt in the wilderneſs: they ſet "up the towers thereof, they raiſed up the palaces there-"of," Iſaiah xxiii. 13.

Ptolemy could diſcover no king of Babylon older than Nabonaſſar, and therefore begins with him; and the Scripture mentions no king of Aſſyria before Pul, who appeared on this ſide the Euphrates about twenty-three years before the firſt year of the canon; and as Nabonaſſar is an Aſſyrian name, compounded of Nebo-addon-aſſur, we may be certain that he was the ſon or grandſon of Pul, who upon his death divided his monarchy between his children. This is an evident point, and abundantly enables us to underſtand what the prophet means in the text above cited; and without which it is impoſſible to have a right conception how the Aſſyrians ſhould have founded the land of the Chaldees. This kingdom of Babylon being then of Aſſyrian extraction, and conſidered as a ſiſter kingdom with Aſſyria, we have nothing here to add to what we have already urged, except that we can fix the date of it with ſomewhat more certainty than that of the Aſſyrian empire, which we could have no notice of till the firſt appearance of Pul in the weſt. It may begin then in the twenty-fourth year of Pul's appearance to the weſtward of Euphrates; 2252 years after the flood, and 747 years before Chriſt. It ended 2462 years after the flood, and 537 years before Chriſt. So that its whole duration comprehended no more than 210 compleat years; to which if we add the 23 or 24 years of Pul before the date of Ptolemy's canon, we ſhall have a number not exceeding 234 years, for the duration of the great Aſſyrian family; whether at Nineveh, or at Babylon.

The Chaldees, we are told, were founded by the Aſſyrian, and by the undoubted authorities of Scripture, and Ptolemy's aſtronomical canon, this Aſſyrian can have been no other than Pul. If any one can prove the exiſtence of another Aſſyrian conqueror or founder before him, we ſhall be very ready to congratulate him upon the diſcovery.

The genuine hiſtory of the Babylonians has in it a vaſt chaſm of many hundred years between the times of Nimrod and Amraphel, to the time we have now reached down to. The firſt Babylonian we meet with after theſe in Sacred or Profane Hiſtory, is Nabonaſſar, the firſt in Ptolemy's canon. Concerning this king, ſo well known for the æra that paſſes under his name, we have nothing particular recorded; but as it may be of great uſe to know, in what manner he came to be king of Babylon, and how it comes to paſs that Ptolemy could be aſſured of no Babylonian king who lived before his time, which is ſo late in compariſon of what has been moſt generally pretended, we will venture to offer ſome probable conjectures, which may carry ſo much weight with them, after what we have ſaid of the firſt riſe, progreſs, and apparent obſcurity of the ancient kingdom of this people, as may ſatisfy every reader, that no point of hiſtory has been ſo much miſtaken, as that which relates to the firſt riſe of the Babylonian empire, ſo much talked of by profane writers.

And here it will be proper to premiſe, that however we diſtinguiſh the Aſſyrians and Babylonians from each other; they were but two branches of one and the ſame family. This moſt evidently appears from Scripture, where the Babylonian names are pure Aſſyrian; and as much is explicitly confeſſed by profane authors, who declare the city of Babylon was built by the Aſſyrians: and hence we are to conclude, that the ancient people who were in immediate ſubjection to Nimrod, have properly nothing to do with the great Babylonian kingdom, which aroſe in after-times; but that the whole muſt be attributed to the people who migrated with Aſhur, or Aſſur, Gen. x. 11. and ever after retained his name. If any proof of this could be wanting, we might recur not only to Cteſias himſelf, and to Herodotus, but likewiſe to the whole tribe of Greek and Latin hiſtorians who have treated of this empire. But as this point is ſo evident, we ſhall only obſerve, that in Ptolemy's canon the kings of Babylon are called Aſſyrians, and that in the ſame the kings of Perſia are called the kings of the Medes, as it were in honour to the two nations of which they were natural branches; for, in ſtrictneſs, the hiſtory of the empire of Babylon is no other than a continuation of the hiſtory of the Aſſyrian empire; juſt as the empire of the Perſians is of the empire of the Medes.

If we next conſider the ſituation of the countries in reſpect of each other, and the true nature of things, it muſt be plain they were twin-ſiſters, or at leaſt were produced within a few years of each other. Previous to this we muſt juſt repeat, that Pul, the firſt Aſſyrian king with us, does not appear as a conqueror weſtward above twenty-four years before the firſt of the reign of Nabonaſſar; and we would venture to aſſert, that Pul muſt then have been in the middle of life, and that after this he may have lived at leaſt twenty-four years. And this being ſuppoſed, as it very naturally may, we ſhall have as good a proof as we can almoſt require, that he divided his empire between two of his ſons; for, according to Ptolemy, Nabonaſſar had Babylon for his portion; and, according to Scripture, Tiglath-pileſer had Aſſyria for his; for, in Scripture, we find him as the immediate ſucceſſor of Pul; in about ſeven years after whoſe death, he appears on this ſide of the Euphrates, and leads off with him a number of captives of different tribes and nations; ſo that no chronologies can more exactly concur together than the Scripture and Ptolemy's canon in this particular. But to return to our point: the very ſituation of theſe countries may convince us, that the thing was as we contend; for they ſo mutually extend againſt each other on the banks of the Tigris, which was the common boundary of both, and the only partition between them; and Babylonia was ſo throughout a barrier between Aſſyria and the weſtern parts, that the Aſſyrian could not have reached any of them, but by croſſing ſome part or other of the country of Babylon; and but to imagine that he attempted to croſs the Euphrates before he had made a conqueſt of this rich and fertile land, were an abſurdity of the moſt glaring kind. And accordingly we find that Cteſias himſelf, how inconſiſtent he may have been in other points, was ſo ſenſible of this, that he makes Babylonia the firſt conqueſt the Aſſyrians attempted.

Now, as we have plainly ſeen that the two kingdoms took birth together in one man, it is inconſiſtent to ſuppoſe that one of them was not in ſubordination to the other; and accordingly it appears that Nabonaſſar was the younger ſon, and conſequently in ſubjection to his brother Tiglath-pileſer, who is ſtiled the king of Aſſyria, and held his reſidence at the original ſeat of the empire, Nineveh; which that it was older than the city called by us Babylon, is not only to be gathered from the above-cited paſſage in Iſaiah xxiii. and other parts of Scripture, but even from the bulk of profane authors, who agree that Nineveh was finiſhed before the foundations of Babylon were laid.

This being ſettled, we ſhall have no more reaſon to wonder, that theſe two kingdoms were in perfect harmony, than that two brothers ſhould agree together; the ambition of the one muſt have contributed to the grandeur and proſperity of the other reciprocally; and that a right of ſuperiority was acknowledged by the younger branch at Babylon, toward the elder of Nineveh, may be eaſily conceived. If this was not exactly the caſe, we ſhall have ſuch difficulties ſtart up againſt us, both in the hiſtory of Babylon and that of Aſſyria, as will be quite inſurmountable. We know they exiſted as collateral kingdoms, for while the great Sennacherib was in his full glory and warring in the weſt, we read in the 12th verſe of this chapter of an embaſſy from Berodach, or Merodac-baladan king of Babylon to Hezekiah.

From all this we may gather, that Nabonaſſar, this firſt king of Babylon bids fair to have been the Ninus of Cteſias, as Tiglath-pileſer, and rather more ſo; and particularly as he was, in all probability, the husband of Semiramis, who if ſhe had any right to be denominated from any city of theſe parts, was confeſſedly, according to the common notion, a Babylonian. For notwithſtanding the Ninus of Cteſias, is ſaid to have raiſed the city of Nineveh, in which that author differs from what we think very evident, he yet agrees in ſo many other particulars with the perſon of Nabonaſſar, that he makes full amends for his miſtake in the other point.

Again, there is another reſemblance between Ninus and Nabonaſſar; the conqueſts of the former are wholly confined to the regions beyond the Euphrates; and he never once makes his appearance on this ſide of that river, except in the romantic liſt of his victories. And ſo it is moſt likely to have been with Nabonaſſar, who may have warred upon the Medes, the Bactrians, and neighbouring people, while the emperor, his eldeſt brother, was proſecuting a war, and graſping at conqueſts of far greater importance, whereby he hoped to become maſter of the great and wealthy kingdoms of Syria, Phœnice, and Paleſtine; and thereby to pave his way to Egypt it ſelf. Theſe were ſtates, which for their great opulence muſt, above all others, have allured a race of princes, poſſeſſed with an unnatural avidity to live upon the ſpoil.

As we have ſeen that Nabonaſſar may poſſibly have been the Ninus of profane writers, we are next to declare, that he can never have been, either the Shalmaneſer of Scripture, or the Beleſis of Cteſias, according to Dean Prideaux, and the generality of Chriſtians. Shalmaneſer he cannot poſſibly have been; for according to the canon of Ptolemy, he had been dead five years before Shalmaneſer ſeems to have begun his reign; nor can he have been Beleſis, for if this latter be a prince any where in the canon, he muſt have been Nabopolaſſar, and indeed can have been no other. Now Nabopolaſſar did not begin to reign at Babylon, till full 108 years after Nabonaſſar had departed this life. Nor conſequently can he have been Nanybrus who was confeſſedly the ſame with Beleſis.

To dwell no longer on the miſtakes that have been committed, with regard to this firſt king of Babylon, we would next obſerve, that the Semiramis of the Greeks, muſt have been his wife, if ever there were ſuch a queen of Babylon; whereby we ſhall ſtill more amply evince, that Nabonaſſar may have been the Ninus of Cteſias. She is ſaid to have been born at Aſcalon in Syria, and brought from that country by a certain officer belonging to the king of Aſſyria, and that Ninus fell in love with her, tho' ſhe was married to that officer, and made her his queen. Now, as we have ſtated the chronology of Aſſyria and Babylonia, it was about the middle of Nabonaſſar's reign at Babylon, that his ſeeming brother, Tiglath-pileſer, croſſed the Euphrates, and captivated ſome of the tribes and nations to the weſtward. Among theſe captives it is very likely Semiramis may have been, according to the ſtory of Cteſias; and as ſhe muſt have been a woman of very ſuperior wit and beauty, it is not ſtrange that ſome great Aſſyrian lord ſhould make her his moſt favourite wife. It is poſſible alſo, that ſhe may have attended him to the Bactrian war, in which Nabonaſſar very probably commanded. And that this was ſomething of the caſe, appears by this, that the Ninus of Cteſias lived not very long with her, and left her behind him with a young child. Now Nabonaſſar reigned but fourteen years, and it was in the ſeventh year of his reign that Tiglath-pileſer firſt made any captives from this ſide of the Euphrates. If then we ſuppoſe, as according to the ſtory we may, that ſhe lived with her firſt husband five years, ſhe muſt have fallen to the lot of Nabonaſſar, in the latter end of his twelfth, or the beginning of his thirteenth year; and ſo he can have lived with her but barely two years; and this agrees ſeemingly with Cteſias, who, as we apprehend, makes the duration of their marriage to be very ſhort.

The ſecond king of the Babylonians is called Nadius in the canon; he reigned but two years, and if what we have conjectured in the foregoing reign was at all the caſe, as, by comparing things together in the manner we have done, it ſeems to have been; this Nadius muſt then be the Ninyas of Cteſias and his followers, and muſt have died an infant of about three years old.

The next that filled the throne, according to Ptolemy, were Chinzirus and Porus, who reigned five years; concerning theſe we have nothing to conjecture.

Jugæus

Jugæus reigned next, of whom there is nothing recorded. He was ſucceeded by Merdoc-empad, who is certainly the Berodach, or Merodach-baladan of Scripture, who ſent an embaſſy to Hezekiah king of Judah. The times of the former in the canon, and of the latter in Scripture, agree exactly; and it muſt have been in the ſeventh or eighth year of his reign that he ſent to Hezekiah. He is called Merodach-baladan in Iſaiah xxxix. 1. but in the book of Kings, in the verſe before us, he is called Berodach-baladan. In both places it appears, that he was the ſon of Baladan; whence we gather, that the Jugæus above, who ſeems to have been his father, would be more properly called Baladan. He ſeems to have ſomething more in view by this embaſſy to Jeruſalem, than merely to enquire concerning the regreſſion of the ſhadow upon the dial of Ahaz, which might be only a pretext to cover his principal intention. For as Sennacherib was then alive, it cannot well be conceived how there ſhould have been ſuch a liberty taken by his Babylonian relation or dependant, as to correſpond with an enemy by ambaſſadors. This is the firſt Babylonian king we read of in Scripture, who had any intercourſe with the kings of Jeruſalem; and he muſt have been a man of reſolution and ambition, if we ſuppoſe he wanted to draw Hezekiah into an alliance with him againſt the Aſſyrian emperor. Upon the whole, the men he ſent from Babylon, ſeem rather to have been private agents than publick ambaſſadors; and what was tranſacted between them and king Hezekiah ſeems to have been a ſecret. The king of Babylon may have been informed, that the Medes were on the point to revolt, as they certainly did very ſoon afterward; and that other nations, their neighbours, were ripe for the ſame. This might be known by him, and therefore he may have attempted to form alliances with the Jews, and other nations on this ſide the Euphrates, againſt Sennacherib, in order to ſecure his own dominions, or to enable him to withſtand ſuch invaſions as he might have dreaded from the ſame people, who were preparing to rebel againſt the Aſſyrian monarch. This prince reigned twelve years.

Ver. 13. And Hezekiah hearkned unto them, and ſhewed them all the houſe of his precious things, the ſilver, and the gold, and the ſpices, and the precious ointment, and all the houſe of his armour, and all that was found in his treaſures, &c.] Hezekiah took a particular pleaſure in entertaining the Babylonian ambaſſadors with a ſight of all the wealth, grandeur, and ſtrength of his court and kingdom. The Jubilee year ſeems likewiſe to have been about this time [Vid. Uſſer in A. M. 3295.] at which ſolemnity a vaſt concourſe of people flocked to Jeruſalem, which could not but add very much to the magnificence of that court and metropolis; becauſe upon ſuch occaſions it was uſual for the wealthy men of the kingdom to pour their rich preſents into the temple.

This oſtentatious behaviour of Hezekiah was highly diſpleaſing to God, who ſoon ſent him this dreadful meſſage by Iſaiah; that thoſe very Babylonians, whoſe eyes he had glutted with all the glory of his kingdom, would in a ſhort time not only ſtrip it of all that was valuable in it, but even carry away ſome of his offspring, and emaſculate them in their monarch's palace. At which Hezekiah was brought to ſuch a ſenſe of his overſight, that he acknowledged the gracious mildneſs of the ſentence, ſince he was ſuffered to end his days in a tranquil manner. He accordingly died in the 54th year of his age, and 29th of his reign, according to the words of the prophet, and was buried in the chiefeſt of the ſepulchres of the ſons of David. His funeral obſequies were performed with uncommon magnificence, not only in the city, but alſo throughout the whole kingdom. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Manaſſeh.

CHAP. XXI.

1 Manaſſeh his reign. 3 His great idolatry. 10 His wickedneſs cauſeth propheſies againſt Judah. 17 Amon ſucceedeth him. 19 Amon's wicked reign. 23 He being ſlain by his ſervants, and thoſe murderers ſlain by the people, Joſiah is made king.

MAnaſſeh was twelve years old when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Hephzi-bah.

2 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD caſt out before the children of Iſrael.

3 For he built up again the high places which Hezekiah his father had deſtroyed, and he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did Ahab king of Iſrael, and worſhipped all the hoſt of heaven, and ſerved them.

4 And he built altars in the houſe of the LORD, of which the LORD ſaid, In Jeruſalem will I put my name.

5 And he built altars for all the hoſt of heaven, in the two courts of the houſe of the LORD.

6 And he made his ſon paſs through the fire, and obſerved times, and uſed inchantments, and dealt with familiar ſpirits, and wizards: he wrought much wickedneſs in the ſight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And he ſet a graven image of the grove that he had made, in the houſe of which the LORD ſaid to David, and to Solomon his ſon, In this houſe and in Jeruſalem, which I have choſen out of all tribes of Iſrael, will I put my name for ever.

8 Neither will I make the feet of Iſrael move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers; only if they will obſerve to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law that my ſervant Moſes commanded them.

9 But they hearkned not: and Manaſſeh ſeduced them to do more evil than did the nations, whom the LORD deſtroyed before the children of Iſrael.

10 ¶ And the LORD ſpake by his ſervants the prophets, ſaying,

11 Becauſe Manaſſeh king of Judah hath done theſe abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath made Judah alſo to ſin with his idols:

12 Therefore thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Behold, I am bringing ſuch evil upon Jeruſalem and Judah, that whoſoever heareth of it, both his ears ſhall tingle.

13 And I will ſtretch over Jeruſalem the line of Samaria, and the plummet of the houſe of Ahab: and I will wipe Jeruſalem as a man wipeth a diſh, wiping it, and turning it upſide down.

14 And I will forſake the remnant of mine inheritance, and deliver them into the hand of their enemies, and they ſhall become a prey, and a ſpoil to all their enemies;

15 Becauſe they have done that which was evil in my ſight, and have provoked me to anger ſince the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even unto this day.

16 Moreover, Manaſſeh ſhed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jeruſalem from one end to another, beſide his ſin wherewith he made Judah to ſin, in doing that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD.

17 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Manaſſeh, and all that he did, and his ſin that he ſinned, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

18 And Manaſſeh ſlept with his fathers, and was buried in the garden of his own houſe, in the garden of Uzza: and Amon his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

19 ¶ Amon was twenty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned two years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Meſhullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah.

20 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, as his father Manaſſeh did.

21 And he walked in all the way that his father walked in, and ſerved the idols that his fathers ſerved, and worſhipped them:

22 And he forſook the LORD God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

23 ¶ And the ſervants of Amon conſpired againſt him, and ſlew the king in his own houſe.

24 And the people of the land ſlew all them that had conſpired againſt king Amon, and the people of the land made Joſiah his ſon king in his ſtead.

25 Now the reſt of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

26 And he was buried in his ſepulchre, in the garden of Uzza: and Joſiah his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

Ver. 1. Manaſſeh was twelve years when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and five years in Jeruſalem.] The years wherein he was captive in Babylon (2 Chron. xxxiii. 11.) muſt be comprehended in this number.

Ver. 2. And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] Whether this prince was naturally vicious, or fell into the hands of wicked counſellors, we may date the ruin both of the kingdom and religion from the fatal day of his aſcending the throne. We may ſuppoſe, that as he was but young, he was eaſily drawn aſide by he princes and nobles who never heartily joined in the reformation made by Hezekiah; but were, in all probability diſpleaſed at it, and ſo apoſtatized from it as ſoon as that good prince was dead. For one cannot well conceive how ſuch a ſudden change ſhould be made in religion, and ſuch groſs idolatries reſtored, but from the general corruption of the great men, who had the management of this young king. But, however the fact may be, it is certain, that Manaſſeh not only ſtrove to ſurpaſs all his predeceſſors in wickedneſs, idolatry, tyranny, and ſacrilege, but even to ſhew an impious emulation to deſtroy all that his pious father had accompliſhed, and to act in direct oppoſition to him. Hezekiah's firſt care had been to root all idolatry out of his kingdom, and to reſtore the worſhip of God, and the Sacred Service of the temple, to its original order and ſplendor. His degenerate ſon, on the contrary, made it his ſtudy to baniſh religion and morality out of it; to revive all the old idolatry, and to introduce new, and till then unheard of deities, idols, and ceremonies; beſide witchcraft, ſorceries, and every impious cuſtom that was practiſed among the heathens. Baal now became the favourite object of his worſhip; the ſun, moon, and planets, together with a vaſt multitude of other Pagan gods had altars and groves erected to them, both in Judah and Jeruſalem. Moloch, and the valley of Hinnom, became more frequented than ever; the unrighteous king encouraging his ſubjects to ſacrifice their innocent children there, as Ahaz had done before. But the moſt execrable inſtance of wickedneſs and ſacrilege was, his introducing the vileſt of idolatries into the very temple of the moſt high God, and cauſing a graven image of the grove, an odious idol worſhipped with ceremonies of the utmoſt impurity, to be ſet up in the moſt holy place; as if he had deſigned to drive the God of Iſrael out of his habitation, and to diſclaim at once all thoſe ſignal bleſſings he had conferred on David and Solomon, and on all who worſhipped him there with an upright mind.

Ver. 10. And the Lord ſpake by his ſervants the prophets ſaying.] Abarbinel is of opinion, that Hoſea, Joel, Nahum, and Habakkuk, all propheſied in the days of this prince. And ſome think, Obadiah alſo, and Iſaiah, who, as the Jews ſay, was ſawn aſunder by him.

Ver. 11. Becauſe Manaſſeh king of Judah hath done all theſe abominations, and hath done wickedly above all that the Amorites did, &c.] The whole people of Canaan are comprehended under the name of Amorites, who were the moſt eminent of all the ſeven nations, by whom that land was anciently inhabited.

Ver. 12. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael, Behold, I am bringing ſuch evil upon Jeruſalem and Judah, that whoſoever heareth of it, both his ears ſhall tingle.] The report of the calamities this people brought upon themſelves by their moſt iniquitous conduct, would be ſo dreadful as to infuſe horror and conſternation into the minds of all who heard them related.

Ver. 13. And I will ſtretch over Jeruſalem the line of Samaria,] This is a metaphor taken from thoſe who ſet out the lots and portions of workmen, by drawing a line to divide them. And is as much as to ſay, God would give to Jeruſalem the ſame meaſure he had ordained for Samaria; that is, he would cauſe it to be pulled down to the ground; would conſume ſome of them by famine, others by the ſword, and ſuffer the reſt to be carried into captivity.

—— And the plummet of the houſe of Ahab:] As they imitated the ſins he had committed, ſo they ſhould be puniſhed like that prince, whoſe houſe was utterly deſtroyed.

The

The expreſſion in this part of the verſe ſeems to be another meraphor taken from builders, who meaſure with a line and a plummet, what part of a ſtructure ſhall ſtand, and what be demoliſhed.

—— And I will wipe Jeruſalem as a man wipeth a diſh, wiping it, and turning it up-ſide down.] That is, there ſhould be no more appearance of people in that city, than there is of any thing in a diſh, after it is emptied and cleaned. As if he had ſaid, I will entirely cleanſe her of all her inhabitants, ſo that none ſhall be left. The Hebrew word, which we tranſlate diſh, is rendered by the Septuagint ὁ ἀλάβαστρος, an alabaſter box of precious ointment; and the Chaldee tranſlates it Seleucia, in which the Greek word λάκυθος is included, as the illuſtrious Spanheim obſerves upon the hymn of Calimachus to Pallas, ver. 13. ſignifying that Jeruſalem was once in high eſteem with God, like a precious ointment; but having loſt its fragrant ſcent, he would reject her in the ſame manner as ſuch an unguent is diſregarded when it has nothing to recommend it.

Ver. 14. And I will forſake the remnant of mine inheritance,] That is, Judah, who alone was left after the captivity of the ten tribes.

Ver. 15. Becauſe they have done that which was evil in my ſight, &c.] God now intended to puniſh them for their former rebellions, ever ſince they were a people; which were complea ted by Manaſſeh, whoſe ſin was ſo great, that it is ſometimes mentioned as the ſole cauſe of their captivity. See Jeremiah xiv. 4.

Ver. 16. Moreover, Manaſſeh ſhed innocent blood very much,] Theſe words are thus gloſſed by Procopius Gazæus: "He chiefly deſtroyed thoſe who oppoſed themſelves to his impiety, and denounced the Divine Diſpleaſure againſt him (that is, the prophets) they ſay he cauſed the prophet Iſaiah to be ſawn in ſunder." The Jews declare the ſame in their Babylonian Talmud, in the treatiſe Jebamoth. Nay the word uſed by the Apoſtle, ἐπρίσθησαν, they were ſawn aſunder, Heb. xi. 37. is commonly referred to this act of impious barbarity.

—— Till he had filled Jeruſalem from one end to another,] This is a metaphor from meaſures when they are filled up to the brim.

—— Beſide his ſin wherewith he made Judah to ſin,] That is, beſide his own abominable idolatry.

Ver. 18. And Manaſſeh ſlept with his fathers, &c.] He died in the 55th year of his reign, and 67th of his age; and was buried in his own gardens, probably by his own choice; the conſciouſneſs of his former miſcarriages not ſuffering him to think himſelf worthy to be depoſited among his anceſtors. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Ammon.

This prince was but twenty-two years of age when he came to the crown, ſo that he could have obſerved nothing but the greateſt indications of piety and goodneſs in the example of his father, who proved a very humble penitent for all his offences, many years before he died, as appears by the 33d chapter of the ſecond book of Chronicles: and yet ſo infatuated was this young king that he gave himſelf up to all the vile idolatries that his father had committed in the former part of his reign. But before he had reigned two years, a conſpiracy was formed againſt him by ſome of his chief officers, who aſſaſſinated him in his own palace, and bury'd him in the ſame garden where his father was interred. For as he forſook God, whoſe ſervant he ought to have been, ſo his own ſervants forſook him, and murder'd him in his palace.

The inhabitants of Jeruſalem who had no ſhare in this conſpiracy and aſſaſſination, immediately took up arms upon the news of what had happened; for the murder of their king, though a very wicked prince, was a crime of ſuch pernicious conſequence, that the people would not ſuffer it to go unpuniſhed. They therefore revenged it by the death of the regicides, and then placed Joſiah, the ſon of their dead king, upon the throne, he being then about eight years of age.

CHAP. XXII.

1 Joſiah his good reign. 3 He taketh care for the repair of the temple. 8. Hilkiah having found a book of the law, Joſiah ſendeth to Huldah to enquire of the Lord. 15. Huldah propheſieth the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, but reſpite thereof in Joſiah's time.

JOſiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of Boſcath.

2 And he did that which was right in the ſight of the LORD, and walked in all the way of David his father, and turned not aſide to the right hand or to the left.

3 ¶ And it came to paſs in the eighteenth year of king Joſiah, that the king ſent Shaphan the ſon of Azaliah the ſon of Meſhullam, the ſcribe, to the houſe of the LORD, ſaying,

4 Go up to Hilkiah the high-prieſt, that he may ſum the ſilver which is brought into the houſe of the LORD, which the keepers of the door have gathered of the people:

5 And let them deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the overſight of the houſe of the LORD: and let them give it to the doers of the work, which is in the houſe of the LORD, to repair the breaches of the houſe.

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and maſons, and to buy timber, and hewn ſtone, to repair the houſe.

7 Howbeit, there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, becauſe they dealt faithfully.

8 ¶ And Hilkiah the high-prieſt ſaid unto Shaphan the ſcribe, I have found the book of the law in the houſe of the LORD: and Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

9 And Shaphan the ſcribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and ſaid, Thy ſervants have gathered the money that was found in the houſe, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the overſight of the houſe of the LORD.

10 And Shaphan the ſcribe ſhewed the king, ſaying, Hilkiah the prieſt hath delivered me a book: and Shaphan read it before the king.

11 And it came to paſs when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, that he rent his clothes.

12 And the king commanded Hilkiah the prieſt, and Ahikam the ſon of Shaphan, and Achbor the ſon of Micaiah, and Shaphan the ſcribe, and Aſahiah a ſervant of the kings, ſaying,

13 Go ye, enquire of the LORD for me, and for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled againſt us, becauſe our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

14 So Hilkiah the prieſt, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Aſahiah, went unto Huldah the propheteſs, the wife of Shallum, the ſon of Tikvah, the ſon of Harhas, keeper of the wardrobe (now ſhe dwelt in Jeruſalem in the college) and they communed with her.

15 ¶ And ſhe ſaid unto them, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, Tell the man that ſent you to me.

16 Thus ſaith the LORD, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read.

17 Becauſe they have forſaken me, and have burnt incenſe unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands: therefore my wrath ſhall be kindled againſt this place, and ſhall not be quenched.

18 But to the king of Judah which ſent you to enquire of the LORD, thus ſhall ye ſay to him, Thus ſaith the LORD God of Iſrael, As touching the words which thou haſt heard;

19 Becauſe thine heart was tender, and thou haſt humbled thy ſelf before the LORD, when thou heardſt what I ſpake againſt this place, and againſt the inhabitants thereof, that they ſhould become a deſolation and a curſe, and haſt rent thy clothes, and wept before me: I alſo have heard thee, ſaith the LORD.

20 Behold therefore, I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou ſhalt be gathered into thy grave in peace, and thine eyes ſhall not ſee all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

Ver. 1. Joſiah was eight years old when he began to reign, &c.] It is amazing to think how the whole kingdom could be ſo over-run with all kind of wickedneſs and idolatry in the ſhort time of Ammon's reign, after it had been ſo thoroughly purged from thoſe impurities by his father; and yet it was grown to ſuch a degree of impiety when Joſiah came to the crown, that the prophet Zephaniah, who was contemporary with him, gives us a moſt dreadful catalogue of the licentiouſneſs and irreligion, which then reigned through the whole kingdom. Among the princes, magiſtrates and judges, reigned injuſtice, oppreſſion, cruelty, and all manner of debauchery: among the prieſts, pride, avarice, and corruption; together with a ſhameful traffic of ſacred things: among the people, ignorance and irreligion; men ſwearing with the ſame breath by the Lord, and by Malcom, and altars being reared every where to Baal, to the whole hoſt of heaven, and to all other deities of the pagans. The very ſanctuary itſelf was again polluted by the deteſtable idol of the grove, and its court furniſhed with male proſtitutes, and women who wove hangings and tents, to hide the odious and unnatural ceremonies of its votaries.

In this ſad and horrid condition was the kingdom when the infant monarch took the reins of it; ſo that it required nothing leſs than a miracle to reform it. But a Joſiah had been promiſed above 300 years before, by a prophet ſent on purpoſe to Jeroboam at Bethel, 1 Kings xiii. 2. One who was to work the greateſt reformation that ever was accompliſhed in the land, ſince it was to extend through the two kingdoms, and this Joſiah was the perſon pre-ordained by God for that glorious work. However, his tender years would not permit him immediately to undertake any thing, except perhaps adviſing with ſuch pious counſellors as could beſt inſtruct him, both with reſpect to what was to be done, and the propereſt means of performing it: and it was not long before he ſet about his premeditated deſign, with a zeal, diligence, and intrepidity, which, conſidering his years, and the arduouſneſs of the task, could be owing to nothing leſs than a ſupernatural impulſe.

When he had attained to the 26th year of his age, and the 18th of his reign, he beheld with regret the dilapidations of the houſe of God, which made it neceſſary to have them repaired as ſoon as poſſible. To this end, he gave orders for opening the great coffer, in which the poll-money and free-will offerings uſed to be depoſited, and cauſed the money to be diſtributed among ſuch faithful overſeers, as would ſet about the work without delay; and to encourage them to be doubly diligent in it, he told them, that he would depend upon their fidelity for the right management of the money committed to them. While this was doing, the high prieſt, who probably preſided over the work, ſent word to the king, that he had found the book of the law, which he had ſent to him by the ſecretary of the temple. This is generally agreed to have been the original copy written by Moſes, and by him ordered to be depoſited, with the ark, into the moſt Holy Place, Deut. xxxi. 26. but which ſome pious high prieſt had cauſed to be thus hid, in the reign of Ahaz or Manaſſeh, to prevent its being deſtroyed, with all the copies of it.

But tho' this book is allowed to have been the archetype written by Moſes, yet it is much diſputed, whether it was the whole Pentateuch, commonly called hathorah, the law; or only the book of Deuteronomy; or even barely the 28th, 29th, 30th, and 31ſt chapters of it. Joſephus, by calling it the Sacred Books of Moſes, (Antiq. l. 10. c. 5.) ſeems to have taken it for the whole work of that great legiſlator; others have retrenched it to the book of Deuteronomy, becauſe this is a kind of repetition or epitome of the Moſaic law; and laſtly, father Calmet, with ſome others, will have it to have been no more than the four chapters above-mentioned, and in which are contained all the bleſſings and curſes which ſo alarmed the pious monarch, ver. 11. This, indeed, was that part which Moſes enjoined their future kings to write, and preſerve a double copy of it, for the regulation of their conduct, and which he commanded Joſhua to ſet up upon Gerizim.

But if either this ſhort epitome, or even the whole book of Deuteronomy, was all that the high prieſt found hid in the temple, when was the reſt of the Pentateuch recovered? If it be ſaid, that there might be ſome copies of this laſt ſtill extant, then this ſummary muſt have been in it; and it will be ſurpriſing, that ſome one or more ſhould not have been brought to ſo good a king, after he had given ſuch ſignal proofs of his piety and zeal; and if any ſuch had been preſented to him, he muſt either have ſtrangely neglected the reading of it; or if he had not, he could never have been under ſuch a ſurprize and fear, at the reading of that which the high prieſt ſent to him. We therefore think, with the far greater number of Jews and Chriſtians, that it was the whole Pentateuch, and that there might be ſtill ſeveral imperfect and mutilated copies diſperſed here and there; which might be rectified by this prototype, after it was now brought to light. For the Jews report, that Manaſſeh blotted the name JEHOVAH out of all the books he could find. Hilkiah therefore rejoiced that he had found the original by which all might be corrected; and the finding it at this very time, when Joſiah was making a reformation of religion in all its branches, could not but be looked upon as a remarkable providence; and which very much affected the king, as we read afterward.

If it be asked, how either Joſiah, or Shaphan, could run over thoſe five books ſo quickly, as to come preſently to thoſe bleſſings and curſes, which are contained in the very latter end of the laſt of them? it may be anſwered, that their being at the end of the whole work, might be the very reaſon of their ſeeing them ſo ſoon. For, as their manner was to write upon volumes of a conſiderable length, which were rolled up round one or two ſticks, it might ſo happen that theſe laſt chapters proved on the outſide, and that the king, impatient to know the contents of them, might have curioſity to read them, before he had unfolded a round or two. We, however, are very far from rejecting the notion of the Jews, who believe that providence directed him to that very part. Something like which we find happened under the Goſpel, Acts viii. 32.

What appears moſt ſurpriſing, is, that all the copies of the Scriptures which the good king Hezekiah ſeems to have cauſed to be written, and diſperſed about his kingdom, ſhould be ſo ſoon vaniſhed. All that can be ſaid in the caſe, is, that Manaſſeh, during the former part of his reign, had made ſuch havock of them, that the few which remained were only in private hands, who preſerved them with the utmoſt caution and ſecrecy.

Joſiah delayed not to read this Sacred work: but when he ſaw what dreadful judgments were denounced in it, againſt thoſe very abominations, with which he had found the whole land contaminated, at his firſt coming to the crown, he rent his clothes, and expreſſed the moſt lively tokens of grief; not doubting but both he and his whole kingdom, would ſoon feel the effects of thoſe threatnings. Abarbinel ſaith, that Joſiah happened to read the place, where the puniſhment of their king is denounced, Deut. xxviii. 36. or he obſerved the time drew near, when the calamities God had threaten'd, would be inflicted, for their long offences againſt his law. He accordingly ſaith, ver. 13. "Great is the wrath of the Lord, that is kindled a-"gainſt us, becauſe our fathers have not hearkened to the "words of this book, to do according to all that which is "written concerning us." By all which it is plain, the king had not written a copy of the law with his own hand, according to the Moſaic command. Diſuſe frequently cancels the beſt laws: for it is too probable the Jews likewiſe had a long time neglected to read the law every ſeventh year.

There lived at that time, in one of the colleges of Jeruſalem, a famous propheteſs, named Huldah; to her therefore Joſiah diſpatched ſome of his prime officers, with the high-prieſt at their head, to inquire what would be the fate both of the king and people, ſeeing they had incurred the curſes contained in that Sacred Volume. It is certain, that both Jeremiah, and Zephaniah, propheſied in the reign of Joſiah; therefore it may ſeem ſtrange that the king did not apply to one of them. Abarbinel ſays, that Jeremiah was at this time abſent from Jeruſalem, being gone to convert the ten tribes, or rather being at his own houſe in Anathoth, a city in the tribe of Benjamin, and at the diſtance of about three miles from Jeruſalem: and he likewiſe ſuppoſes that Zephaniah was not in Jeruſalem at that time. The Jews have a tradition in Maſſecheth Megillah, that eight prophets deſcended from Rahab, whereof Huldah was one. And Kimchi, upon this place declares, "our doctors write, that three propheſied "in the days of Joſiah, namely, Jeremiah in the ſtreets or "villages, Zephaniah in the Synagogues, and Huldah "among the women."

The anſwer returned by this propheteſs to the king was, that God would not fail to inflict all thoſe ſevere puniſhments upon his faithleſs and ungrateful ſubjects; but that as for himſelf, the ſincere concern and remorſe which he had ſo lately expreſſed for the iniquities of Judah, and the deſolations with which that people were menaced, had ſo far ſuſpended the Divine Vengeance, that he ſhould be gathered to his fathers in peace, before the nation felt the dire effects of their impieties and abominations. For tho' Joſiah was ſlain in battle, chap. xxiii. 29. yet he went to his grave in peace; becauſe he did not live to ſee the calamities which were inevitably threaten'd againſt the nation; but left his kingdom in a peaceable condition. For the Egyptians, who ſlew him, gave the Jews no long diſturbance, and the Babylonians were not yet ready to come up againſt them.

CHAP. XXIII.

1 Joſiah cauſeth the book to be read in a ſolemn aſſembly. 3 He reneweth the covenant of the LORD. 4 He deſtroyeth idolatry. 15 He burneth dead mens bones upon the altar of Bethel, as was fore-propheſied. 21 He keepeth a moſt ſolemn paſſover. 24 He putteth away witches, and all abomination. 26 God's final wrath againſt Judah. 29 Joſiah provoking Pharaoh-nechoh, is ſlain at Megiddo. 31 Jehoahaz ſucceeding him, is impriſoned by Pharaoh-nechoh, who made Jehoiakim king. 36 Jehoiakim his wicked reign.

AND the king ſent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah, and of Jeruſalem.

2 And the king went up into the houſe of the LORD, and all the men of Judah, and all the inhabitants of Jeruſalem with him, and the prieſts, and the prophets, and all the people, both ſmall and great: and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant which was found in the houſe of the LORD.

3 ¶ And the king ſtood by a pillar, and made a covenant before the LORD, to walk after the LORD, and to keep his commandments, and his teſtimonies, and his ſtatutes, with all their heart, and all their ſoul to perform the words of this covenant, that were written in this book: and all the people ſtood to the covenant.

4 And the king commanded Hilkiah the high prieſt, and the prieſts of the ſecond order, and the keepers of the door to bring forth out of the temple of the LORD, all the veſſels that were made for Baal, and for the grove, and for all the hoſt of heaven: and he burnt them without Jeruſalem in the fields of Kidron, and carried the aſhes of them unto Beth-el.

5 And he put down the idolatrous prieſts, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incenſe in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jeruſalem, them alſo that burnt incenſe unto Baal, to the ſun, and to the moon, and to the planets, and to all the hoſt of heaven.

6 And

6 And he brought out the grove from the houſe of the LORD, without Jeruſalem, unto the brook Kidron, and burnt it at the brook Kidron, and ſtampt it ſmall to powder, and caſt the powder thereof upon the graves of the children of the people

7 And he brake down the houſes of the Sodomites that were by the houſe of the LORD, where the women wove hangings for the grove.

8 And he brought all the prieſts out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the prieſts had burnt incenſe from Geba to Beer-ſheba, and brake down the high places of the gates, that were in the entring in of the gate of Joſhua the governour of the city, which were on a mans left hand at the gate of the city.

9 Nevertheleſs the prieſts of the high places came not up to the altar of the LORD in Jeruſalem, but they did eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren.

10 And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man might make his ſon or his daughter to paſs through the fire to Molech.

11 And he took away the horſes that the kings of Judah had given to the ſun, at the entring in of the houſe of the LORD, by the chamber of Nathan-melech the chamberlain, which was in the ſuburbs, and burnt the chariots of the ſun with fire.

12 And the altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz which the kings of Judah had made, and the altars which Manaſſeh had made in the two courts of the houſe of the LORD, did the king, beat down, and brake them down from thence, and caſt the duſt of them into the brook Kidron.

13 And the high places that were before Jeruſalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, which Solomon the king of Iſrael had builded for Aſhtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for Chemoſh the abomination of the Moabites, and for Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon did the king defile.

14 And he brake in pieces the images, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with the bones of men.

15 ¶ Moreover, the altar that was at Beth-el, and the high place which Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin, had made, both that altar, and the high place he brake down, and burnt the high place, and ſtampt it ſmall to powder, and burnt the grove.

16 And as Joſiah turned himſelf, he ſpied the ſepulchres that were there in the mount, and ſent, and took the bones out of the ſepulchres, and burnt them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the LORD, which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed theſe words.

17 Then he ſaid, What title is that that I ſee? And the men of the city told him, It is the ſepulchre of the man of God, which came from Judah and proclaimed theſe things that thou haſt done againſt the altar of Beth-el.

18 And he ſaid, Let him alone, let no man move his bones: ſo they let his bones alone, with the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

19 And all the houſes alſo of the high places, that were in the cities of Samaria, which the kings of Iſrael had made to provoke the LORD to anger, Joſiah took away, and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Beth-el.

20 And he ſlew all the prieſts of the high places that were there, upon the altars, and burnt mens bones upon them, and returned to Jeruſalem.

21 ¶ And the king commanded all the people, ſaying, Keep the paſſover unto the LORD your God, as it is written in the book of this covenant.

22 Surely there was not holden ſuch a paſſover, from the days of the judges that judged Iſrael, nor in all the days of the kings of Iſrael, nor of the kings of Judah:

23 But in the eighteenth year of king Joſiah, wherein this paſſover was holden to the LORD in Jeruſalem.

24 ¶ Moreover, the workers with familiar ſpirits, and the wizards, and the images, and the idols, and all the abominations, that were ſpied in the land of Judah, and in Jeruſalem, did Joſiah put away, that he might perform the words of the law, which were written in the book that Hilkiah the prieſt found in the houſe of the LORD.

25 And like unto him was there no king before him, that turned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his ſoul, and with all his might, according to all the law of Moſes; neither after him aroſe there any like him.

26 ¶ Not-

26 ¶ Notwithſtanding, the LORD turned not from the fierceneſs of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled againſt Judah, becauſe of all the provocations that Manaſſeh had provoked him withal.

27 And the LORD ſaid, I will remove Judah alſo out of my ſight, as I have removed Iſrael, and will caſt off this city Jeruſalem, which I have choſen, and the houſe of which I ſaid, My name ſhall be there.

28 Now the reſt of the acts of Joſiah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

29 ¶ In his days Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up againſt the king of Aſſyria to the river Euphrates: and king Joſiah went againſt him, and he ſlew him at Megiddo, when he had ſeen him.

30 And his ſervants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jeruſalem, and buried him in his own ſepulchre: and the people of the land took Jehoahaz the ſon of Joſiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his fathers ſtead.

31 ¶ Jehoahaz was twenty and three years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Hamutal, the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

32 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

33 And Pharaoh-nechoh put him in bands at Riblah, in the land of Hamath, that he might not reign in Jeruſalem, and put the land to a tribute of an hundred talents of ſilver, and a talent of gold.

34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made Eliakim the ſon of Joſiah king in the room of Joſiah his father, and turned his name to Jehoiakim, and took Jehoahaz away: and he came to Egypt, and died there.

35 And Jehoiakim gave the ſilver and the gold to Pharaoh, but he taxed the land to give the money according to the commandment of Pharaoh; he exacted the ſilver, and the gold of the people of the land, of every one according to his taxation, to give it unto Pharaoh-nechoh.

36 ¶ Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

37 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

Ver. 1. And the king ſent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah, and of Jeruſalem.] The king having read the Sacred Book, became more ſenſible than ever of the depravities in which the people were immerſed, and conſequently of the neceſſity of a ſtrickt and ſpeedy reformation; cauſed all the elders of the kingdom to be aſſembled, and then went up to the temple, where he cauſed the book which the high-prieſt had ſo happily found, to be read to them, by ſeveral, perſons in different parts of that ſacred place, for it is not probable that the voice of one man could be heard by ſo great a multitude. While this was performing, the king ſtood by a pillar, contiguous to which was his throne, whereon the ſovereign was placed when he came to the temple, as the Jewiſh doctors will have it. The kings ſeat, ſaith Jacob Juda Leo, was in the court of the Iſraelites, at the entrance into the court of the prieſts, by a marble pillar. There he ſat when he came into the temple to worſhip God. There Joaſh was proclaimed king by Jehoaida, chap. xi. 14. There Hezekiah read the blaſphemous letter which the king of Aſſyria ſent him, xix. 14. and there Joſiah now made a covenant in his own name, and in the name of all the people, to adhere to all the Divine Laws for the future.

The king then commanded the prieſts to make a more ſtrict ſearch into the temple, and to caſt out all the prophane and idolatrous lumber they could find in it; after which he cauſed the whole to be burnt without Jeruſalem, and the aſhes to be carried to Beth-el, which place being the very foundation of idolatry, he entirely polluted it by caſting theſe aſhes there, that thoſe who had frequented that place, to celebrate their impious worſhip, might now be aſhamed to come near it. He likewiſe cauſed all thoſe prieſts whom the former kings of Judah had appointed to burn incenſe in the high places, to be for ever excluded from all ſacerdotal functions. The idolatrous prieſts are called Chemarim in the Hebrew; becauſe they were cloathed in black garments; whereas the prieſts of the Moſt High were arrayed in white, eſpecially thoſe whoſe genealogy was not queſtioned. Thoſe indeed who could not make out their deſcent, wore a black habit, to diſtinguiſh them from the other prieſts whoſe pedigree was undiſputed. And ſo did they who had any blemiſh or defect in their body, as appears by the Talmud in Middoth. It is certain likewiſe, that they among the heathen, who ſacrificed to the infernal gods, were cloathed with ſuch ſable veſtments, as appears by Canidia in Horace, l. 1. Sat. 8. and Medea in Apollonius Rhodius, lib. 3. ver. 861. Thus alſo the Egyptians bewailed Oſiris, and this habit was ſuitable to their ſolemnities, wherein they were ſad for the abſence of the ſun, who was meant by Oſiris. To this we may add, that Oſiris was repreſented among the Egyptians, by a black ox, covered with a ſilk garment of the ſame complexion; from whence, in all likelihood, the prieſts came to be ſo cloathed.

Joſiah would not ſuffer the idolatrous prieſts to dwell any longer in the cities of Judah, leſt they ſhould again corrupt the people; and he likewiſe defiled the places where thoſe impious miniſters had burnt incenſe. He made them, ſaith Kimchi, receptacles of impurity, by caſting dead carcaſſes and other unclean things therein, by which means he hoped to render the people diſguſted with their former idolatries, when they found the moſt noiſome ſtenches diffuſed through thoſe places, which before had been perfumed with the ſteams of fragrant odours. The king purſued this noble reformation from Geba to Beer-ſheba, that is, through the whole country; for Geba was in the northern parts, and Beer-ſheba in the ſouthern. The Sacred Hiſtorian adds, that "he brake "down the high places of the gates that were in the "entring in of the gate of Joſhua, the governor of the " city." ver. 8. The high places of the gates ſeem to have been erected there, for offering incenſe to thoſe tutelar gods, to whoſe care their idolatrous kings had committed the protection of their city. And Kimchi thinks, that the governor of the city had his private houſhold-god, and a portable altar on which he offered to his domeſtic idol. This Joſiah did not ſpare, but made the greateſt men ſenſible of his impartial zeal againſt all idolatry. He however mixed mercy with ſeverity, for tho' he would not ſuffer the prieſts of the high places to offer ſacrifices at the altar of God, becauſe they had defiled themſelves with idolatrous worſhip, yet he permitted them to partake of the bread of the prieſts, which comprehends all thoſe parts of any ſacrifice that was the prieſts portion. The holy writer mentions only the meat offering, which was to be of unleavened bread; Levit. ii. 4. 5. 11. but that is put by a Synechdoche for all other offerings that belonged to the prieſts.

Ver. 10. And he defiled Topheth, which is in the valley of the children of Hinnom.] Topheth is thought by ſome to have been the butchery, or place of ſlaughter, at Jeruſalem, lying to the ſouth of the city in the valley of Hinnom. 'Tis alſo ſaid, that a conſtant fire was kept there, to burn the carcaſſes and other impurities that were brought thither from the city. Iſaiah is ſuppoſed to allude to this cuſtom of burning dead carcaſſes in Topheth, when, ſpeaking of the defeat of the army of Sennacherib, he ſays; "For Topheth is ordained of old; yea for the "king it is prepared, he hath made it deep and large; "the pile thereof is fire and much wood, the breath of "the Lord, like a ſtream of brimſtone, doth kindle it." Iſaiah xxx. 33.

Others think the name of Topheth is given to the valley of Hinnom, on account of the ſacrifices that were offered there to Moloch by beat of drums or tabrets, the Hebrew word for which is Toph. We have already given a large account of theſe moſt barbarous oblations, and alſo a deſcription of the valley of Hinnom, in our comment on Levit. xviii. 21. to which we refer the reader.

Ver. 11. And he took away the horſes that the kings of Judah had given to the ſun.] Theſe horſes, which were conſecrated to the ſun, are repreſented as ſtanding at the entrance into the houſe of the Lord; but whether they were real horſes, or only carved or molten, has been thought very difficult to determine. We are informed by Herodotus and Xenophon, that the ancient Perſians conſecrated to the ſun, white horſes and chariots, with which they adorned their proceſſions; and wherein they were afterward imitated by other nations. We can ſee no reaſon, therefore, why ſo many learned commentators ſhould ſcruple to ſuppoſe, that the Jews had adopted this, among other idolatries that were much worſe, and rather chooſe to fancy, that the chariots and horſes mentioned in this verſe, were only carved or caſt, and ſet up in a chapel dedicated to the ſun, or only carved in baſs-relief, or even painted on the walls. What convinces us that theſe were real chariots drawn by horſes, and bearing ſome image of the ſun, is, that the text expreſly declares that Joſiah did not burn chariots and horſes, as he would have done, if they had been only carved or painted; but that he took away the horſes and burnt the chariots.

Ver. 12. And the Altars that were on the top of the upper chamber of Ahaz, which the kings of Judah had made,] They were not ſatisfied with the publick altars they had made, in a vaſt number of high places; but the roofs of their houſes being flat, they erected altars there, and particularly on the king's palace, where they worſhipped the ſun, moon, and ſtars.

—— And the altars which Manaſſeh had made in the two courts of the houſe of the Lord, did the king beat down.] It is ſaid, 2 Chron. xxxiii. 15. that when Manaſſeh repented, he "took away all the altars he had made in the "mount of the Lord, and in Jeruſalem;" from whence we ſuppoſe that the altars in the courts of the prieſts, and of the people were then removed. But Ammon ſet them up again in the very place where Manaſſeh had erected them; and ſo they are called the altars of Manaſſeh.

Ver. 13. And the high places that were before Jeruſalem, which were on the right hand of the mount of corruption, &c.] From Jeruſalem he proceeded to the mount of Olives, which is here called the mount of corruption, from the great number of idolatrous altars which had been erected there by Solomon, and repaired from time to time by ſeveral of his impious ſucceſſors. Joſiah demoliſhed and defiled them all, and filled their places with the bones of men, which he cauſed to be dug out of their graves and burnt; being the bones of idolatrous prieſts. It was upon this occaſion, that having obſerved a monumental inſcription on one of the tombs, he was informed it was that of the prophet, who came from Judah, 1 Kings xiii. 1, &c. to denounce to Jeroboam that total deſtruction of idolatry which Joſiah was then fulfilling: Whereupon this good king ordered, that a particular regard ſhould be paid to his aſhes; by which means thoſe of the lying propher, who had been the cauſe of his diſobedience and untimely death, and had ordered his body to be buried in the ſame grave with the man of God, eſcaped being diſturbed, and burnt with the reſt.

After this, Joſiah took a circuit through all the cities of Iſrael, many of which lay almoſt deſolate, and he every where deſtroyed the idols and altars, which either the Iſraelites, or the Aſſyrian Colonies had ſet up, and put all their idolatrous prieſts to death: and having thoroughly purged both kingdoms from every kind of idolatry, he returned to Jeruſalem, and ſet himſelf about reſtoring the worſhip of God, and the uſual ſervice of the temple.

The king, after his return to Jeruſalem, gave orders for the people to keep the paſſover, to the obſervance of which duty he had bound them and himſelf, ver. 3. and now, in order to try whether they would ſtand to the covenant, as they had promiſed, he cauſed a proclamation to be made through the whole kingdom, that they ſhould keep this feaſt; which was a commemoration of the greateſt benefit God ever beſtowed upon them, before the promulgation of the law; for it rendered them a free nation. The people were ſeemingly ſo conformable to his orders, that ſince the time of the prophet Samuel, the laſt of their judges, there had never been ſo great a concourſe at any paſſover, nor ſuch a multitude of ſacrifices offered, nor ſuch an exact obſervation of the rites and ceremonies belonging to this great ſolemnity.

Joſiah, after this, cauſed every part of the kingdom to be ſtrictly inſpected, in order to purify it effectually from all thoſe abominations he might have happened to overlook, in his late circuit through it; and in conſequence of this new ſurvey, he expelled all the wizards, inchanters, and ſuch like dealers in dark practices, out of the land. In a word, he was as ſedulous as poſſible to have the people inſtructed in, and kept obedient to, the law of Moſes.

Thus did that pious Monarch endeavour, with the ſincereſt zeal, to reſtore the pure worſhip of God through his dominions, and to refine it from all the dregs of ſuperſtition and idolatry; in hopes, if poſſible, to avert the threatned judgments from the people. But for all this, the Sacred Hiſtorian obſerves, that God's anger againſt them was not abated in the leaſt, ver. 26. and we need not wonder at it. They, indeed, could ſo far comply with their religious ſovereign, as to teſtify an outward zeal for God, and a ſeeming diſlike of Idolatry; but their want of ſincerity, whenever they aſſumed ſuch an external air of ſanctity, was rendered ſufficiently evident, by their propenſity to relapſe into the vileſt abominations, when ever a wicked reign afforded them the leaſt encouragement for that conduct. Theſe involuntary compliances therefore, with the reformation made by Joſiah, could not but render them more odious in the ſight of God, who therefore haſted to take this good prince to himſelf, that his eyes might not behold the calamities that were to fall upon his nation.

Ver. 29. In his days Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up againſt the king of Aſſyria to the river Euphrates: and king Joſiah went againſt him, and he ſlew him at Megiddo, when he had ſeen him.] Nechus, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Pſammitichus, is the Pharaoh-necho mentioned in this verſe. Nechus, the grandfather of this prince, but whether of royal dignity is uncertain, was ſlain by Sabacon the Ethiopian king, who cauſed Bocchoris to periſh in the flames, as has been already obſerved. Pharaoh-necho was a prince of a magnificent and warlike genius, and great both at land and ſea. Joſephus, following Cteſias, ſays, that he made war upon the Medes and Babylonians; who had juſt then diſſolved the Aſſyrian monarchy, and were grown dreadful to the nations far and near, (Antiq. l. 10. c. 6.) But the text before us expreſly declares, that he went out againſt the king of Aſſyria, who was then on the

the river Euphrates. In his march thither, Joſiah, king of Judah, refuſed to let him paſs through Judæa, and drew up an army to prevent his deſign, which was to beſiege Carchemiſh, a city on the Euphrates. Finding, therefore, that Joſiah oppoſed him, he ſent meſſengers to him to remonſtrate, that his arms were not taken up with any injurious intention againſt Joſiah; that the war he was going to engage in, was undertaken by the expreſs command of God; and therefore the king of Judah would do well not to incur the wrath of heaven by withſtanding its decree, 2 Chron. xxxv. 20, 21. But finding that Joſiah gave no ear to this, he reſolved to attack him; and both armies being drawn up in the valley of Megiddo, (or Magdolus, as Herodotus has it, lib. 2.) which valley was in the tribe of Manaſſeh; Joſiah was mortally wounded with an arrow, as he was driving his chariot up and down the ranks; and perceiving his end to be near, he commanded his army to retreat, and Necho held on his march. Joſiah died aſſoon as he arrived at Jeruſalem, in the 39th year of his age, and was greatly lamented by all his good ſubjects; particularly by the prophet Jeremiah, who is thought to have compoſed that moſt noble elegy, known to us by the name of the Lamentations, upon the death of this excellent prince; and wherein he expreſſes the mournful ſtate of the kingdom, with an energy and pathos, which we can better feel than deſcribe. This is the only poetic piece of that nature in Holy Writ, for length and method; and as the ſubject of the whole is mourning, which is always moſt naturally expreſſed when reduced to numbers, ſo here every verſe is a ſentence, which abounds with ſome new, ſtrong, and lively image of the deepeſt grief. There was, indeed, the greateſt cauſe to lament the untimely fall of ſo good a prince, ſince with him expired at once the religion, happineſs, and glory of the nation.

Joſiah was ſucceeded by his ſon Jehoahaz, whom the people placed upon the throne in the 23d year of his age; not in right of ſucceſſion, for he was the youngeſt of Joſiah's ſons, but by downright faction.

It appears by 1 Chron. iii. 15. that Joſiah left four ſons, the youngeſt of whom is there called Shallum, as he likewiſe is by Jeremiah, chap. xxii. 11, 12. but he is the ſame with Jehoahaz. It is likewiſe plain, that he was at leaſt two years younger than his brother Eliakim, who was twenty-five years old when he ſucceeded him, which he did three months after. Archbiſhop Uſher, who thinks the people choſe him in haſte, leſt Pharaoh-necho ſhould ſurprize them without a prince at their head, ſuppoſes that they exchanged his name Shallum, which they thought unfortunate, becauſe the only king of Iſrael of that name had been murdered in the firſt month of his reign; for that of Jehoahaz, which they imagined would be more auſpicious.

This new king began to give early proofs that he deſigned to reign as wickedly as ſome of his predeceſſors had done; but this was ſoon put out of his power: for Pharaoh-necho having overthrown the king of Aſſyria, and took the great city of Carchemiſh, returned, after three months, toward Egypt; and as he drew nigh to Jeruſalem, he heard that Jehoahaz had taken upon him to be king. He thereupon ſent him an order to meet him at Riblah in Syria, where he bound him in chains, and then ſent him away priſoner into Egypt, in the third month of his reign. After which he went to Jeruſalem, and made Eliakim, whoſe name he changed into Jehoiakim, king over Judah, and laid him under the yearly tribute of an hundred talents of ſilver, and one of gold.

Archbiſhop Uſher ſuppoſes this change of names to have been deſigned by the Egyptian king as an acknowledgment that he owed his victory over the Aſſyrians to the God of Iſrael, by whoſe command he had undertaken that war againſt them; Jehoiakim being a kind of abbreviation of Jehovah-jakim, which ſignifies, the God of Iſrael hath, or ſhall make it to proſper. But as it was cuſtomary for conquerors to give new names to thoſe whom they thus brought under tribute, this laſt ſeems as likely to have been the motive of that change.

Jehoahaz died in his captivity in Egypt, and it is not eaſy to gueſs what induced the Egyptian monarch to ſhew ſuch preference to Eliakim, and to treat Jehoahaz with ſo much ſeverity. It can hardly be ſuppoſed that he laid ſo much ſtreſs upon the right of primogeniture, as to puniſh this laſt for having uſurped his brother's crown. Perhaps the Jews have found out the true reaſon of it, from the words of Ezekiel; who repreſents Jehoahaz as a courageous enterprizing youth, under the figure of a young lion ready to launch upon the prey, and concludes with theſe expreſſions: "The nations heard of him, he was taken in "their ſnare, and brought into Egypt, loaden with chains," Ezek. xix. 3, 4.

From this paſſage they conclude, that Jehoahaz, aſſoon as he had procured himſelf to be choſen king, appear'd at the head of an army, with a reſolution to revenge the death of his father, and that he was overpowered by Pharaoh-necho. But there ſeems to be no authority for this laſt ſuppoſition in the Sacred Text.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Jehoiakim, firſt ſubdued by Nebuchadnezzar, then rebelling againſt him, procureth his own ruin. 6 Jehoiachin ſucceedeth him. 7 The king of Egypt is vanquiſhed by the king of Babylon. 8 Jehoiachin his evil reign. 10 Jeruſalem is taken and carried captive into Babylon. 17 Zedekiah is made king, and reigneth ill, unto the utter deſtruction of Judah.

IN his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his ſervant three years: then he turned and rebelled againſt him.

2 And the LORD ſent againſt him bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and ſent them againſt Judah to deſtroy it, according to the word of the LORD, which he ſpake by his ſervants the prophets.

3 Surely at the commandment of the LORD came this upon Judah, to remove them out of his ſight, for the ſins of Manaſſeh, according to all that he did.

4 And alſo for the innocent blood that he ſhed (for he filled Jeruſalem with innocent blood) which the LORD would not pardon.

5 ¶ Now the reſt of the acts of Jehoiakim, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

6 So Jehoiakim ſlept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his ſon reigned in his ſtead.

7 And the king of Egypt came not again any more out of his land: for the king of Babylon had taken from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates, all that pertained to the king of Egypt.

8 ¶ Jehoiachin was eighteen years old when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jeruſalem three months: and his mothers name was Nehuſhta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jeruſalem.

9 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, according to all that his father had done.

10 ¶ A

10 ¶ At that time the ſervants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up againſt Jeruſalem, and the city was beſieged.

11 And Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came againſt the city, and his ſervants did beſiege it.

12 And Jehoiachin king of Judah went out to the king of Babylon, he and his mother, and his ſervants, and his princes, and his officers: and the king of Babylon took him in the eighth year of his reign.

13 And he carried out thence all the treaſures of the houſe of the LORD, and the treaſures of the kings houſe, and cut in pieces all the veſſels of gold which Solomon king of Iſrael had made in the temple of the LORD, as the LORD had ſaid.

14 And he carried away all Jeruſalem, and all the princes, and all the mighty men of valour, even ten thouſand captives, and all the craftſmen, and ſmiths: none remained, ſave the pooreſt ſort of the people of the land.

15 And he carried away Jehoiachin to Babylon, and the kings mother, and the kings wives, and his officers, and the mighty of the land, thoſe carried he into captivity, from Jeruſalem to Babylon.

16 And all the men of might, even ſeven thouſand, and craftſmen, and ſmiths a thouſand, all that were ſtrong and apt for war, even them the king of Babylon brought captive to Babylon.

17 ¶ And the king of Babylon made Mattaniah his fathers brother king in his ſtead, and changed his name to Zedekiah.

18 Zedekiah was twenty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jeruſalem: and his mothers name was Hamutel the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah.

19 And he did that which was evil in the ſight of the LORD, according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

20 For through the anger of the LORD it came to paſs in Jeruſalem and Judah, until he had caſt them out from his preſence, that Zedekiah rebelled againſt the king of Babylon.

Ver. 1. In his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up, and Jehoiakim became his ſervant three years: then he turned, and rebelled againſt him.] The dethronement and captivity of Jehoahaz did not terrify Jehoiakim from treading in the ſteps of that unhappy brother; and the people were as little intimidated from conforming to his iniquitous conduct. Nor were idolatry, and contempt of God's worſhip, the only crimes with which the reign of Jehoiakim is branded; for he added to them the moſt horrid cruelties and tyrannies, rapines and bloodſhed; building and adorning the moſt ſumptuous palaces by violence and oppreſſion; perverting juſtice, inventing crimes againſt the innocent to put them to death, and many more ſuch like impieties, Jeremiah xxii. beſide his being dead to the admonitions of many prophets. For theſe crimes Jeremiah pronounced at laſt this dreadful ſentence againſt him; That he ſhould be given up into the hands of his moſt dreaded enemy, Nebuchadnezzar; that he ſhould die unpitied and unlamented; that he ſhould have the Sepulture of an aſs, and that his carcaſe ſhould rot upon the ground, Jeremiah xxii. 18, 19. By this time another prediction of that prophet had been fulfilled, which ought to have added weight to the reſt, and opened the eyes of the infatuated prince to his own imminent danger. Jeremiah had ſometime before, caution'd him againſt relying on the king of Egypt, who had ſtill a large body of forces at Carchemiſh, ſince thoſe would be totally overthrown by the more ſucceſsful arms of the young Nebuchadnezzer, the prince pointed out by providence to ſubdue, among many other nations, that rebellious one of the Jews. This happened accordingly in the fourth year of Jehoiakim's reign, when that young Babylonian conqueror having been aſſociated into the empire with his father, and ſent againſt the king of Egypt, gave his troops an entire defeat at Carchemiſh, took the place, put the whole garriſon to the ſword, and beat back the forces that came to its aſſiſtance.

This victory proved the unhappy prelude to Judah's misfortunes; the conqueror marched directly againſt Jeruſalem and took it; riſled the temple of its moſt precious furniture, and the royal palace of its moſt promiſing and beautiful young princes, to be made eunuchs in his own court according to Iſaiah's propheſy to Hezekiah. This fatal event Uſher proves to have happened in the ninth month, from the anniverſary faſt which the Jews have kept ever ſince to commemorate that calamity: and this is the more worth obſerving, becauſe the ſeventy years captivity, foretold by Jeremiah, muſt be computed from this epocha.

Nebuchadnezzer likewiſe deprived Jeruſalem of all its choiceſt youths, whether for blood, learning, wit, or beauty, and ſent them to Babylon; among theſe laſt were Daniel and his three companions. Jehoiakim was put in bonds, and ſent away with the reſt, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6. but upon his ſubmiſſion, and promiſe of paying a yearly tribute to him, the king of Babylon changed his mind, and reſtored him to his kingdom. But whilſt Nebuchadnezzar was engaged in his other conqueſts, Jehoiakim found means to rebel againſt him, after a three years ſubjection, and diſcontinued the payment of the tribute for about three years more. His rebellion coſt him dear, for the Babylonian prince, exaſperated againſt him, ſent an army into Judæa, conſiſting of Syrians, Chaldæans, Ammonites, and Moabites, who waſted the whole kingdom, carried away a great number of priſoners, among whom was the prophet Ezekiel, according to Joſephus [Antiq. l. x. c. 8.] but it is more likely that he continued at Jeruſalem till the next reign. Jehoiakim was likewiſe taken by the Chaldeans, and died as they led him out of Jeruſalem; and according to the prediction of Jeremiah he had the ſepulture of an aſs, that is, he lay upon the ground unburied. Abarbinel thinks he died in the way to Babylon; and that his body was left in the highway, without any care taken to interr it; ſo that it was expoſed to the ſun by day, and to the froſt by night.

It is ſaid in 2 Chron. xxxvi. 8. that the reſt of the acts and abominations of this wretched prince, were recorded in the book of the kings of Iſrael and Judah. Theſe abominations may be reaſonably ſuppoſed to have been his idolatries, murders, oppreſſions, and rebellion; but the Targum mentions his having the image of Baal upon his forehead. Others ſay, that he had ſeveral charms and ſtigmata found upon his body, which proved him to have been a practitioner of infernal arts.

He was ſucceeded by his ſon Jehoiachin, called alſo Jechoniah, and, in contempt, Coniah, Jerem. xxii. 24. He was then but eighteen years of age; but tho' the text has not declared whether he aſſumed the crown, contrary to the will of Nebuchadnezzar, it aſſures us that he was altogether as wicked as his father: and the king of Babylon came up againſt him before he had reigned three months. Jehoiachin went out to him in a ſubmiſſive manner, attended by his mother and his whole court, but they found him inexorable, and were all ſent captives into Babylon, where they died, according to the prediction of Jeremiah, already mentioned. The temple, palace, treaſury, and the whole city, were a ſecond time ranſacked and ſtript of all that was valuable in them: even many precious ornaments and utenſils of the temple which had been preſerved ever ſince the time of Solomon, became a prey to the conqueror, who likewiſe tranſported 10,000 men famed either for their valour or wiſdom, or diſtinguiſhed by the rank they bore, beſide all the beſt artificers. In a word, he left few behind beſide the meaneſt of the people, to cultivate the land. Among his captives of note, was the famous Mordecai, and, as is moſt generally believed, the prophet Ezekiel.

Nebuchadnezzar, after this, placed Mattaniah, who was the ſon of Joſiah, and uncle to the unhappy Jehoiachin, upon the throne, and changed his name to that of Zedekiah, which ſignifies, the Juſtice of God, and ſeems to have been given him, in order to put him in mind of the juſt judgment of God, which would fall upon him if he broke the oath of fidelity which he took to the king of Babylon.

Zedekiah began to reign in the twenty-firſt year of his age, and proved as impious as any of his predeceſſors. Inſtead of regarding the admonitions of Jeremiah, he impriſoned that prophet, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 12, Jerem. xxxiii. 1, 2. and his ſervants and the people of the land were as impious as himſelf, Jerem. xxxvii. 2. The Sacred Hiſtorian adds, that, "through the anger of the Lord it came to paſs in "Jeruſalem and Judah, until he had caſt them out of his "preſence, that Zedekiah rebelled againſt the king of "Babylon," ver. 20. God was ſo highly diſpleaſed with this wicked people, that he permitted Zedekiah to break his oath of fidelity to Nebuchadnezzar, and to rebel againſt him, forgetting for what cauſe his name had been changed by that monarch. He probably was perſuaded to this revolt, by the ambaſſadors which the kings of Edom, Moab, Ammon, Tyre, and Sidon ſent to him, to ſollicit him to throw off the yoke of the king of Babylon, Jerem. xxvii. 2, 3, 4, &c. which was the greater crime, becauſe he had already ſworn by the awful Majeſty of Heaven to be true to that monarch. The king of Egypt might likewiſe promiſe to aſſiſt him, Ezek. xvii. 16. And Hananiah, a falſe prophet, aſſured him God would in two years break the yoke of the king of Babylon, and bring back all the veſſels of the houſe of God, together with Jehoiachin and the other captives, Jerem. xxviii. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. It had been made evident that Hananiah had perſuaded them to truſt in a lye, for Jeremiah foretold that this falſe prophet ſhould die that very year, which accordingly fell out, Jerem. xxviii. 15, 16, 17. But they ſtill perſiſted in their vain hopes, and moſt of all deceived themſelves with proud conceits that they were the true ſeed of Abraham, who had a right to the land, Ezek. xxxiii. 24.

CHAP. XXV.

1 Jeruſalem is beſieged. 4 Zedekiah taken, his ſons ſlain, his eyes put out. 8 Nebuzar-adan defaceth the city, carrieth the remnant, except a few poor labourers, into captivity. 13 Spoileth and carrieth away the treaſures. 18 The nobles are ſlain at Riblah. 22 Gedaliah, who was ſet over them that remained, being ſlain, the reſt flee into Egypt. 27 Evil-merodach advanceth Jehoiachin in his court.

AND it came to paſs in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his hoſt, againſt Jeruſalem, and pitched againſt it, and they built forts againſt it round about.

2 And the city was beſieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

3 And on the ninth day of the fourth month, the famine prevailed in the city, and there was no bread for the people of the land.

4 ¶ And the city was broken up, and all the men of war fled by night, by the way of the gate, between two walls, which is by the kings garden (now the Chaldees were againſt the city round about) and the king went the way toward the plain.

5 And the army of the Chaldees purſued after the king, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho: and all his army were ſcattered from him.

6 So they took the king, and brought him up to the king of Babylon, to Riblah, and they gave judgment upon him.

7 And they ſlew the ſons of Zedekiah before his eyes, and put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and bound him with fetters of braſs, and carried him to Babylon.

8 ¶ And in the fifth month, on the ſeventh day of the month (which is the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon) came Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard, a ſervant of the king of Babylon, unto Jeruſalem:

9 And he burnt the houſe of the LORD, and the kings houſe, and all the houſes of Jeruſalem, and every great mans houſe burnt he with fire.

10 And all the army of the Chaldees that were with the captain of the guard, brake down the walls of Jeruſalem round about.

11 Now the reſt of the people that were left in the city, and the fugitives that fell away to the king of Babylon, with the remnant of the multitude, did Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carry away.

12 But the captain of the guard left of the poor of the land, to be vine-dreſſers, and husbandmen.

13 And the pillars of braſs that were in the houſe of the LORD, and the baſes, and the braſen ſea that was in the houſe of the LORD, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the braſs of them to Babylon.

14 And the pots, and the ſhovels, and the ſnuffers, and the ſpoons, and all the veſſels of braſs wherewith they miniſtred, took they away.

15 And the fire-pans, and the bowls, and ſuch things as were of gold, in gold, and of ſilver, in ſilver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one ſea, and the baſes which Solomon had made for the houſe of the LORD, the braſs of all theſe veſſels was without weight.

17 The height of the one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapiter upon it was braſs: and the height of the chapiter three cubits: and the wreathen-work, and pomegranates upon the chapiter round about, all of braſs: and like unto theſe had the ſecond pillar with wreathen-work.

18 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief prieſt, and Zephaniah the ſecond prieſt, and the three keepers of the door.

19 And out of the city he took an officer, that was ſet over the men of war, and five men of them that were in the kings preſence, which were found in the city, and the principle ſcribe of the hoſt, which muſtered the people of the land, and threeſcore men of the people of the land, that were found in the city:

20 And Nebuzar-adan, captain of the guard took theſe, and brought them to the king of Babylon, to Riblah.

21 And the king of Babylon ſmote them, and ſlew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. So Judah was carried away out of their land.

22 ¶ And as for the people that remained in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made Gedaliah the ſon of Ahikam, the ſon of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Iſhmael the ſon of Nethaniah, and Johanan the ſon of Careah, and Seraiah the ſon of Tanhumeth the Netophathite, and Jaazaniah the ſon of a Maachathite, they, and their men.

24 And Gedaliah ſware to them, and to their men, and ſaid unto them, Fear not to be the ſervants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and ſerve the king of Babylon, and it ſhall be well with you.

25 But it came to paſs in the ſeventh month, that Iſhmael the ſon of Nethaniah, the ſon of Eliſhama, of the ſeed royal, came, and ten men with him, and ſmote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And all the people both ſmall and great, and the captains of the armies aroſe, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶ And it came to paſs in the ſeven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the ſeven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach, king of Babylon, in the year that he began to reign, did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of priſon.

28 And he ſpake kindly to him, and ſet his throne above the throne of the kings, that were with him in Babylon.

29 And changed his priſon-garments: and he did eat bread continually before him all the days of his life.

30 And his allowance was a continual allowance given him of the king, a daily rate for every day, all the days of his life.

Ver. 1. And it came to paſs in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his hoſt againſt Jeruſalem, and pitched againſt it, and they built forts againſt it round about.] The infatuated king was at length perſuaded, by his falſe prophets, to ſhake off the Babylonian yoke, and that raſh enterpriſe compleated both his own and his kingdom's ruin, and haſtened the total deſtruction both of him, the temple, and city. He was then in the ninth year of his reign, when Nebuchadnezzar came with a powerful army, waſted the whole country, ſeized upon his fortreſſes, and at length laid cloſe ſiege to Jeruſalem before Zedekiah could make any proviſion, either for his own defence or eſcape. It was then that Jeremiah was commanded by God to aſſure the king, that the city and temple would certainly be deſtroyed, and himſelf and all his ſubjects carried into captivity. Ezekiel likewiſe propheſied much to the ſame effect with Jeremiah, only with this ſeeming difference, that he ſaid the king ſhould never ſee Babylon, whereas Jeremiah expreſsly declared, that he ſhould be carried thither priſoner, and there end his days. This ſeeming contradiction, Joſephus tells us, ſtaggered the king's faith, and made him give leſs heed to thoſe two prophets; but the difficulty was rather how to reconcile Ezekiel to himſelf, for he adds, that the king ſhould die at Babylon, though he did not ſee it, Ezek. xii. 13. However Nebuchadnezzar found out the way of making thoſe two parts of Ezekiel's prediction conſiſtent with each other, by putting out the eyes of the unfortunate Zedekiah.

Soon after Nebuchadnezzar had formed the ſiege of Jeruſalem, Apries king of Egypt, and the grandſon of Pharaoh-necho, advanced with an army againſt the Babylonians, Jerem. xxxvii. 5. This prince is the Pharaoh-hophra of Scripture. In the firſt year of his reign he received ambaſſadors from Zedekiah king of Judah, and promiſed to aſſiſt him againſt the king of Babylon, Ezek. xvii. 15. About two years afterward he marched out of Egypt with a ſeeming intention to relieve Jeruſalem, then cloſely beſieged by Nebuchadnezzar; who no ſooner heard of his motions than he raiſed the ſiege, and reſolved to meet Apries half way, Jerem. xxxvii. 5. This he accordingly did, but the Egyptians, afraid of hazarding a battle, retreated as faſt as the Babylonians approached, and ſo continued tinued till they had fallen back into their own country, Jerem. xxxvii. 7. leaving the Jews to the mercileſs rage of their enemy, in contempt of the moſt ſolemn engagements. And for this breach of faith it was that Ezekiel denounced the heavy doom againſt them, that they ſhould be confounded and deſolate for the ſpace of forty years; and that afterward they ſhould degenerate to ſo baſe a degree, as not to have it in their power ever to ſet up a king of their own for the time to come, Ezek. xxix, xxx. all which was accordingly accompliſhed.

The Jews were not a little elated when they heard that the king of Egypt was advancing to their relief, but Zedekiah, who was not then ſo ſanguine as his ſubjects, ſent to Jeremiah to offer up his prayers to God for him and the nation; but was anſwered that the Chaldeans would renew the ſiege with freſh vigour, and that his Egyptian allies would leave him to their mercy, and return into their own country, Jerem. xxxvii. 3. 7, 8, &c. Soon after this, the Prophet attempted to make his eſcape, but was ſeized in his flight, and brought before the princes of Judah, who ordered him to be thrown into priſon, Jerem. xxxvii. 12, &c.

In the mean time Nebuchadnezzar returned to the ſiege, and carried it on ſo vigorouſly, that the inhabitants were reduced to the greateſt extremities for want of proviſions, and found it impoſſible to hold out any longer. During this laſt ſiege, the king ſent often to Jeremiah, in hopes of receiving at length ſome comfortable news; but neither the reſentment of that prince, nor the ſeverities he cauſed the Prophet to ſuffer during his impriſonment, could extort a better anſwer from him, than that they muſt be all carried away into captivity. Happy had it been for them if they had taken his counſel, and tried to ſoften their conqueror by a timely ſubmiſſion; but inſtead of that proceeding, Zedekiah, to avoid the threatned captivity, endeavoured to make his eſcape by night, attended by his nobles and guards. The Chaldeans, who were ſoon appriſed of his deſign, purſued the king and his company, and brought them back to the exaſperated monarch of Babylon, who glutted his revenge upon the unfortunate king of Judah, with the utmoſt cruelty, by cauſing all his children to be maſſacred in his preſence, and ordering his eyes to be put out immediately after, that no object might for the future obliterate the agonizing idea of that bloody ſcene. This happened toward the end of the eleventh year of his reign; and he was ſoon after ſent to Babylon, loaden with chains, and he ended his unhappy days in a priſon.

In the mean time the Chaldeans enter'd Jeruſalem, and plundered the temple, palaces, and noblemens houſes; ſeizing every where upon the richeſt ſpoil. Nebuzar-adan, who commanded them after the departure of Nebuchadnezzar, cauſed the two brazen columns, that ſtood in the court of the temple, to be broken in pieces, and all the gold, ſilver, and coſtly furniture, to be taken away. Theſe columns were the ſame which Solomon had cauſed to be made by the famous Hiram, and of which we have already given ſome account in the deſcription of the temple. Theſe, together with the ſtately molten ſea, lavers, and many other precious utenſils, tho' all of them maſterpieces in their kind, had hitherto been ſpared by other conquerors, but they now became a prey to the fury or avarice of the Babylonian general, who cauſed them all to be carried away, with a vaſt number of other ſacred utenſils, ſuch as cauldrons, cenſers, tables, tongs, forks, and many others, whether of gold, ſilver, or copper.

Theſe ravages in the temple were accompanied with a general havock in the city; and the third day after Nebuzar-adan had enter'd it, which was the tenth of the fourth month, anſwering to our twenty-ſeventh of Auguſt, and a ſabbath day, he ordered the temple, palace, and the whole city, to be ſet on fire, and burnt to the ground. The walls, towers, and other fortifications, were next ordered to be demoliſhed, and all the Jews, down to the very common people, to be carried away priſoners, except ſome few of the baſer ſort, whom he left to till the land. As for Jeremiah, the king of Babylon had given his general ſuch charge concerning him, that he was well treated, and ſet at liberty, and went and lived with Gedaliah, whom that general left as a kind of governor over the miſerable remnant of the Jews that were ſuffered to continue in the country.

This Gedaliah was the ſon of Ahikan, a perſon in ſuch credit in all the latter reigns, that he had been able to ſcreen Jeremiah in a great meaſure from the reſentment of the king, and the fury of the people. It is very probable therefore, that the prophet, in gratitude to Ahikan, obtained this favour for his ſon from Nebuzar-adan; and this might alſo be his motive to live with Gedaliah in the land of Judah, rather than go to Babylon, when Nebuchadnezzar's general put it to his option, not without ſome conſiderable encouragements to invite him to the latter.

This was the fatal end of the glorious kingdom of Judah, after it had flouriſhed for the ſpace of 408 years from the time when David began his reign over it; 388 years from the revolt of the ten tribes from it, and 134 years from the ſubverſion of the kingdom of Iſrael.

All that remains now to be taken notice of, with relation to the Jews who were left in Canaan, is that treacherous and bloody action which was committed upon Gedaliah the Jewiſh deputy, by one of the princes of Judah.

The name of this prince was Iſhmael, and he had eſcaped the common fate, by taking timely refuge with the king of Ammon. After the departure of Nebuchadnezzar, he obſerved that great numbers of diſperſed Jews flocked to Gedaliah, who afforded them a kind reception, and allowed them plenty of proviſions for their ſubſiſtence, till they could come to till the land; and being moved by envy, and inſtigated by the Ammoniti ſh king, came to him with ten reſolute fellows to Mizpah, with an intention to aſſaſſinate him. Gedaliah was informed of this premeditated conſpiracy againſt him, but, like other good men, who are commonly void of ſuſpicion, becauſe they have no deſign to injure others, he did not believe what was told him, but entertained the traitor with all the engaging tokens of reſpect and friendſhip; and thereby gave the villainous Iſhmael an opportunity of murdering both him, and all the brave Chaldeans he had about him.

This barbarous action made the Jewiſh officers, and the reſt of the people ſo afraid of the reſentment of the Chaldeans, that they began to think of retiring into Egypt for ſafety, contrary to the perſuaſion of Jeremiah, who aſſured them, that if they continued in Judæa, they ſhould be protected from the people they dreaded, but that if they perſiſted in their deſign of going to Egypt, they ſhould all ſhare in the calamities of that periſhing kingdom. This remonſtrance, however, was ſo far from deterring them, who were always inflexable in diſobedience and contradiction, that ſuſpecting him to have been inſtigated by Baruc, rather than inſpired by God, they both ventured to go down into Egypt, and to force Baruc and Jeremiah with them. As ſoon as they arrived at the city of Taphnes, Jeremiah began to foretell the taking of that place, and the deſolation of the Egyptian kingdom by Nebuchadnezzar, Jerem. xi. &c. which accordingly happened ſoon after. What became of Jeremiah is not known; ſome ſuppoſe him to have been ſtoned by his inhuman countrymen, but we cannot diſcover any foundation for ſuch a conjecture.

Ver. 27. And it came to paſs in the ſeven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the ſeven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach, king of Babylon, in the year that he began to reign, did lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of priſon.] We have already endeavoured to fix the true origin of the great empires of Aſſyria and Babylon; an undertaking of that nature being abſolutely neceſſary, in order to illuſtrate the Sacred Hiſtory, and demonſtrate its admirable conformity with thoſe records of pagan antiquity, which have not been adulterated with fabulous relations. We have made it evident in our comment on chap. xv. of this book, ver. 8. That the monarchy of the Aſſyrians owed its foundation to Pul, whoſe ſucceſſors we afterward traced down to Sennacherib. We then proved the Babylonian empire to have been of Aſſyrian extraction, and gave ſufficient reaſons to induce a belief, that Pul, the firſt emperor of Aſſyria, divided his dominions among his ſons at the time of his death, allotting the Aſſyrian branch of his territories to his eldeſt ſon Tiglath-pileſer, and the Babylonian to Nabonaſſar, who was the Ninus of the ancient ancient heathen hiſtorians. We afterward deduced a ſeries of the Babylonian kings, from Nabonaſſar to Merodach-Baladan, who ſent an embaſſy to king Hezekiah; and we ſhall now continue the ſucceſſion of the monarchs of Babylon, from Merodach-Baladan, down to Evil-Merodach, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Nebuchadnezzar the great. Thoſe of our readers, who are deſirous of having a clear conception in what manner the Sacred Hiſtory is connected with the profane, will not think the following particulars unneceſſary, any more than the geographical illuſtrations, which we can venture to ſay are more explicit and copious in this work, than in any other commentary that has yet appeared in the Engliſh language, it having been our conſtant endeavour to form in the minds of our readers, a clear and juſt idea of the Sacred Writings, in the ſeveral branches of hiſtory, chronology, geography, and divinity.

Merodach-Baladan, was ſucceeded in the Babylonian kingdom by Arkianus, who reigned but five years, and after his death there was an inter-regnum of two years. This is diſtinguiſhed as the firſt vacancy in the throne of Babylon, and it might from hence be concluded, that the line of Nabonaſſar became extinct in this laſt king, or that it was ſet aſide; if it be not more rational to ſuppoſe that the kingdom was not hereditary, ſo as to fall of courſe to the eldeſt ſon: There may have been diſputes among the ſons of Arkianus, about the ſucceſſion, or the Aſſyrian monarch, who may have appointed the kings of Babylon, according to his own pleaſure, may not, in this inter-regnum, have determined who ſhould next be king of Babylon. Aſſar-haddon, the ſon of Sennacherib, and the Eſarhaddon of Scripture, was now emperor of Aſſyria, and the Medes had actually revolted five or ſix years before, and he may now have been at a loſs who to ſubſtitute in the throne of Babylon, which may have been filled by a race of indolent princes ever ſince the death of Nabonaſſar, or his wife Semiramis. For while the kings of Nineveh were ſucceſſively warring in the weſt, the kings of Babylon may have degenerated conſiderably, and have ſunk into vice and diſreputation, in conformity to what profane authors relate of the ſucceſſors of Semiramis, and may by their puſillanimous inactivity, have encouraged the Medes to ſhake off the Aſſyrian yoke.

Belibus aſcended the throne upon the cloſe of this inter-reign, and it is probable that his dignity was conferred upon him by Aſſar-haddon. He reigned but three years, and then made room for Apronadius, who after he had enjoyed the ſovereignty ſix years, was ſucceeded by Meſſimordacus, who held the ſceptre but four years, and gave place to a ſecond inter-reign, which laſted full eight years. We may hence conclude, that the kings of Babylon were conſtituted by the Aſſyrian monarch, and appointed by him, as he thought proper, out of the Babylonian family. The ſhortneſs of the four preceding reigns, may perſuade us, that the kings between this inter-regnum and the former, did not ſucceed each other as father and ſon; and the ſame may, indeed, be preſumed of the kings between Nabonaſſar and the firſt vacancy; for they were but a ſhort time upon the throne, and ſeem to have been rather appointed governors for a certain term of years, than kings ſucceeding by hereditary right; nor can it well have been otherwiſe. The elder family at Nineveh muſt, in time, have aſſumed conſiderably over the younger at Babylon, and contracted a jealouſy of its princes; and, in conſequence thereof, impoſed ſuch hardſhips on them, as at laſt provoked them to join with the Medes to deſtroy their Aſſyrian ſuperiors. Thus the fact ſeems to have been.

When the eight years of this ſecond inter-regnum were expired, the Aſſyrian monarch Aſſar-haddon the ſon of Sennacherib poſſeſſed himſelf of the Babylonian kingdom. He is called Aſar-haddon, and Aſordan, by the Septuagint, Aſſaradin in the canon of Ptolemy, Sarchedon by Tobit, chap. i. 21. Sargon by Iſaiah, chap. xx. 1. And the great and noble Aſnappar by Ezra, chap. iv. 10. He may be ſaid to have ſucceeded to the ruins of the Aſſyrian empire founded by Pul, and enlarged by Tiglath-pileſar. Under Sennacherib it fell to decay, either by his imprudence, or ill fortune, or a mixture of both. The Medes taking advantage of his long and diſtant abſence, or perhaps upon the news of the ſudden deſtruction of his army in Judea, revolted, and, it does not appear that they were ever after reduced to the Aſſyrian yoke, though Aſſar-haddon, in the courſe of his reign, ſeems to have been a valorous and fortunate prince; as well as ambitious of ſupporting and enlarging his empire. He was particularly kind to the Jews, who had been ſo cruelly abuſed by his father after his precipitate return to Nineveh. In the beginning of his reign, he ſeems to have continued quiet in his capital, and perhaps had enough to do to ſupport his dignity at home: but after ſome years had elapſed, his kindred race of the Babylonian family either becoming extinct, or ſome other cauſe producing the laſt mentioned inter-regnum in that kingdom, he either by art or violence ſeated himſelf on the throne of Babylon: thereby retrieving the luſtre of the Aſſyrian name, which had been greatly ſullied by the deſection of the Medes.

Grown potent by this union, he proceeded to eſtabliſh his power over the more diſtant parts of his empire, and marched into Syria, and likewiſe againſt the remnant of Iſrael, and the kingdom of Judah. The remnant of Iſrael he tranſplanted, as he may have done by the remnant of Syria, ſo that they now utterly ceaſed to be nations, and in their ſtead he introduced a ſupply of foreigners, Ezra iv. 10. according to the policy of his predeceſſor Shalmaneſer. Having thus quite expunged Iſrael and Syria from the liſt of nations, he proceeded to the reduction of the kingdom of Judah, to the ſtate of dependence it had profeſſed in the perſon of king Ahaz; and took Manaſſeh their king, bound him in chains, and ſent him captive to Babylon, 2 chron. xxxiii. 11.

After a reign of many years, glorious eſpecially in the latter part of it, he died and left a character behind him equal to the rank he had held while living; and therefore we cannot be induced to think that he could poſſibly be the Sardanapalus of Cteſias. He, perhaps, may have been known to the ancient Greeks, by the name of Sardanapalus or Aſſer-haddon-Pul. For Calliſthenes writes, that there were two princes who bore the name of Sardanapalus, the one a bold, the other an effeminate man. (Calliſt. apud Suid. ad vocem Σαρδανάπαλος) Aſſar-haddon therefore muſt have been the great Sardanapalus, who is ſaid to have built Tarſus and Anchiale in one day [Athen. Deipnoſoph. l. 12. p. 529.] The effeminate Sardanapalus we ſhall endeavour to diſcover in the proper place.

Aſſar-haddon was ſucceeded by his ſon Saoſduchinus, or Saoſducheus, concerning whom we have nothing particular, except that he reigned twenty years. Dean Prideaux reckons him to have been the Nebuchadonoſor of the book of Judith; [Connect. of the Old and New Teſt. part. 1. pag. 49.] but that he is therein miſtaken, will be proved immediately.

Saoſduchinus was ſucceeded by his ſon Chyniladan, who is ſuppoſed, and upon good grounds, to have been the Nabuchadonoſor of the book of Judith. In order to prove this, we muſt obſerve that the ſpace of time from the death of Aſſar-haddon, to the firſt year of the reign of Chyniladan, comprehends twenty years; and to the twelfth year of Chyniladan, when he undertook to reduce the Medes, 32 years. Manaſſeh king of Judah, in the 21ſt year of his reign, was taken into captivity by Aſſar-haddon; after which he reigned 34 years. His ſon Ammon reigned after him, over Judah, two years, which being added to the former number make 36 years; when Joſiah, who was then but eight years of age, began to reign. Hence by the canon of Ptolemy, it may appear, that Chyniladan began his reign about the 41ſt year of Manaſſeh; and his war againſt the Medes, in his twelfth year, happened according to the number in the Vulgate, in the 53d year of Manaſſeh. Chyniladan reigned after this ten years, or to the ſixth year of king Joſiah, in whoſe reign it muſt have been, if ever, that Bethulia was beſieged by Holofernes; and here it ſeems to be moſt naturally placed by Sir Iſaac Newton, (Chronol. of Anc. Kingd. amend. p. 290.) It appears by the book of Judith, that the high prieſt had the chief management of the publick affairs of the Jewiſh ſtate, and the king is not once mentioned in all that book: from whence it is natural to conclude, that the expedition of Holofernes againſt Bethulia, was made during the minority of Joſiah: when the conduct of publick affairs may juſtly be ſuppoſed to have been veſted in the high prieſt. As Chyniladan, therefore, lived to the ſixth year of the reign of Joſiah, (in the early part of which, Judæa, according to the book of Judith, muſt have been invaded by Holofernes, it ſeems evident that he alone was the Nebuchadonoſor, mentioned in that book.

This monarch was ſucceeded by a prince called Sarac, whoſe name may have been contracted from Sarchedon, as this was from Aſſar-haddon-pul, or Sardanapalus. (Sir Iſaac Newt. Chron. of Anc. Kingd. amend. p. 295.) Here we ſee then, whence we are to derive the two Sardanapalus's in profane authors; and particularly thoſe in Suidas, (ad vocem Σαρδανάπαλος) diſtinguiſhed, the one as a warrior, the other as an effeminate creature. The great Aſſar-haddon was the former, and this Sarac, who, according to our ſuppoſition, muſt have been the ſecond of the name, was the latter.

Sarac having committed his forces in Chaldæa to the conduct of Nabo-pallaſar, (Polyhiſt. apud Syncell. Chron. p. 210.) that general rebelled againſt him, ſeized on the kingdom of Babylon for himſelf; and in that kingdom, therefore, may be ſaid to have been the immediate ſucceſſor of Chyniladan, or Nabuchadonoſor, as he accordingly ſtands in the canon of Ptolemy. His name makes it evident that he was an Aſſyrian, and derived his origin from Pul and Nabonaſſar his ſon, it partaking equally of both thoſe names: for as Nabonaſſar is plainly compounded of Nebo-addon-aſſur, this man ſeems to have rejected the Addon for Pul, and to have had his name compounded from Nebo-pul-aſſur, which makes it probable that he was lineally deſcended from Pul by Nabonaſſar; and ſo, in all likelihood, claimed a right of inheritance in the kingdom of Babylon, of which his family had been unjuſtly deprived by the elder branch of Aſſyria. He now had a fair opportunity of aſſerting that right, the Aſſyrian affairs being in great confuſion upon the death of Chyniladan; the Medes likewiſe were at open war with the Aſſyrians; and the reſt of the nations were ready to ſhake off the yoke which had been re-impoſed on them by Chyniladan, if they did not really ſhake it off upon the defeat of his army under Holofernes. This ſeizure, therefore, on Babylon, muſt have been ſuch a blow to the Aſſyrian monarchy as it never after could recover. And when the two potent and enterprizing kings of the Medes and of the Babylonians came to unite their forces together, it is no wonder the Aſſyrian, who was deſerted on all hands, could not withſtand ſuch a formidable conjunction, but immediately began to dwindle, till he became quite extinct and obliterated.

The two revolted kingdoms of the Medes and Babylonians conſpired together againſt Sarac, the indolent and unmanly emperor of Aſſyria, and enter'd into alliances with each other; Nabo-pallaſar ſending to Aſtyages the Mede, to demand his daughter Amyite, or Aroite, in marriage for his ſon Nebuchadnezzar. Here we ſee the new prince of Babylon making the moſt effectual court to the king of the Medes, and contracting the moſt intimate alliance with him for their mutual ſupport. Theſe two are therefore the Beleſis and Arbaces of Cteſias, under different names indeed; but more rationally employed in the ſubverſion of the Aſſyrian empire. We ſee them here contracting as conſiderable princes, who could no longer brook ſubjection, and not as two obſcure conſpirators, ſecretly combining together at Nineveh. The families thus united, made war upon Sarac, who, dreading the calamities that were ready to overwhelm him, waited not for the event, but ſet fire to his palace, and willfully periſhed in the flames; from whence it may be concluded, that he was the Sardanapalus talked of by profane hiſtorians. Thus fell the empire of Aſſyria, and the Medes and Babylonians triumphed over its ruins, purſuant to the predictions of the prophet Iſaiah, chap. x. 5. &c. xiv. 25. xxx. 31. xxxi. 8, 9.

The time of this great event may, perhaps, be ſettled with ſome exactneſs. If Chyniladan, or Nebuchadonoſor, died in the ſixth year of Joſiah, it muſt follow, that the ſame Joſiah being ſlain by Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt, when there was a king of Aſſyria ſtill in being, that kingdom continued ſeveral years after the death of Chyniladan; for Joſiah reigned thirty-one years, the laſt of which may coincide with the fourth year of Nabocolaſſar, or Nebuchadnezzar; ſo that his father Nabopolaſſar, who ſeized upon the kingdom of Babylon immediately after the deceaſe of Chyniladan, did not live to ſee the deſtruction of Nineveh, which ſtood ſome years after the combination of the Medes and Babylonians againſt it; becauſe the deſign of thoſe confederate powers was retarded by an irruption of the Scythians [Herod. l. 1. c. 103.] who maintained a dominion over Aſia for the ſpace of 28 years; during which the Medes and Babylonians were ſo far from being in a condition to act againſt the king of Aſſyria, that they muſt have been under conſiderable conſtraint and tribute, as well as the other kings and princes in thoſe parts. The deſtruction therefore of the Aſſyrian kingdom could not be compleated, till the Scythians had been driven out of this part of Aſia, which happened at the expiration of twenty-eight years. The confederate forces of the Medes and Babylonians then proceeded againſt Nineveh, and deſtroyed that auguſt and mighty city, about the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, king of Judah.

Such was the great empire of Aſſyria, ſuch her glory, as to be counted, even by God himſelf, the firſt and ſupreme of nations; and ſuch was her fatal fall. All this is meant of the monarchy founded by Pul, who firſt began to afflict Iſrael and Judah; and whoſe ſucceſſors extended their dominion over all lands, till they were at laſt extinguiſhed in the perſon of Sarac Aſſar-haddon the ſecond, or Sardanapalus: So that Aſſyria being then expunged from the book of nations, and her records long ſince no more, falſhood has been invented and propagated to preſerve the honour, which truth was incapable of rendering to her, and concerning whoſe affairs we ſhould have had nothing genuine to relate, were it not for the ineſtimable aſſiſtance of the Sacred Writings, and the harmonious and noble concurrence of Ptolemy's aſtronomical cannon.

It is ſaid, that Nabopallaſar was in danger of being blaſted in his hopes by an invaſion from Egypt; for that Pharaoh-necho knowing the kingdom of Aſſyria was as good as diſſolved by the combination of the Babylonians with the Medes, and that the confederates themſelves were under reſtraint from the Scythians, thought this a proper opportunity to raiſe himſelf an empire over all the kingdoms and countries on this ſide the Euphrates; and therefore proſecuted his deſign, and even took the great city of Carchemiſh upon the Euphrates. This we are told was the caſe with reſpect to Nabopallaſar, but it is certainly falſe, for he muſt have been dead ſome time before Necho made this invaſion, as appears by the circumſtance of Joſiah's death, who was ſlain at Megiddo, in making head againſt Pharaoh-necho, as he was marching againſt the king of Aſſyria, who can have been no other than Sarac; for as Joſiah reigned full thirty-one years, he muſt, according to the courſe of Scripture, and Ptolemy's canon, have ſurvived Nabopallaſar. It is therefore plain that we cannot rely upon Beroſus, when he informs us, that Nabopallaſar ſent his ſon Nebuchadnezzar to quell the rebellous ſatrapa, or governor of Egypt, as he plainly calls Pharaoh-necho, Beroſ. apud. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 10. c. 11. & contra. Apion. l. 1.) Nor did Nebuchadnezzar conquer Egypt till after the death of Necho, and after he had ſubverted Nineveh, by his valour and good fortune, in conjunction with Cyaxares the Mede, his brother-in-law. There was then no war between Babylon and Egypt during the life of Nabopallaſar, nor was there any ſuch officer as a ſatrapa over Egypt for the Aſſyrians in his time. Egypt had recovered itſelf a conſiderable time before, from the conqueſt made of it by Aſſar-haddon; Judah was likewiſe all this time under her own king Joſiah, and that all the weſtern regions on this ſide of the Euphrates had ſhaken off the Aſſyrian yoke is evident, not only by the hiſtory of Chyniladan, but by the extraordinary trouble the great Nebuchadnezzar afterward had to reduce them to Babylon. We may perceive then that Beroſus in the paſſage before us, confounds the father and ſon together, and that he is too haſty in bringing on the deſtruction of Nineveh; for till that had been effected, there is no ſuppoſing the Babylonians could have pretended to croſs the Euphrates; and that there was a king of Aſſyria ſubſiſting when Joſiah was killed by Necho, we learn from Scripture; and that Joſiah ſurvived Nabopallaſar, we underſtand by comparing the Sacred Records with the canon of Ptolemy. We are certain then of no one particular fact relating to Nabopallaſar, except that he withdrew his obedience from the king of Aſſyria; that he joined with the Mede, in order to put an end to that kingdom, and that he reigned twenty-one years, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Nabocolaſſar.

prince is the great Nebuchadnezzar of Scripture, the Greeks called Nabuchadonosor. His name may be diſcovered to have been Aſſyrian by the termination Aſſur; and we mention that circumſtance only to remind the reader of what has been formerly aſſerted; namely, that the Babylonian monarchy, how much ſoever it may have been diſtinguiſhed from the Aſſyrian, was no more than a continuation of it. And this may be the more pertinently remarked here, as Nebuchadnezzar was not only the firſt emperor at Babylon, properly ſo called; for his father can never be conſidered entirely as ſuch; but as he was alſo the monarch under whom the Babylonian greatneſs arrived at its utmoſt height. as appears by Daniel, who ſumming up the whole of it in his perſon, declares, that the golden head that prince ſaw in his viſion, was meant to ſignify himſelf, Dan. ii. 38.

This mighty prince, the ſeeming darling of heaven, but in reality the inſtrument of God's wrath, to puniſh the wickedneſs of the nations around him, had always his victories and acceſſions of glory preceded by prophecies from the mouth of Jeremiah, or ſome other prophet; nay, plots and ſeditions contriving againſt him were blaſted, while yet in embryo, by typical remonſtrances from men divinely inſpired. So, when the kings of the Moabites, Ammonites, Tyrians, and Sidonians, would have tempted Zedekiah, the thoughtleſs king of Jeruſalem, to riſe againſt the Babylonian monarch; Jeremiah ſent to each of the ambaſſadors in the court of the Jewiſh prince a preſent of yokes and bonds, to be carried to their reſpective maſters, with this declaration, That the Lord of hoſts, the God of the whole earth, had doomed them all to be ſervants to Nebuchadnezzar; that they ſhould all ſerve him, his ſon, and his ſon's ſon; that ſuch as ſhould but offer to reject his yoke, God would puniſh with the ſword, famine and peſtilence, till they were utterly conſumed by the king of Babylon; but that thoſe who quietly ſubmitted their necks, and faithfully obeyed him, ſhould find mercy, and remain in the poſſeſſion of their country: Such was abſolutely to be their fate, if they reſiſted, and ſuch their reward if they behaved ſubmiſſively under their ſubjection.

A more ſublime elevation can no man be ſhewn in than this, which exalts him to the glorious height of being, as it were, God's vicegerent here upon earth. But the particular account of the vaſt conqueſts, ſtupendous buildings, extravagant pride, and ſudden humiliation of this prince ſhall be related at large in our comment upon the book of Daniel.

This mighty monarch was ſucceeded by his ſon Evil-merodach, who is the prince mentioned in the 27th verſe of this chapter, concerning whom, we ſhall only obſerve at preſent, that his imprudent and raſh adminiſtration of affairs during his fathers inſanity of mind, provoked that great prince to ſuch a degree, after he had been reſtored by God to his right underſtanding, that he ordered him to be thrown into priſon. In this confinement he contracted ſuch a friendſhip for the captive king of Judah, that as ſoon he himſelf ſucceeded to the Babylonian throne, upon the death of his father, he took Jehoiachin out of priſon, entertained him like a king ever afterward, and allowed him a very ample penſion for his expences.
